"When you preachers quit riding on

Remembering that God is no respecter of persons, turn to the twenty-sixth chapter of Leviticus. The first three verses teach what is required of us. From there to the fourteenth we have God's promised blessings, conditioned upon complince with his requirements; from the fourteenth to thirty-third verse we ave five dispensations of God's disleasure foretold, conditioned upon ilure to comply with his require-
nts. Study the record, and you feeling no concern or responsibility for its results. This is where the burden of our responsibility lies—in the results of the gospel we preach; for were it not for the results, we need not care how or what we preach.

Others think they have settled the matter by saying, "Revivals come from God in answer to prayer." So does salvation come to the sinner in answer to prayer. This is all true if the same meaning is intended, as when we say, "God gives the Christian planter a successful crop year in answer to prayer." Prayer is one of the main conditions, and so important in revival work that we can not accomplish anything without it. But to say that it is the only condition of a revival is to unjustly criticise a large number of ministers whose prayers go up from our pulpits every Sabbath for a revival. If prayer, however important we all know it to be, were the only condition of saving the world, we should cease collections, call home our missionaries from the foreign fields, and pray salvation down upon the heathen. But "faith without works is dead." God's part is to keep his promises, which he will do in the operation of his Spirit, when the conditions of the Spirit law have been met. The apostle meant a great deal when he wrote to Timothy, "Study to shew thyself needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." How to conduct a successful revival should be studied intelligently and faithfully.

DECLINE OF RELIGION.

"Ye can not serve God and mammon." The spirit of our age and of our land is grossly materialistic. "For a hundred years the energy of this country has been concentrated on producing things, instead of on organizing things as a means of associating men for spiritual education and liberty."

The church is as deep in the worship of the "golden calf" as the world. From one ocean to the other it is most largely in evidence through its activity in collecting funds with which it is striving to incarnate Christ in the brick and stone of great churches, colleges and enterprises, rather than in the lives of men. To-day the church congratulates itself when it has added to its membership the man of wealth and worldly influence; not when a Christly soul who "has power with God" comes into the fold.

Recently I attended an ordination and installation of a young theological student as pastor of a thriving congregation. The minister in the chair stated with much compliment the brilliancy of the young man's acquirements in literary and theological knowledge. He was followed by a leading divine in giving the charge of the church to one called to the holy office of a preacher of the gospel. Not once was the candidate's spiritual attainments or his fitness for a spiritual office referred to. My heart was thrilling, "Will no one tell him, 'Speak a gude word for Jesus Christ, lad, when ye stand to preach to his souls?'" During all that, to me, service the only spiritual note sounded was in the closing prayer of the man, who, in his pulpit, has stood bravely for the cross as expression of the law and God in the Church, in the society.

In its teachings the ch[illegible] most engaged, not in preaching a life—the only Life—but in telling what a man should believe. So the pew is reaching out for bread wherever it can find it—for the hungry soul will be fed—and congregations grow smaller and smaller. The pulpit seems to be the last to perceive that the call of God today is that "the divine attributes shall be translated in terms of the growing experiences of the race." It is equally undiscerning of the fact, as Washington Gladden says, that "the tragedy of civilization is blind adherence to old forms that no longer express the life."

Ecclesiasticism unites for the perpetuation of its own powers, and, doing, is often guilty of [illegible] and injustice toward many of the children" of the kingdom ing and opposing matters that are outside the and the "Confession thus outside of eccles[illegible]

THE DIVINE ORDER.

BY HORATIUS BONAR.

'Tis first the true, and then the beautiful;
Not first the beautiful, and then the true;
First the wild wood, with rock and fen and pool;
Then the gay garden, rich in scent and hue.

'Tis first the good, and then the beautiful;
Not first the beautiful, and then the good;
First the rough seed, sown in the rougher soil;
Then the flower blossom or the branching wood.

Not first the glad, and then the sorrowful;
But first the sorrowful, and then the glad;
Tears for a day—for earth of tears is full—
Then we forget that we were ever sad.

Not first the bright, and after that the dark;
But first the dark, and after that the bright;
First the thick cloud, and then the rainbow's arc;
First the dark grave, then resurrection light.

'Tis first the night—stern night of storm and war,
Long night of heavy clouds and veiled skies—
Then the far sparkle of the morning star,
That bids the saints awake, and dawn arise.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

To the President and Members of the Mississippi Conference—

BRETHREN: In giving this, my fifth annual report, to your body it is in many respects to repeat what has been said in former reports, which is to relate some of the many things that God has done for us in the college. It is wonderful what he will do for us if we will only give him an opportunity, which is to give him right of way in all things connected with our affairs. As in previous years, I can say again, it has been the best year of all since our connection with the college. We enrolled last session 361 students, 185 of these being boarders in the college; 242 in music, 47 in elocution, 41 in stenography, typewriting and book-keeping, 22 in dress-making, etc.

This session opened with a still ger increase than ever before; so eo that we found it necessary t another annex large enough dent in order to take care read We now have near- pile nearly 200 board- have expended more nprovement of tc., since our improve- inting of ting all calcimining el, etc., doubling e college water g two new cypress or cold water and one for hot, to be heated from the boiler; the erection of a row of bath-rooms and water fixtures fifty feet long; the putting in of an elevator for lifting trunks, etc.; putting in a new range; the erection of a science lecture room; and other improvements, costing in all more than $2,000. This adds to the value of the property, and yet neither the church nor any individual was called upon for one cent for any of the improvements. We have also established a chair of science and gone to great expense in equipping the science lecture room with modern laboratory ient, physical and chemical us, and geological specimens hing the sciences properly. employed as professor of M. A. Beeson, brother of a specialist in the the newly created We now have the atory work, and we have the eaching the or girls in by few The the ce- equ sist in defraying expenses, and quite a number were awarded free tuition upon recommendation of pastor or presiding elder or some one who was in a position to speak of their worthiness and of their need.

Many others have been assisted in various ways after their arrival, when we found that they would have to leave college unless they could receive some assistance.

We have promised God that no worthy young women should ever be turned out of this college for lack of means so long as we are able to render them the needed relief.

Our aim in the college is to train young women for God and usefulness in his kingdom, and while we can not promise to take all who come without money, yet we have never turned any away after testing and finding her determined to live for God and capable of being efficient in his vineyard. This may not be according to business principles, but it is doing God's work and is being wonderfully honored in every way. We had no canvasser in the field, and yet every room was filled and we have met every financial obligation to the minute, even paying in advance and getting the benefit of all discounts.

The interest on the outstanding obligations against the college has been paid in advance, together with a part of the principal, which is being reduced each year.

The college is kept insured for three years in advance; all teachers and servants' salaries sent to them at the end of each month without their having to ask for it, and no new debts made of any sort.

We have also done the best work, spiritually, we have ever done. Last year there were more than 90 girls who professed salvation during the session, and during the three months of this session already the number of professions is more than eighty, with others being added every week. There has not been a week since school opened but that one, or more, girls have found Christ. One by one the Holy Spirit is reaching them, and we are trusting that ere the session closes there will not be one left unsaved.

We are greatly blessed in securing Miss Elizabeth Streater as teacher Bible, and as superintendent of Home Department, besides being graduate of Scarritt Bible and T ing-school, and has had much rience in religious work in se years of city mission work in Ka City, Chicago, and Louisville, an a great help in the religious trai of the girls. Her Bible class w together with the Bible study by president of the Board of Trus once a week, gives the girls the best of Bible training. Then, w our twenty Bible training classes Christian workers, and the You Woman's Christian Association, girls live in a highly religious atm phere, far above that of the aver college. This is one reason of rapid growth of the institution.

Brethren, only God can give wonderful success that is manifest this college. No mere man can this work. We are running it God, and he honors it. We m make mistakes, as, doubtless, we but somehow God is blessing it using our feeble efforts. Under h we are trying to press the battle the end. Our influence is widenin and our responsibilities are increas ing each year. SOMETHING NEW.

Something new. Yes, after all, there is something new. Solomon, and all the great and small scribblers from his time to this who have reiterated that same Solomonic phrase, "There is nothing new under the sun," to the contrary notwithstanding.

In the first place God's mercy is new, every morning, noon, night and between times. After plodding along quite awhile in the old nineteenth century we are soon to have a new century. Was there ever anything bigger and newer than a new century? Very few of us ever saw the old one come in, and few will live to see the new one grow old.

Even "The Old, Old Story" is ever new, and the millions of redeemed souls are marching on singing as they go the song that David began when he marshaled up the host of Zion with this slogan, "O come and let us sing a new song unto the Lord." And soon the land that sits in darkness and the isles in mid-ocean will join in the melody of this new song until it is reverberated from pole to pole, "Till earth's remotest nation has learned Messiah's name."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

The Executive Committee of the W. H. M. Society of the North Mississippi Conference met at West Point during the session of the Annual Conference in that city. The object of the meeting was to elect representatives to the Missionary Conference to be held in New Orleans in April, 1901. Mrs. Robert Somerville, Conference secretary, is a delegate ex-officio. Mrs. E. W. Foote was elected as her alternate. SOME MEDITATIONS ANENT ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

To the Methodist itinerant preacher the Annnal Conferences a e epochs that mark his ministerial life—snccessive stations of his earthly jonrney.

How the time flies from Conference to Conference! Each Conference bringing with it fresh memorials of the brevity of life, the valne of time and talent, and the transitory natnre of opportanities. In each Conference there is a panorama of a preacher's life—the beginning, the end, and the voyage midway. Here are the yonng preachers coming in full of energy and bright anticipations eager for the battle. Yonder are the old soldiers being "laid on the shelf." Here are the active men in the midst of the voyage, grappling with the stern and awfnl realities of trnth against error, heaven against hell. What vicissitndes! What retrospective meditation! What anxions expectancy! What nnexpected problems and issnes of the present! Mistakes and frailties of the past! Forebodings of futnre conflicts with evil! The trne itinerant, having left all, shonld go with God the Holy Ghost. If he does this, he must receive the treatment God receives: 'Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake." (John xxi, 17.) "The world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." (John xvii, 14.)

What spirit-filled, trne itinerant has not been the object of base misrepresentation and calumny, whose motives were impnghed by enemies and misnnderstood by friends?

'Fate ne'or wounds more deep the generous heart
Than when a blockhead's insult points the dart."

The memorial services each Conference solemnly proclaim the fact that the body is gradnally passing over "the river." Every year some itinerant goes np to his last 'Annual Conference." What carefulness this shonld work in ns—yea, what clearing of onrselves! What seasons of Holy Ghost refreshings onr Conferences shonld afford! It is sad that any controversy should mar the heavenly glow that pervades the Conference from its love-feast. It is only a short step from a "brotherly Conference" on important questions of the church to rank parliamentary partisanship, so invidions in its effect—so antagonistic to spiritnal life. "And the servant of the Lord mnst not strive; but be gentle nnto all men, apt to teach, patient." (II. Tim. ii, 24.) The vapid, spiritless manifestations are donbtless dne to a violation of this injnnction. One brother said, "I mnst stay on my knees, or the spirit will leak ont." "Bascom was never heard in deliberative assemblies; his stately craft did not affect the chopping seas of debate."

Brethren, if God permits us all to meet in Conference again, let ns pray that onr assembly may be like that of the apostles: "They were all with one accord in one place. . . . And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii, 1-4).

As a preacher, Bro. Grisham was eminently snccessfnl. Like our Lord, "the common people heard him gladly." He preached the simple, bnt important trnths of the gospel with great power. Christians were edified, and sinners were converted nnder his ministry.

Bro. Grisham was twice married; first to Miss Lncinda Cromwell in 1897; and, next, to Miss Mary Lon Carter in March, 1887. Of these marriages six children were born, all of whom, with the second wife, still survive.

HOW TO DEVELOP SPIRITUALITY IN OUR CHURCHES.

1. Find ont those who have any spiritnality. This will greatly lessen yoar farm, bnt it is of no ase whatever to pull weeds and hoe gronad in which a good seed never germinated. No man will ever hnsk corn in snch a field. All the Christian warkers on earth can not increase the spiritnality of one who does not know that he is alive in Jesns. Yon can make a grave-robbing hyena act like a lamb more easily than you can bnild ap spiritnality in an ansaved soni.

Do man feed diamonds to swine? No, the swina will not eat them, and they would not fatten on them if they did. Let every worker—the pastor, the old, the middle-aged, down to the yonngest member and the little child who has been born again—tnrn all attention to the many or few who give soma credible scriptural avidence that God's life is bon in their hearts.

The pastor must be an example [illegible] believers in all goodness and [illegible] That is, his l[illegible]ath in- and ontwardl[illegible] at his flock, s[illegible] ner of life, and observing that every act is done to the glory of God, and that he is surely and rapidly becoming a holier man, will, by the very heart-hunger which their own experience with Christ has wrought, readily and joyfnlly walk in the clear light of his blessed example.

The pastor must be holy; bnt beyond this the practical need of this time is that he be a good pnblic reader of the Scriptnres. To be able so to read the Bible as to give the sense of it to the people is the greatest personal power any man can have for deepening spiritnality. A good pnblic reader of the Bible will ronse spiritnal thought when elaborate sermons fail.

3. The church, the organized body, must make its covenant respected. To grind an ax it must be held to the stone. Just so the God-ordered way to develop spiritnality is that each church shall reqnire its members to be in constant contact with those principles, privileges, and practices laid down in the covenant from the Scriptnres. In these days it is not thought that a church has any right to require faithfulness to every obligation of the covenant. These are left to the conscience of the individual. Bat that covenant is not an agreement made alone with the individual conscience. It was made with every soul belonging to the church, and that church has authority from its great Head to enforce by entreaty, warning, exhortation, and excinsion every bond of the covenant. Faithfnl nonrishing by communion and fellowship in the Spirit by the body, a pastor always and everywhere exhibiting goodness and faith, and really skillful in reading the Scriptnres—these things, coupled with respect for our covenant, which is secnred and maintained by watchfnl, diligent deacons, full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, are the powerfnl factors Christ never fails to nse in making any people more and more like himself.—Rev. W. T. VanCleave, in The Examiner.

BEGIN TO-DAY.

Is there nothing which Christ, as yonr friend, yonr Lord, yonr Savior, wants yon to do that yon are leaving andone to-day? Do yon donbt one instant, with his high and deep love for yonr sanl, that he wants yon to pray? And do yon pray? Do yon donbt one instant that it is his will that yon should honor and help and bless all men abont you who are his brethren? Are you doing anything like that? Do yon donbt one instant that his will is that you shonld make life serions and lo[illegible] Do yon one instant donbt tha[illegible]on to be pnre in deed and wo[illegible] thonght? And are yon pnre? [illegible]on doabt one instant that his com[illegible]nd is for you openly to own him an[illegible] declare that yon are his servants before all the world? And have yon done it? These are the questions which make the whole matter clear. No, not in qniet lanes, nor in the bright temple conrts, as once he spake, and not from blazing heavens as men sometimes seem to expect—not so does Christ speak to ns. And yet he speaks! I know what he—there is all his glory—he, here in my heart—wants me to do today and I knew that I am not mistaken in my knowledge. It is no gness of mine. It is his voice that tells me.—Phillips Brooks.

AMATEURS AND PROFESSIONALS.

Among sporting men these are very common terms. What is their meaning? The amatenr is ona who plays for the mere enjoyment afforded, and not for pay, while the professional makes it his bnsiness; he earns a living thereby, or at least adds to his income. May not Christians be divided into these two classes? Nay, do they not divide themselves into amatenrs and professionals? The man who, when asked his bnsiness, replied, "My bnsiness is serving the Lord, and I make shoes to pay expenses," was evidantly a "professional" Christian. Here is the broad difference between them. The amatenr makes the service of Christ secondary, sabordinate. He devotes more time and thonght and strength to other pursnits than to pleasing and honoring his divine Master; while the professional exalts the service of Christ to the first place in his thonght and affection. With him his Master is snpreme. Some one says trnly, "An enthusiastic religion is the perfection of common sense." THE NEW CENTURY—OUR OBLIGATIONS.

Much of the talk concerning the new century is of a cold, calculating sort, as if the line dividing the old from the new were visible and tangible, and those crossing over are bound to leave something old behind, carry with them something new. As a matter of fact, the lines between the centuries are no more than the lives between the years. The difference is, men cross the lines between the years every twelve months, and thus measure their lives; while by the century marks they measure the life and progress of the world. And this is true only of civilized nations that have made great progress. Nations that are at a standstill, and have been for a thousand years, make no ado over the dawn of a new century.

The strides made in every department of life in the new world and in the mother country during the hundred years just closing, have been so rapid and so wonderful, and especially during the last third of the century, that men who have witnessed the advance, and acknowledge the mighty hand of God in every movement, really feel that they ought to erect some kind of a monument to mark the day.

The spirit of celebration is active in our own land. All classes are moved—perhaps none more so than the members of the various churches. With scarcely an exception the Protestant denominations are planning largely—some having one purpose in view, some another. Our sister Methodism, North, proposes to raise a thank-offering of twenty millions of dollars, the amount to be divided between many worthy objects. When the number, wealth, and earnestness of that denomination are considered, it is not easy for us to believe that the effort to raise the money will fail. Success will crown their labors if the whole of the first year of the new century is required to raise the amount.

Our church proposes to raise a thank-offering of one million five hundred thousand dollars, and to appropriate the whole sum to the cause of education. And this we will do if God permits. About five-sixths of the amount have been secured in cash and subscriptions. The balance will be raised. At this time Arkansas has the lead, and is likely to hold the position to the end.

But, dear reader, what are your obligations, and how do you propose to meet them? God has given you being in the best age of the world, and a home in the best land on which the sun shines. Your civil liberties are worth much; your religious privileges far more. Your opportunities are numerous and far-reaching. It is your privilege and your duty as well to advance all the material interests of your country, and to throw your influence against any and every foe that dares to retard our civilization or block the progress of the gospel. More than this, it is your duty to contribute a share of your worldly means to sustain benevolent and Christian institutions. This you have been forward to do, as the success of the church and the general benevolences amply testify. But you should do something extra—something to commemorate the fact that you enjoyed the blessings of Providence in the beginning of the twentieth century. Every dollar contributed to our Twentieth Century Thank-offering will go into monuments that will last for ages, and be of untold blessing to future generations. The endowment of our colleges and universities is not only to assure their permanency, but a guarantee to the world that the future fathers and mothers will be worthy of the places they will occupy.

With the resources in hand, held by us as the stewards of the Lord, we can not withhold our offering and be guiltless before God. There is no sentimentality in this, for, even if we did not desire to commemorate the dawn of a new century, our duty to coming generations demands that we sustain our institutions of learning. It is an appeal to pardonable pride to call on every Southern Methodist to honor of our [illegible] sustain the name and ought to be thankful church. We now, and we ought to show live gratitude by responding to this urgent call of the church. Amen!

THE NEW YEAR.

We have just completed another stage of life's journey. Behind us we have left three hundred and sixty-five days more to be numbered with the irrevocable past; before us are three hundred and sixty-five days less of moral life. The sands in life's hour-glass have run much lower; the muffled drum has beaten many thousand beats nearer the last. To-day we occupy a point of observation never hitherto attained or attainable. Standing upon the threshold of a new year, having just bidden adieu to the old, the voice of the season invites us to take a backward and a forward glance.

In the retrospect the first thing that meets the view, looming up prominently and gloriously, is the goodness of God. The goodness of God! How incessantly it has followed us through the ups and downs, the sorrows and joys, the shadows and sunshine, by day and by night, awake and asleep, in sickness and in health, through every moment of every hour of every day of 1900. Our unprofitable lives he has prolonged; our daily wants he has supplied. He has been long-suffering toward our sins and shortcomings. "He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities."

Constituting the dark background which makes his goodness the more conspicuous is our unworthiness. Oh! the carelessness, the thoughtlessness, the ingratitude, the forgetfulness of our Heavenly Father. So many golden hours misspent; so few employed in his service! After enjoying the manifold blessings and privileges of another year, many of us are standing to-day like barren fig trees, with nothing but leaves to offer the Master. No fruit! no fruit!

May the goodness of God awaken in us to-day real sorrow for the past, and lead us to true repentance! But, while we contemplate with shame and regret our mistakes and failures, let us not waste the present in morbid repining, but take courage from the thought that the great future is ours. Out of our failure we may make stepping-stones to heroic deeds. We may still, if we will, achieve glorious success upon the battle-field of life, and win immortal crowns. We can still carve out destinies for ourselves, and build characters that will stand the test of the great day. God can yet make something out of us, if we will not persist in making fools of ourselves.

Let us rise to a higher plane, and see the future with its glorious and eternal possibilities, and with the new year make a new start in the race for glory, honor, and immortality.

THE VALUE OF CHARACTER.

The notion is current that reformation from a life of wicked practices is an easy thing. Men love to believe that they can go to almost any length in sin, and then suddenly repent, be converted, and in a few days or a few weeks become spotless saints. Such a belief discounts character and places a premium upon irreligion. Nobility of character is not a thing of sudden attainment any more than is thorough scholarship. St. Peter's, at Rome, was not built in a day; neither is character the work of a moment. As Froude strikingly says, "You can not dream yourself into a character; you must hammer and forge yourself one." God ever stands ready to receive the repentant sinner, but he does not remove the scars of past sins. Those who live long in unrighteousness, and then reform, find that they have to battle constantly with old habits, and are saddened by the reflection that so many years were spent in the service of Satan. Wherever there has been indulgence in a certain direction, there is need of constant watchfulness, lest former propensities return with redoubled vigor. A bone that has been broken is always liable to fracture at the same place again. Likewise a spiritual break-down is most likely to occur where there was former weakness.

Hezekiah Butterworth has written a beautiful song called, "The Bird with the Broken Wing," which teaches a useful lesson. Although the wing was mended and grew together again, the little bird was never after able to soar so high as before. Well would it be for young people who wish to taste the pleasures of sin [illegible] for a season to reflect that time [illegible] will only make more rugged the road to purity and perfect peace. Happy is he who is troubled by no vain regrets, but whose life has been one of constant obedience and holiness.

No Christian, however, should become discouraged because he can not wipe away the memory of past transgressions, or rid himself entirely of their effects. God has said, "My grace is sufficient for thee," and if we trust in him, no temptation or affliction or past folly need cause us to yield to despair. The present is ours to spend in glorious service, and the future, rich in possibilities, invites us to hope for better things. Nothing is more unwise than to spend valuable time in brooding over the mistakes and follies of the past.

AMONG THE BRETHREN.

The recent session of the North Mississippi Conference, held at West Point, Miss., was presided over by Bishop Hargrove. No Bishop ever gave greater satisfaction in the chair of an Annual Conference. The genial, sunny-faced T. W. Lewis, who last year took the place of our afflicted brother, J. S. Oakley, at the secretary's table, was again elected, and filled the place with ease and dignity. He can hold the position as long as he pleases. The session was as pleasant as any ever held by the body. The weather was perfect, the brethren, preachers and laymen, were in fine health and spirits, and the entertainment all that was expected or could be desired. That is saying a great deal, for much is expected when a Conference meets in North Mississippi. The writer was entertained, in company with his Conference classmate and life-long friend, Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, by the "beloved physician," Dr. J. W. Unger, and his estimable wife. Two preachers never enjoyed themselves better at an Annual Conference.

The Conference convened on Thursday morning, Dec. 6, and adjourned the following Monday afternoon. There was no delay or hitch of any sort, and though the session was one day shorter than usual, under the skillful hand of Bishop Hargrove the business was transacted without hurry. I speak of the business of the open Conference. How it was with the Bishop and presiding elders, I am not so well prepared to say. It was whispered around that the work of adjusting the appointments was not the easiest part of the work. May final results show that the right man fell into the right place. The number of brethren who felt hurt was no larger than usual.

For two years past the brethren have been considering the matter of establishing a paper exclusively for Mississippi. The idea was to publish a paper at one dollar a year. The question was fully considered at this session. The debate was long and animating, but conducted in good spirit. One side was for the new paper, the other for maintaining relations with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, which has been the Conference organ for many years. The outcome of the discussion is fully known to our readers.

A considerable breeze was stirred over a resolution condemning intercollegiate foot-ball, and asking our Methodist institutions to discountenance the practice. The resolution met with strong opposition, but it prevailed by a large majority. It is to be hoped that the resolution, which expressed the sense of the Conference, will have a good effect.

The work of the brethren during the year was greatly blessed. Revivals crowned their efforts, but, owing to the floods of the Spring and early Summer, collections, in some departments, were not as large as heretofore. Whether there was an increase in membership or not was left in some doubt, the statistical secretary stating to the Conference that, counting one way, the figures indicated a slight falling off; counting another way, there was a large increase. Judging by the fact that a majority of the preachers, in making their reports, declared "a net increase," the probability is the latter way, which, the secretary explained is the correct way of determining the strength of the membership. Somebody ought to prepare a blank for making reports that will not create confusion.

Five preachers died during the year: F. A. Whitson, Joseph Johnson, J. W. Bates, C. C. Grisham, and R. C. Calloway. Three of these were on the [illegible] Two were in their prime—strong, good men.

The next session of the Conference will be held in the good town of Winona, and the popular preacher who is to look after the entertainment has promised good things.

Leaving West Point, I went to Brookhaven, the seat of the Mississippi Conference. Here I was on strange soil, never before having been so far South. With few exceptions, the faces I met were strange, but the greeting received was that of a brother beloved and well known. I was one day in advance of the opening of the Conference, and spent but one day of the session with the brethren. That day was full of business outside the Conference room, and I had no opportunity to take notes of the personnel of the Conference, or of the business transacted.

Here, as at West Point, Bishop Hargrove presided. There was haste, but no hurry, the Conference opening on Thursday and closing on Monday. The brethren did not take kindly to the change in opening day, and by resolution requested the next presiding Bishop to begin on Wednesday.

I am unable to give anything like an account of the state of the work in this Conference, not having heard any of the reports from preachers or committees. I am justified, however, in saying, judging from general expressions, that, at least, the usual degree of prosperity has crowned the efforts of the preachers.

My stay at Brookhaven was as pleasant as the weather would allow. It was a time of rain, and all opportunity for social intercourse and cultivation of acquaintances was cut off, save what little could be indulged at the church while the Conference was in session.

From Brookhaven I went to Baton Rouge, where the Louisiana Conference was in session. Here again everything was new and strange. I was acquainted with a few of the brethren, and two or three of them I had served with in other parts of the field. I felt perfectly at home, because I was in a Conference of Methodist preachers. They are the same, I dare say, the world over. Bishop Galloway was at the helm with a steady hand, and everything moved on quietly and pleasantly. I learned but little of the state of the church, as I was with the Conference but a short while.

I was greeted cordially by all, and treated handsomely by the pastor, Rev. E. N. Evans.

This, my first trip to the land of oranges and sugar fields, was exceedingly pleasant, and I owe much for the pleasure to the gentlemanly and liberal-hearted managers of the Illinois Central railroad, whose courtesy to the editorial fraternity is more than polite. It is of great value. And I can say just as much for the officers of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railway. It would be hard to find more accommodating gentlemen, or better equipped and managed roads. To say this much we think is due, and we say it cheerfully.

J. W. B.

CHANGE OF APPOINTMENTS.

With the consent of Bishop Hargrove, the presiding elder, W. S. Lagrone, has made the following changes in the Sardis district, North Mississippi Conference: L. D. Worsham, from Wall Hill to Longtown; T. H. Porter, from Longtown to Enreka, and James Porter, from Enreka to Wall Hill.

The Philippine Commission, the law-making body under authority of the United States for the newly-acquired territory in the far east, has enacted a law by which the number of saloons in Manila will be restricted, and driven entirely from several of the most important streets of the city. This action of the Commission virtually recognizes, as well founded, the complaint of very many respectable people, viz.: that too many American saloons existed in Manila, and that they are distasteful to the better class of the natives who are wholly unacquainted with such institutions. High license will be executed from this time. We wish the Commission had seen the way clear to prohibit the saloon altogether. But "regulation" and "license for revenue" are powerful arguments!

He that will believe only what he can fully comprehend, must have a [illegible]ead, or a very short creed.

LEGISLATION AGAINST HAZING.

The ill treatment received by lower class men at the hands of the higher class men in our schools, especially at the Annapolis Naval Academy and the West Point Military School, is a disgrace to the civilization of the age. It is called "hazing," and may well be classed with the relics of barbarism. The pain sometimes inflicted is scarcely short of the tortures of the Spanish Inquisition. The humiliation experienced is quite as painful to an intelligent and well-bred young man as the physical suffering. Recently a young man died from injuries received in the brutal practice at West Point. A full investigation has been made by two courts of inquiry, one by authority of Congress, the other by the directors of the Military Academy. The testimony of students of all grades has brought to light the fact that hazing is quite common at our leading school for training soldiers. Much of the testimony was anything but complimentary to those who gave it, showing, as it did, that the witnesses were young men of grossly depraved instincts or had been impressed with wrong notions as to the methods of making soldiers. As a rule, the witnesses justified the practice on the ground that it was necessary to teach the fresh cadets the duty of obedience. In other words, fourth class men must be taught to obey first class men. Of course, everyhody knows that unquestioned obedience is the duty of a soldier, but, as Congressman Bailey suggested a few days since, it is not necessary to treat him as a brute, or make a brute of him, in order to learn him the duties of a soldier. Such ideas impressed on a victim will almost certainly lead him to haze others when he comes into power. This evil practice should be stopped, and Congress should lose no time in passing a law with penalty for its violation sufficiently severe to end the brutality at once and forever. If this can not be done, and hazing is essential to a military school, then we do not hesitate to say it would be better for the country to abolish the school. There are enough ways already in vogue for brutalizing our young men. The government can end at least one. Let it put an end to hazing at all schools under its control.

PERSONALS.

Rev. R. W. Bailey, who is in the far West in search of health, we learn is not doing well. We trust a turn for the better may be soon taken, and that he will be fully restored. Bro. Bailey is among our brightest young men.

The last news we had of Rev. J. H. Shumaker, whose illness was noted in these columns a few weeks since, was to the effect that he was getting well as fast as the nature of his disease would allow. We hope he may soon be able to resume his "loved employ." He is an active and faithful pastor.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

ge Preachers in Charge and Their Assistants in the Forest District, Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South.

DEAR BRETHREN: At the beginning of a new Conference year let me call your attention to a few matters.

1. On your first round hold a Church Conference at each appointment, and elect a secretary for the Church Conference, even if you do nothing else. And then be sure to hold a Conference with every society once each quarter.

2. Appoint your class leaders on your first round. The term of office of the class leaders for last year expired with the Annual Conference.

3. See that your Sunday-school nd Epworth Leagues are working together with the church in he great missionary cause, as the ...ference directs shall be done.

4. Begin this year by getting ubscriptions and payment on the onference collections. In taking subscriptions let it be understood that payments are to be ade along through the year, and ot reserved till the last Quarterly Conference, or until the reacher is about to start for the nnual Conference. Get every ember to subscribe and to pay. on't do the work haphazard.

5. Let the elders arrange in the ry beginning of the year for e quarterly administration of e sacrament of the Lord's Supr in every congregation.

6. Let at least one Woman's reign Missionary and one Wo-n's Home Mission Society be ganized in each pastoral charge. t the preacher in charge be an norary of each, and encourage women by his presence, his ks and his prayers. Miss Sal-Smylie, Meridian, Miss., will nish all needful literature for W. F. M., and Mrs. Clara rmon Cope, Paulding, Miss., l furnish the W. H. M. litera-e.

7. Write to Dr. W. R. Lam-n, Nashville, Tenn., and ask for an abundant supply of sionary leaflets, and put them he hands of all our members friends.

Our contributions on all other causes exceed those of last year. Earnest efforts on the part of preachers and officials, and prompt responses on the part of the members generally, will bring up all collections in full and put the Forest district at the front, where by right of numbers and financial ability we belong.

Let our watchword be: "A thousand souls for Christ and our church and all collections in full!" Yours faithfully,

The Sunday-School.

To the Preachers and Laity of the Mississippi Annual Conference—

During the last session of the Mississippi Annual Conference, which met at Brookhaven, I was elected secretary of the Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Board.

A resolution was passed by the Board to the effect that all applications for help must be sent to the secretary. Hence, in order to receive any help from the Sunday-school Board in way of literature, libraries, etc., for needy Sunday-schools, it is necessary that you first write to the secretary and secure a blank application form, which is to be properly filled out and endorsed and returned to the secretary.

The Sunday-school Board through its constituted authorities will then pass at once upon the merit of the application, and if in its judgment your school is entitled to help, the literature, etc., will be immediately granted or forwarded.

Let me urge upon you in advance the necessity of observing Children's Day. It is through this channel only that we derive our revenues. If every pastoral charge this year will observe the day, it will not only benefit the Sunday-school observing it, but it will greatly increase the opportunities of the Board to do good. We are reluctant to consider the application from any Sunday-school for aid, where the pastoral charge fails to observe the day at one place, at least, when possible, within its bounds. The Board does not make this a precedent absolutely, but in considering applications it will inquire into any wilful neglect. We stand willing to help any needy or struggling Sunday-school; but at the same time we desire a judicious appropriation of our means. At the last sitting of the Board it was decided that $12 should be the maximum amount appropriated to anyone library. Any needy school wishing a library will find us ready to duplicate any amount not exceeding twelve dollars. Schools unable to buy lesson literature will be furnished by the Sunday-school Board on application. We still make public the proposition concerning the Children's Visitor and Sunday-school Magazine. We will pay one-half the cost of these papers to any Sunday-school in the Conference. This proposition ought to insure an increased circulation of these valued periodicals.

The next Sunday-school Convention of the Mississippi Conference will meet at McComb City at a time approximating the meeting of the last convention. The exact date will be published later.

Brethren, this convention does not belong simply to the Sunday-school Board, but it belongs to you as well. It is necessary that every member attend in order to add to its success. The Executive Committee are seeing to it that the best possible programme be prepared, in order to give circulation to improved methods of working, and that all may better appreciate the superlative value of the Sunday-school as a place of Christian labor and opportunity. It is imperative that every one placed on programme attend, and essential that each member and delegate be present to lend his voice and counsel. Already the cry is being heard, "On to McComb City."

THE LAND OF THE RISING SUN.

TOPIC FOR MAP TALK JANUARY 20, 1901.

The first missionary day for the Sunday-school in the new year can be made very attractive with a little effort and study. Select two stirring missionary songs, and have a short prayer for the children in Japan and the workers there. If not available, make out of colored bunting a Japanese flag, and collect any curios from that country to be explained to the children. Have upon the blackboard or a large sheet of paper an enlarged map of Japan, and use it during the map talk.

"Japan and Its Regeneration," by Cary, the text-book in the League Reading Course, has a good map and an interesting chapter on the "Land of the Rising Sun." "The Gist of Japan," by Peery, and "Japan: The Country, Court, and People," by Newton, will give sufficient data for an instructive talk. Emphasize some such important characteristics as these given below:

LOCATION.

Japan is an empire of islands, twenty-five hundred miles long and one hundred miles in average width, lying off the northeastern coast of Asia. If placed along the Atlantic coast of the United States, it would extend from Key West, Fla., to the island of Newfoundland. There are four main or large islands, and over two thousand small ones like a mighty ladder of land in the ocean.

CLIMATE.

Being so long, Japan has all the varieties of climate we would find in going from Florida to Maine; but, being so surrounded by water, its atmosphere is very damp, making the Summers sultry and oppressive, and the Winters penetrating and raw.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

Japan is a mass of mountains, with a few plains on the coast and river mouths. The mountains are mostly of volcanic origin, and there has been great destruction to life and property from sudden volcanic eruptions or the severe earthquakes that frequently occur. Mount Fugi is 12 360 feet high, and the pride of Japanese people and art. The rivers are necessarily short, and often flood and ruin the country after a heavy rain.

CITIES.

The chief cities are: Kioto, the old capital and the religious center of the kingdom; Tokyo, the present capital and largest city, with a population of 1,250,000. It is the educational center of Japan. Yokohama and Osaka are the commercial and social centers of foreign trade. (Point out a few others on the map.)

PEOPLE.

If time permits, a few young people could give two or three minute talks on the people of Japan—the types in the upper and lower classes; their dispositions and characteristics, customs and etiquette; the position of women, etc. Show how the geographical position is greatly in favor of Japan for a world-wide commerce, and for broadening and elevating her people through easy contact with the advanced nations of the world, and how much the Christianization of Japan would mean for the evangelization of China and Korea.—Children's Visitor.

Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is pleasant to take. Children never object to it. This medicine positively cures cough and cold.

In the whole Dominion of Canada, during the past year, it is said, only seventeen divorces were granted. But when it is considered that during thirty-two years past the average number was slightly less than eight and a half per year, or 271 for the whole period, it will be seen that even seventeen for the last year is a rapid increase over previous years. Almost any court in the United States having jurisdiction, except in one or two States of the Union, can beat the record for all the Canada tribunals. So much the worse for the United States.

RUSTON, LA.

On Dec. 12 we closed the best meeting ever held in Ruston. We kept no count of the conversions; it ran over 150; many of them prominent members of the church. Many others were led into a higher plane of living—more consecrated, more loyal, and better prepared for his service. Bro. Clarence B. Strouse, of Salem, Va., did the preaching, and the Spirit did the work. Our church, now enlarged to seat over 500, could not hold some of the congregations that flocked to hear him. Our pastor is delighted with the meeting and its results.

Our new parsonage—one of the prettiest and largest houses in town—is completed, and occupied by Bro. Singleton. Its cost was $2,000, and it is built on one of the best lots in Ruston.

Bro. Singleton returned from Conference on the eighteenth, and was met and escorted to the parsonage by a large and enthusiastic committee of ladies and gentlemen. We expect a good year.

"TAKE MY LIFE AND LET IT BE."

The origin of this consecration hymn of Miss Havergal is very interesting and helpful. In a letter to a friend, she writes: "Perhaps you will be interested to know the origin of the consecration hymn, 'Take my life.' I went for a little visit of five days. There were ten persons in the house, some unconverted and long-prayed for, some converted, but not rejoicing Christians. He gave me the prayer, 'Lord, give me all in this house!' And he just did. Before I left the house, everyone had got a blessing. The last night of my visit I was too happy to sleep, and passed most of the night in praise and renewal of my own consecration, and these little couplets formed themselves and chimed in my heart, one after another, till they finished with, 'Ever, only, all for Thee.'"—Northwestern Advocate.

FAT FOOD AS A PREVENTIVE OF TUBERCULOSIS.

At the seventeenth annual meeting of the American Climatological Association Dr. A. M. Bell, of Brooklyn, read a paper entitled "Stamina: With Special Reference to the Consnmption of Fat Food for Its Maintenance as a Preventive of Tnbercnlosis." According to The Medical News, Dr. Bell stated it as an axiom that the power of resisting the ordinary exciting canses of illness, including pathogenic microbes, depends npon one's state of health. Feebleness predisposes to disease. As to abstemiousness, one may overeat and yet abstain from some essential food necessary for the maintenance of health. He claimed that, other conditions being equal, tubercnlous diseases are prevalent inversely to the use of fat of some kind as an article of diet. Inability to digest fat food is one of the featnres of the pretubercular stage. Tubercnlons patients are liable to a dyspepsia due to the too exclusive use of farinaceous food. Dr. Bacon advised the fuller use of bntter and bacon. Fat is the chief article of diet in the Arctic regions. The Eskimo, who live on "toodnoo," a kind of bntter made from the separated fat of the reindeer, are nearly exempt from tnberculosis. Fnrthermore, their resistauce to fatigue and their general muscnlar power are very great. Dr. Bell attributes the increase of tnberonlosis among the American Indians to the gradnal increase of farinaceons food as an article of their diet. The Ganchos of the Sonth American pampas and the flesh-eating Mohammedans of India were instanced as examples of powerful development by reason of their liberal diet of animal food. Dr. Bell claimed that meat shonld contain the natural blood of the animal, and should not be allowed to drain away in slaughtering, as is sometimes practiced.

Dnring the anthor's professional career, extending over a period of nearly sixty years, he has rarely known a family or an individual that was brought np on a liberal supply of bntter and bacon to become tnberculons. The "hog and hominy" of the negro dietary in the days of slavery was a safeguard against tubercnlosis; but their food has changed, and consnmption is rife among them. Pork and bacon is not now a favorite or common dish among them. Everybody has learned that cod-liver oil is good for consumptives, but few seem to have learned that food of the same character suitable for the table is preventive of consnmption.—New York Advocate.

DIET IN TYPHOID FEVER.

By reason of its long duration, says an editorial writer in The Journal of the American Medical Association, its pyrexia and the character of its lesions, typhoid fever may be considered a wasting disease, and when death occurs, barring complications, it is most commonly due to asthenia. This result may be due in part to the [illegible] of the diet usually [illegible] this [illegible] the tendency to re- has manifested itself [illegible] various places, would seem [illegible] a natural one. The impairment of appetite, the deficiency in secretion, and the interference with the digestive functions resulting from the pyrexial process, as well as the state of the intestine and the presence of diarrhœa, will, as a rule, contraindicate the administration of solid or semisolid food, or even of liquid food, in large amounts; bnt in not a small number of, and perhaps in most, cases at some stage of the disease these deterring factors are not present, and nnder such circumstances an amplification of the customary diet would seem justified. The dangers to be feared from snch a course of procednre are the induction of diarrhœa, hemorrhage, perforation, or relapse. Extensive observations relating to these points are wanting, bnt the results obtained in a series of 200 cases of typhoid fever in which a more liberal diet was permitted are reported in a recent communication by Marsden in The Lancet. All of the patients received milk only at first, but in mild cases, without contraindication, bread and butter with custard, fish with mashed potatoes, chicken, bread and butter, and finally minced meat were given on snccessive days until convalescence was well established. In severe cases peptonized milk alone or together with meat jnice, etc., was continued into the period of convalescence. The patient's wishes were accepted as a gnide, in so far as they could be determined to be gennine, and in no instance was solid food forced on a patient. No injurious consequences were observed, while recovery appeared to take place rapidly. The risk of snrreptitious feeding with possibly harmful substances was diminished, and the tendency to bolt food without proper mastication was lessened, as was also that to asthenic complications, such as post-typhoid anæmia, gangrene, etc.

NO EXCUSE ALLOWED.

A successful business man told me there were two things he learned when he was eighteen years old which were ever afterward of great use to him, namely: "Never to lose anything and never to forget anything." An old lawyer sent him with an important paper, with certain instructions what to do with it.

"But," inqnired the young man, "suppose that I shonld happen to lose it; what shall I do then?"

"You mnst not lose it," said the lawyer, frowning.

"I don't mean to," said the young man; "but suppose I shonld happen to?

"Bnt I say you must not happen to. I shall make no provision for such an occurrence; yon must not lose it."

This put a new train of thonght into the young man's mind, and he fonnd that if he was determined to do a thing, he could do it. He made such a provision against every contingency that he never lost anything. He fonnd that equally true about forgetting. If a certain matter of importance was to be remembered, he pinned it down on his mind, fastened it there and made it stay. He nsed to say: "When a man tells me that he forgot to do something, I tell him he might as well have said: 'I do not care enongh about your business to take the trouble to think of it again.' I onee had an intelligent young man in my employment who deemed it sufficient exeuse for neglecting an important task to say, 'I forgot.' I told him that would not answer; if he was sufficiently interested he would be careful to remember. It was because he did not care enough that he forgot. I drilled him with this truth. He worked for me three years, and during the last of the three he was utterly changed in this respect. He did not forget a thing. His forgetting, he found, [illegible] Connizzy and careless habit of [illegible]ish he cured."—

THE MAGNET IN THE PILLOW.

As love of luxnry increases, pillows multiply. Tnis fact is full of significance. The time was when women sent gift slippers to their men friends. Nowadays they send embroidered pillows. The cozy corner craze snggested it. Everyone of these pillows contains a magnet, and the appreciative owner of many pillows finds resistance to the magnet all but impossible.

The magnet that is strong in a pillow in the daytime is one of the most repreheusible influences of moderu civilization. That last is a high-sounding statement. But it may be reduced to its lowest terms, and then it only means that laziness is a foe to ambition. Ambitiou is a divine gift. Once plauted in the human breast, the magnets in a thonsand pillows combined can not conqner it.

The pillow of the ambitious man contains no magnet. Snnrise to him is a creator of new duties and new opportunities.

Has your pillow a magnet? Does it lull you to sleep in the cock-crowning hours, hushing the voices of the little birds that are singing praises? Does it smother the alarm clock, and muffle the breakfast bell? If it has this soothing, quieting effect npon you, then there is a dangerous magnet in your pillow. Better no pillow than a pillow with a magnet in it! Try changing your pillow.

Ambition overtook Sloth one day on the road.

"Come, hnrry np," said Ambition; "quicken your step and travel at my pace a little way. It will get your blood to circulating, and do you good."

"I can't walk so fast," said Sloth. "You have nothing to burden you, and I have this heavy bnndle."

"What's in your bundle?" asked Ambition.

"My pillow," said Sloth.—Harvot Holt Cahoon.

THE CLOTHES OF THE MINISTER'S FAMILY.

"A Minister's Wife," writing an "Criticising the Clothes of the Minister's Family," in the Ladies' Home Journal, asks "why the clothing of the minister's wife is of more public consequence than that of the doctor's family? Everybody helps to support the doctor as well as the minister," she contends, "so it scarcely seems possibly that it can be because the parishioners feel that the appearance of poverty on his part reflects upon their generosity. Some one says that it is because the minister and his family seem to be a part of each household in the church, so dear and close is the relationship. Surely then the very closeness of the tie is but another reason why there should be an absence of criticism, and avoidance of hurt on the part of the congregation. Can not the minister's wife be trusted to make the very best possible appearance that her husband's salary will permit her to make? When a woman is expected to mingle on terms of equality with the wealthy as well as the humble she naturally does not want, for her husband's sake as well as her own, to be noticeably badly dressed, any more than she wishes to bring upon herself the charge of extravagance. What she really desires, more than anything else, is to manage so well that she is able to pass nnnoticed, so far as her clothes are concerned."

I find more profit in sermons on either good tempers or good works than in what are only called "Gospel sermons." The term has now become a mere cant word; I wish none of our society would use it. Let but a pert, self-sufficient animal, that hath neither sense nor grace, bawl out something about Christ and his blood, or justification by faith, and his hearers cry out, "What a fine Gospel sermon."—John Wesley in 1778.

Temperance.

THE INFLUENCE OF ALCOHOL ON MUSCULAR WORK.

According to "Food and Cookery," Dr. Destree has made a number of experiments to determine whether more work can be accomplished with alcohol than without it. The results obtained were uniform, and clearly showed that:

1. Alcohol has a favorable effect on the work product, whether the muscle is weary or not.

2. This favorable effect appears almost immediately, bnt is very transitory.

3. Immediately afterward alcohol has a very decided paralyzing effect. Abont half an hour after taking alcohol the muscular power reaches a maximum that subsequent doses increase with difficulty.

4. The paralyzing effect of alcohol outweighs the momentary stimulation, so that the total work product obtained with the nse of alcohol is less than that obtained without it. In other words, alcohol is a deceptive means of dulling the sense of fatigue, but its action is momentary, and in the end injurious, the paralyzing effect upon the nervous system increasing rapidly and with such force that any momentary good effect can not counterbalance it. Similar experiments with tea, coffee, and kola showed that the stimulating effect of these drngs, while less marked than that of alcohol, is continued longer, and is not followed by a paralyzing effect, as is the case with alcohol. —New York Advocate.

Consistent with its policy to constantly improve its service, the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad is now relaying its track between New Orleans and Slidell, a distance of twenty-nine miles, with new steel rails, weighing seventy-five pounds to the yard.

The entire line has been ballasted in the most approved manner from end to end, and, notwithstanding the increased price of steel, two-thirds of the entire mileage has been relaid with 75-pound new steel rails, and the balance of the line will be relaid as rapidly as the material can be procured.

These improvements are not only an indication of the prosperous condition of the property, but an assurance of safety and comfort to travelers.

The entire Queen and Crescent system, of which the New Orleans and Northeastern forms a part, is now a thoroughly up-to-date system of railroads running the very best equipment in the most modern style.

SUMMER.—On Saturday, Dec. 8, at 7.45 o'clock A. M., THOMAS OSCAR SUMMER breathed his last at the home of Mrs. N. C. Blount, in Hattiesburg, Miss. He was the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Summer, and was born in China Grove, Pike county, Miss., Dec. 31, 1869.

Death always brings a touch of sorrow, no matter who the victim; but when he chooses one of nature's noblemen in the flush of manhood, as in this case—one giving such promise of a useful and noble life, with all the prospects of an honorable and successful career before him—it is especially sad. It has been the writer's privilege to know this young man from boyhood, and during these years of acquaintance he has had all opportunity of gaining an insight into the character of the deceased.

"Tom," as he was familiarly called, exhibited, among other traits, an unfailing devotion to his friends, a steadfast fidelity to duty, and an intense affection for his mother. It has been said that the nobility of man's heart and mind, as well as the possibilities of greatness and goodness that lie within him, are measured by the love he bears his mother. If this is true, then Tom was indeed one of nature's noblemen.

About six years ago he was employed by Jno. A. McLeod, at Purvis, Miss., as bookkeeper. By diligent effort and devotion to duty he won the utmost confidence and esteem of his employer. Two years ago he was transferred to Hattiesburg as head bookkeeper for the firm of McLeod & Keasely Co. He remained at this post of duty, to the entire satisfaction of his employers, till stricken with typhoid fever five weeks before his death. Everything that could be done by medical skill, sympathizing friends and anxious loved ones to arrest the ravages of the disease was done, but without avail. He was a member of the Woodmen of the World and of the Knights of Pythias, and was buried by these two orders conjointly. The large delegation sent by different Camps and Lodges of these respective orders, as well as the vast concourses of people who assembled at Hattiesburg Cemetery on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 9, attest the high esteem in which he was held by his friends.

May the God of peace comfort, as he alone can, the bleeding hearts of his loved ones!

H. C. YAWN.

PILCHER.—Mrs. ARMA M. PILCHER, widow of the late Col. Mason Pilcher, died on the nineteenth of November, 1900, in New Orleans, surrounded by loving relatives and friends. She was a North Carolinian by birth, and in life joined the M. E. Church, remaining a meek consistent and devout member during her life, whose influence has been widely felt wherever she was known. She had reached the advanced age of eighty-one years, having spent a long life in the service of her Savior, and rearing her children to follow in his loving footsteps. At present a dark cloud overshadows the homes of those she loved so well, and all would be gloom, but the silvery lining betokens a brightness beyond "that fadeth not away." What we term death is only separation for a little while. She is simply ushered into a new life immortal and eternal, "and beyond the realm of broken ties." To the morning of the resurrection God has promised to raise our bodies from "the empire of death." "This precious truth spans like a celestial rainbow the entrance to the dark valley and shadow of death, and beyond the weary pilgrim catches in the crystal river of life." We specially extend our tenderest sympathies to her surviving children, and pray that God may grant them submission to His holy will.

M. L. L.

WADE.—JOHN C. WADE, of Copiah county, Miss., died on the twenty-sixth day of April, 1900, honored and respected by all who knew him for a long and useful life. He was born in Jones county, in the State of Georgia, on the sixth of July, 1810. When quite young he removed with his father's family to Greenville, Ala. When he reached manhood's estate, at twenty or twenty-one, he removed to Columbia, Miss., on Pearl river. From there he removed to Monticello, Lawrence county, Miss., where he engaged in the mercantile business. About 1840 or 1841 he removed to Copiah county, and settled four miles north of Old Gallatin, and engaged in school teaching. While living here he married Miss Annie Ellis. Ten children were born to them, all of whom are now dead except Dr. Elwin A. Wade. In 1841 he was deputy sheriff of Copiah county under Thomas Holliday, and succeeded him as sheriff of Copiah county in 1845. He held this office for four years, and left it of his own accord, with the highest character for probity and honesty, and for the faithful discharge of his public duties. Purchasing a farm five miles west of the old county site (Gallatin), he spent his life in the quiet and honorable calling of a farmer. Having lost his first wife, he was married, for the second time, to Miss Sallie Wright, of Franklin county, Miss. At one time he was president of the Board of Supervisors of his county, and for a long time continued a member of this Board. Though too far advanced in life to take active part in the Civil War, he gave very liberally of his means, and aided by his counsel and advice the cause of the Confederacy. He was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South. In all the relations of life as citizen, father, husband, friend and neighbor, he bore in each and all the highest character.

C. E. H.

BLOUNT.—Bro. N. C. BLOUNT was the son of William and Mary Blount. He was born in Covington county, Miss., May 3, 1819. He was a man of more than excellent traits of character, and of no unusual degree of firmness, when acting under conscientious convictions. He made a profession of religion and joined the Methodist Church in 1858, in whose communion he lived to the end of his life. On Nov. 8, 1860, he was happily married to Miss Tamer Low, who survives him. Of this union three children were born—two sons and one daughter. Of the children, one the daughter—preceded the father to the other world. In 1884 Bro. Blount removed to Hattiesburg with his family, where he established and conducted a mercantile business with gratifying success.

Bro. Blount was of a quiet disposition by nature; consequently, he never gave any public demonstrations of the hope he had of eternal life; but in his last illness he gave his wife and family the comforting assurance that all was well with him, and that he had no fear of death. He passed calmly away on Feb. 16, 1900, leaving his loved ones with the consoling conviction that he entered into the rest that awaits the people of God. So mote it be.

B. F. JONES.

BAGGETT.—The subject of this sketch, JOHN RANKIN BAGGETT, was born near Burnt Corn, Monroe county, Ala., on May 19, 1826. He removed to Mississippi in 1847, and settled near Ellenburg, where he spent most of his life. He was twice married; the first time to Miss Abigail Harriet McKellar in 1856, who shared the toils and pleasures of life with him till her death, which occurred in 1861. His second marriage was to Mrs. Rebecca Susan Frazier in 1881, with whom he lived in the enjoyment of a harmonious and happy union till his death severed the bonds of their earthly relations on Aug. 10, 1900. He joined the Methodist Church in 1881, and made a public profession of Christ. The kind of life he lived may be learned from a statement he made a short time before he died; that he had nothing to fear as to the future. He removed to Hattiesburg in 1888, where he soon won the confidence and esteem of a large circle of friends, which he retained with an increasing degree to the end. He calmly sleeps in the neighborhood cemetery near his country home, where he awaits the call to a resurrection of life. Peaceful be his rest.

B. F. JONES.

BARNETT.—At a called meeting of the Board of Stewards of the M. E. Church, South, Lake Station, to consider the death of Bro. JOHN T. BARNETT, a member of the Board of Stewards, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, In the providence of God, our worthy brother and fellow-laborer, John T. Barnett, has been called to his reward; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Barnett the church has sustained a serious loss, our Board of Stewards a valuable member, our community a staunch citizen, and the government one of its most valuable and trusted employees.

Resolved, That we are sensible of the fact that mere words will but feebly express the sentiment of our hearts as to the feelings of loneliness and sadness when we regard his vacant chair in our church and community, and realize the impossibility of having it filled.

Resolved, That these proceedings be placed upon our Quarterly Conference Record, and that a copy be furnished the Lake Vidette, New Orleans and Nashville Christian Advocates for publication, and a copy to the family of our deceased brother.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes, Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

The worst storm in twenty years swept the coast nf England and Ireland last week. Many vessels were wrecked some of them being snnk, and many lives were lost. The breakwater at Watchal was demolished and the shipping left unprotected. Two royal naval vessels were among the damaged. The storm was widespread.

The snmmary demand from the British Secretary of State fnr War for the resignation nf General Cnlville, accompanied by the annnnnced resignatinns of several other nfficers nf lower rank, has created a considerable sensatinn in London, and is nnderstood to be the opening indication that the work of army reorganizatinn and reform has commenced.

A PSALM OF GRATITUDE.

BY HENRY VAN DYKE, D. D.

O Thou whose bonndless love bestows
The joy of life, the hope of heaven;
Thou whose unchartered mercy flows
O'er all the blessings Thou hast given;
Thou by whose light alone we see;
Thou by whose truth our souls set free
Are made imperishably strong,
Hear Thou the solemn music of our song.

Grant ne the knowledge that we need
To solve the questions of the mind;
Light Thou our candle while we read,
And keep our hearts from going blind;
Enlarge our vision to behold
The wonders Thou hast wrought of old;
Reveal Thyself in every law,
And gild the towers of truth with holy awe.

Be Thou our strength when war's wild gust
Rages around us, loud and fierce;
Confirm our souls and let our trust
Be like a wall that none can pierce;
Give ne the courage that prevails,
The steady faith that never fails;
Help ne to stand in every fight
Firm as a fortress to defend the right.

O God, make of us what Thou wilt;
Guide Thou the labor of our hand;
Let all our work be surely built
As Thou, the Architect, has planned;
But whatsoe'er Thy power shall make
Of these frail lives, do not forsake
Thy dwelling. Let Thy presence rest
Forever in the temple of our breast.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

The country's advocates of temperance have reason to congratulate themselves on the fact that the offering of intoxicants to New Year callers is now the exception, instead of the rule, as it once was in Washington. This was noticeable at yesterday's receptions. There are still houses at which wine, punch and other intoxicants are offered callers, but they are comparatively few, and yearly growing fewer. This is due largely to the once jeered-at temperance "cranks," although it has been largely aided by public opinion, which no longer regards intemperance as among commonplace faults, but considers it what it is—a disreputable vice, to be frowned upon by respectable persons. If the progress made in the fight against intemperance during the last quarter of the nineteenth century be maintained—and there is no reason to doubt that it will be—before the end of the first quarter of the present century intoxication will be considered a crime to be shunned as much as dishonesty.

The President and Secretary Hay are firm believers in the good faith of the Chinese Government in accepting, subject to negotiation for the modification of some of the terms, the demands of the powers. They are also much pleased with the announcement that the military expeditions against the Chinese, which have been deprecated by this government, and in which no American troops have been allowed to participate since the relief of the foreigners at Pekin, are to be stopped by the powers.

Dr. Wallace Radcliffe, in an informal talk at the "Watch Meeting" in his church, gave his hearers this good advice: "We can not see with our eyes shut. Let us look backward, inward, upward, and forward, and remember that the future has its sorrow and trouble as well as the past. Be honest with yourself. It is possible to see ourselves as others see us. Don't be satisfied to compare yourself with your fellow-man."

Dr. Bittinger delivered an address on "Presidents I Have Known" at the New Year's Eve meeting in the Westminster Presbyterian Church, which, although specially intended for young men, was interesting to all. He said that he had known and shaken hands with eighteen of the twenty-four Presidents the United States has had, but had voted for none of them. He related a number of reminiscences of his personal intercourse with the Presidents, beginning with Andrew Jackson. He gave the religion of the Presidents as follows: One a Liberal, one a member of the Dutch Reformed Church, one a Congregationalist, one a Christian, eight Episcopalians, four Methodists, and eight Presbyterians.

A local paper, in a long article giving the wishes of prominent citizens of Washington as to what the new century may bring forth, quotes Rabbi Louis Stern, of the Eighth Street Hebrew Temple, as having said: "For all practical purposes the Jews have adopted the Christian calendar. But for the celebration of the religious feasts and occasions we use our own time-reckoning, which traditionally goes back to the beginning of the world, which is now 5,661 years. I would like the various creeds to come closer together in the new year, study each other better, so as to know and understand each other more thoroughly. This would do away with a great deal of prejudice which even this day exists, with its harmful consequences;" and Dr. D. J. Stafford, of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church, as having said: "I wish the new age may be an age of progress, civilization, and equal liberty to all mankind. I wish that all men of all races, creeds and conditions may have the blessings and peace of God, and that at the end of the twentieth century Jesus Christ may be better known and better loved."

The Navy Department made public this week a beautiful Christmas greeting to the enlisted men in the navy, written by Miss Helen Miller Gould on behalf of the International Women's Auxiliary of the Young Men's Christian Association, and a letter from Assistant-Secretary Hackett thanking Miss Gould, in the name of the Secretary of the Navy and on behalf "of every sailor who is cheered by the receipt of your beautiful and appropriate letter."

Two beautiful memorial windows have just been dedicated in the Church of the Covenant—one in memory of the late Justice William Strong, of the United States Supreme Court, and one in memory of his wife, Rachel Davies Strong. The first represents Christ and the tribute money, the group consisting of five life-size figures, with this quotation underneath, "Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things which are God's." The memorial to Mrs. Strong presents a single life-size figure, typifying "The Angel of the Annunciation." The congregation had previously put in the south vestibule a bronze memorial tablet to Justice Strong. A memorial window to the late Gardiner Greene Hubbard is in place in the same church, and will be dedicated next Sunday, when the formal dedication of the church, now entirely out of debt, will also take place. The church has been in use since President Harrison's administration, but had been in debt until a few days ago.

LETTER FROM REV. CHAS. F. EVANS, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: First of all, let me congratulate your readers that they have secured so valuable an editor, and one who does not have to prove his wisdom or loyalty or other qualification for his trust. I am sure they will be pleased, and the church will prosper in your diocese. I love the dear old ADVOCATE, and besides having been intimate with every editor but its last, have spent my brain and breath and my digits and legs in every department of its work except the composing-room. I rejoice now in its hopeful outlook.

Silence for some years on political questions entitles me to say a few words in regard to our Kentucky affairs by the way of "clearing out the boilers." After eighteen months of bitter contention, in which personal detraction was more largely indulged than I ever knew, and after the seating of the defeated and flight of the elected governor, matters have quieted down and business is resuming its even tenor, to the great relief of all and the profit of many of our people. Nothing but the wise counsels of a few men, and the general respect for law and peaceful disposition of our people, kept us from actual war in Kentucky; yet some newspaper correspondents have overlooked the noble qualities of our great population to magnify their own purses, save their own party and damn the other, and have given us a most unenviable reputation abroad. I heard a witty speaker describe a concert he attended in Chicago, where the programme announced 'My Old Kentucky Home," with an "obligato" of whisky and pistols. I hope we shall now be able to establish a reputation for better things than a corrupt Legislature, a political judiciary, a whisky ring, and general lawlessness created for us largely by the feeble and partisan newspaper correspondents. There is probably no more quiet and law-abiding people than ours in this Union. Of course, we have feudists in our mountains, political rings and tricksters in our cities, and we have race horses and distilleries in our beautiful Blue Grass section; but every great city can weep for as much political knavery, nearly every mountainous and pine-hill region its feudists, and New Orleans and Vicksburg and Jackson and Shreveport can sell as much whisky, and drink it, too, on occasion, as our beautiful Kentucky.

The appointments of Louisiana Conference this year have greatly interested me. The surprises were many, some remaining and some moving contrary to their history and expectation. Some congregations are making a reputation as well as the preachers, and one as hard to overcome. By the way, Bishops are not altogether idle in the same perilous business. You have lost a noble man and preacher in Pierce's transfer to Texas, and gained one in Moore's transfer from Little Rock Conference. I knew Moore when I was in Arkansas, and he is a strong man, a faithful worker, and greatly beloved. Who knoweth but that J. M. Henry "has come to the kingdom for such a time as this"? I do hope that R. J. Harp will have a restful year at Texas Avenue, though I fear he can take his ease only in his "narrow house" and lonely grave. The church will lose much when he goes "home."

I am somewhat disappointed at the meagerness of Louisiana Conference reports on Twentieth Century Fund. It's little comfort to find so much company. Grand old Centenary needs and deserves the richest beneficence of Louisiana Methodism. There are many difficulties, many memories that ought to be buried with the past century; many inspirations from the unselfish toil of Miller, Adams, Andrews, Hunnicutt, and Carter; and from the heroic labors of Cooper there ought to be a turning of hearts to the children.

May I speak of my own little charge, to provoke unto love and good works? Versailles has an actual membership of only one hundred and fifty, and yet last year she paid all claims in full, paid for a large and fine pipe organ when it was put in, and paid one thousand and seventeen dollars to Twentieth Century Fund, besides what the missionary societies contributed, and yet there is not one rich man or woman in the congregation.

To my old charge at Shreveport I tender my sincerest sympathy for its dreadful bereavements. Claiborne J. Foster and Dr. J. R. Boothe were noble men. A truer, purer, braver man, or one better poised, no church ever had than Foster. Boothe was a genius—genial, whole-souled, tender-hearted, and broken-hearted since his beautiful daughter died. He was a power once, and I hope again before he passed away.

The Literary Department of the Epworth Leagues seems the hardest to realize expectations. Is it for want of literary culture in ministry or laity, or that consecration has not reached on th literary faculty in our church? My own League recently held a Literary Social at the parsonage, which was a decided success. The book discussed was that of Jonah, commonly called his "prophecy," though in the four chapters there are only eight words of prediction, unless his personal history may be considered a Messianic prophecy. Music and recitation were interspersed between grave and thoughtful papers on "The Character of Jonah," "Nineveh as a World Capital," and "Nineveh—Its Religion and Traditions," after which came a paper on "Jonah and the Whale," by the brilliant and witty superintendent of the Sunday-school, W. O. Davis—a lawyer of no mean reputation, though quite a young man.

CHAS. F. EVANS

FORWARD!

No more appropriate and important movement could mark the close of the old and the beginning of the new year than a powerful and widespread revival of spiritual religion. With the close of this year a remarkable century comes to an end. The material progress of this century has been wonderful. The steamship, the steam locomotive, the railroad, the telegraph, the telephone, and many other useful inventions belong to the nineteenth century.

Advancement in education, in civilization, and in commercial activity and prosperity, has been so rapid as to awaken surprise even in the minds of the men who are slow to believe that the world is going forward. The century, after a swift race for the mastery, in which it has distanced all its predecessors, goes out in a blaze of temporal prosperity and worldly glory. Poets are singing the praises of the dying century, and orators are extolling its triumphs.

Is it not a fitting time to kindle anew the fires of spiritual religion? These fires have not gone out, but they do not burn and blaze as we should like to see them. If the religious life and activity of the church should not keep pace with commercial and secular progress, the result will be disastrous. Our prosperity will be a curse instead of a blessing. It is impossible to measure the progress of religion, and to compare it with secular advancement. We can count numbers, but no one can measure or estimate spiritual growth and power.

Certainly there is room for improvement. The religious life of Christian families is not what it should be. Much more time could be devoted profitably to religious meditation, religious worship, and religious work. More time should be given to the means of grace. The Bible and prayer should have more of our time and thought. Members should be added to the churches more rapidly. The standard of practical morals among Christians should be elevated. The influence of the church on the outside world should be more wholesome and more powerful than it is. The church should have a stronger hold on the young than it has. The church should be the salt of the great cities. In many ways our religion comes short. The fault is not in the religion, but in those who profess to feel and appreciate its power.

Signs of preparation for a forward movement are not wanting. Pastors are engaged in preparatory meetings, or planning for special evangelistic services to begin with the dawn of the new year. Let the trumpet-call to prayer and action sound loud and clear. Let Zion's watchmen all awake. Let us not spend time needlessly in talking, planning, and waiting, but begin at once to move. The time is short and the need imperative.

It is a good sign when Christian people see and feel the need of a religious revival. So long, and list content with [illegible] his will be done. Another good sign is an earnest desire for times of refreshing. So long as church members feel no special longing for a work of grace they slumber. It is when they become deeply concerned for a better spiritual condition of the church and for the salvation of souls that the morning of their deliverance draweth nigh. Another good sign is earnest expectation. One of the chief hindrances in the way of the work of the Lord is the absence of holy expectation. We are slow to believe that God is ready to do what he has promised. The average Christian does not expect God to interpose at this time for the overthrow of the enemy. Christians are frightened by the difficulties which stand in the way, overlooking the fact that the chief difficulty is in themselves. Can we not look for great things now?

Methodism is well organized for a forward movement. There is no need to tarry a single day to perfect our organization. Every pastor is now at the head of a body of soldiers of the cross who will follow whithersoever he may lead. There are always some stragglers in every army. Some will not come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, but the rank and file can be relied on. All they need is to be led. Let the leaders feel the responsibility which this emergency brings, and lead on.

Push on for a clear, satisfactory experience of the life of God in the soul. Then go out after those who have wandered from the fold, and bring them back. Then set about securing the salvation of the young. Enter upon a campaign for the conquest of the village, the town, the city.

With much prayer, much love, and firm reliance on the word of the Lord, let all the people of God go forward. Earnest and fervent prayer will be imperatively necessary. Many a revival has occurred without an evangelist, without a protracted meeting, and even without preaching, but a genuine revival of spiritual religion without prayer was never known. It must begin with prayer and be carried forward by prayer. Some can not preach, nor exhort, nor point sinners to the Lamb of God, but all can pray. And one may help more by his prayers than others by great preaching and fine singing.

Strenuous, personal, and united effort will be required. Those who will lead must go where it is neither easy nor pleasant to go, and do what is exceedingly difficult to do. Give up the thought of having an easy and luxurious time, and bend body and soul to hard work. While no human effort alone can bring about a genuine religious revival, still such a movement will not take place without human effort. A religious revival is the work of God, but not the work of God alone. He has done, and is doing, his part. Shall we do ours? The work waits, not on God, but on us. The doors of the new century are swinging wide to receive us. Let the church of God enter amid a blaze of spiritual revival!—New York Advocate.

CHRISTIAN THOUGHT IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

Much that is somewhat general and high-flown has been spoken and written about "The Religion of the Future." Mostly the prognostications were but the projection of the individual's preferences and notions. We can only judge of what the twentieth century will be like, religiously, by trying to grasp the prevailing tendencies of Christian thought in the nineteenth. We will try to summarize tersely, but not exhaustively, some main lines. President Charles F. [illegible] century has written, no one thing has more affected religious thought than the promulgation of the law of evolution. "The great discovery of Charles Darwin," he says, "has caused man to believe that all living things are joined together in origin, progress, and destiny. The law of evolution is the law of the oneness of life. Out of the lower have come the higher orders of being, and out of the higher are to come orders yet higher, in a succession the upper relations of which are now visible only to the eye of faith." Order, symmetry, progress, reasonableness in the universe—hope for the race, corroboration to immortality—come with the teaching of evolution. Piety and Investigation are met together. Religion and Science have kissed each other.

Man have learned to conceive of God, not after the manner of the Deists of the eighteenth century—an absentee God, having wound up Nature and set her going, and thereafter standing somewhat indifferently outside and looking on. He is, to the thought of to-day, the Immanent God, dwelling in his world—not far off from anyone of us—One in whom we live and move and have our being. "Closer is he than breathing and nearer than hands or feet." "He thunder by law, the thunder [illegible] still his voice." Outside of him natural law is but a name and a fiction. He is the essential Cause underlying all secondary causes—the infinite and eternal Energy, by which we are environed, and by which all things move. Thus is he brought very near unto us. We love Nature, because we see him in all her processes. She is the garment of Deity.

He is also pre-eminently the Father. Jesus' word for God has taken on new and deeper significance. Faber's hymns, celebrating his love and tenderness—the "wideness of his mercy"—are very dear to us. We love to read Spurgeon's 'Eternal Goodness." [illegible] terms of partial redemption—theologies like Calvin's—dissolve in the idea of Fatherhood.

During the last half of the century the cry was raised in vain, of "Back to Christ!" Theology has grown Christ-less. Christianity has been set forth as Christ, and he the revelation of the Father. Not by his death alone, but by his life as well, is he [illegible] to be the world's Savior. His personality—all his acts and teachings—together constitute him, in our present view, the Redeemer of the race. Back of all Confessions, Conferences, Synods, Assemblies, Conventions, creeds, ancient popes, bishops, apostles, he is discerned, and his Word is to be our final authority. Henry Ward Beecher's The writings of Bushnell, Munger and Abbott, the preaching of Phillips Brooks, have been epochal. "The Influence of Jesus" and "Imago Christi" are characteristic of the era just closed.

Our theology has become less speculative and metaphysical, and more biblical. This means that the appeal is to life and experience, for the Bible is a record of experiences of men in living rather than theorizing. Methodism laid its finger on the very nerve-center of religion in insisting on an "experience." Doctrine has broken loose from formal, mechanical, forensic governmental artificialities, and become vitalized. It will become more so as the Bible, by means of present investigation continued and enlarged, is better understood, and its human element is brought closer to us.

The ethical in religion has been correspondingly [illegible] the voices Commandments, the Sermon on the [illegible] of [illegible] never had such meaning [illegible] force. The discourses of [illegible] and Watson, the treatises [illegible] sen and Smyth, [illegible] tinctively Christ [illegible] creed must become more and more a [illegible] consciousness. Salvation, and is attested [illegible] Christian Advocate [illegible]

HOME HERE AND HEREAFTER.

BY M. R. JOHNSON.

Home! O by that little word
How the heart is soothed or stirred;
Magical old melody,
Sounding never wearily!

If 'tis thus when we are there,
When our hearts are free from care,
What is it when sad, away,
Can the tongue find words to say!

E'en 'twill in our slumbers creep;
In a dream we cross the street,
Put a hand upon the door,
Pass the well-known threshold o'er -

Then the welcome shout we hear
Of the brother, sister dear;
Then, O heart, no longer roam,
There she sits who makes the home.

Father, mother, hold them fast!
Ah, they're fled - the dream is past;
None save strangers, cold or gay,
Meet thy longing gaze to-day.

Yet, sad heart, thou hast a home,
Though afar thy feet may roam;
Thou art blest - it waits for thee
With its welcome, glad and free.

But the homeless ones! ah, they,
Sad, bewildered, far astray,
Wander as the sailor might
Should his star be lost in night.

Homes may perish, stars may fall,
But undying, over all,
Gleam the many mansions fair,
Home and love and God are there.

THE STORY OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

(Address of Bishop Chas. B. Galloway at Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., at Watch-Night Service.)

"Thou shalt remember all the ways which the Lord thy God hath led thee."

These words, spoken by Moses, God's great law-giver and leader, to his people, Israel, are an exhortation to keep in heart and memory the experiences and lessons of forty eventful years. What marvelous years they were—those years of wandering in the wilderness! The whole nation was on the march—a march to involve the destiny of the world. Every day was crowded with strange incidents, and every night was ontained with a cloud of glory. The exhortation is not to simply remember the different incidents of that strange history, but to keep fresh in mind the method of God's dealing with his people. It is not my purpose to give in detail the history of that strange people, but to use this as suggestive of the glories of this century and the wonderful providence of God in all its duration. The first lesson it teaches is the providence of God in the history of nations. The poet has truly, and with clear insight, said:

"For I doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

First, I call attention to the great religious growth of the nineteenth century. The beginning of this period was characterized by a blatant and widespread infidelity. Voltaire declared that he was living in the twilight of Christianity, and predicted its early and total collapse. The writings of Paine attracted wide attention. Skepticism was the fashion, and a sneer at the Christian religion was more of a generous approbation. But God had decreed that this century was to be a religious century not charged with doubt, but a century of faith; the period that was to witness the most majestic and triumphant achievements of the world's history.

The beginning of the century the population of the world was about 831,000,000. Of these 420,000,000 were heathen, 130,000,000 Mohammedans, 7,000,000 Jews, and 174,000,000 Christians. The Roman Catholics numbered 100,000,000, the Protestants 44,000,000, and the Greek Church 50,000,000. During the century the population of the world has a little more than doubled, as has also the number of heathen. The Mohammedans have only increased 50 per cent., while the Christians have advanced 300 per cent. The Roman Catholics have doubled their membership, while the Greek Church has increased 400 per cent., and the Protestant churches 450 per cent. In the United States only 100 years ago only one in fourteen of the people belonged to the Protestant Churches; now the proportion is one in four. There are 19,000,000 Protestant communicants in the present population of the United States, to say nothing of 10,000,000 Catholics. We have now [illegible] Christians in this country, as against only 365,000 a century ago. There [illegible] churches instead of less than 2,650 sisters, as against 2,65[illegible] While the population of this great country has increased fifteenfold, the church membership has increased nearly eightyfold.

This has also been a century of great missionary advancement. How crude was the conception the church had then of the sublime mission of the world's Redeemer! The story of William Carey and Thomas Coke, the apostles of modern missions, is the history of the attitude of the church toward the Christless millions of the globe. Out of the long sleep of the centuries she awoke to a sense of her mighty responsibilities to those who had never known the gospel; she recognized that her mission was not to hold the fort, but to win the world. At the century's beginning the entire amount contributed by the whole Christian church in America, England and the Continent did not exceed $20,000; but now, according to the figures presented to the recent Ecumenical Conference in New York, the total number of societies engaged in Protestant foreign missions is 449, with an annual income of $19,126,120. There were 15,460 foreign missionary workers, 77,338 native helpers, and 1,317,684 native communicants. These have been won from heathenism to Christianity largely during the latter half of this great missionary century, while many thousand redeemed by grace have gone to swell the innumerable company of the first-born of heaven. The latter years of this century have also witnessed a higher appreciation of woman's services in foreign missions. There are to-day over 4,000 unmarried women connected with the various Protestant missionary societies. With marvelous tact, and with a courage that shames the timidity of strong men, these women have prosecuted their heroic work, and have greatly speeded the triumph of the Christian religion in all foreign lands.

In this connection and at this interesting watch-night service it is eminently proper to refer to the great mercies of God to his own branch of the Christian church during the eventful century passing away. One hundred years ago there were only 60,000 in the United States, while to-day the denomination is about 6,000,000 strong, and her missionaries are doing heroic and apostolic missionary work in almost every land of the globe. The various branches of the great ecclesiastical family number about 8,000,000, with a constituency of about 24,000,000. The little company has become a great army, the cloud no larger than a man's hand has overcast the heavens and rains its life-giving drops upon every land and clime. The doctrines of the church, clearly set forth, have been maintained, according to the Apostle Paul's injunction.

Another fact which is characteristic of the nineteenth century has been the growth of Christian comity and catholicity. The days of ecclesiastical strife have largely passed away, the time of the broader Christian brotherhood and interdenominational comity has gloriously dawned. It has further been a century of philanthropy and moral reform. The doctrine of the brotherhood of man has had a new and purer and deeper meaning; there has been a spread of the great idea of responsibility—a recognition that I am my brother's keeper. The verb "to love" in modern Christianity has an imperative mood. (In this connection Bishop Galloway referred at length to the establishment of orphanages and various eleemosynary institutions.) This century has witnessed a general distribution of the copies of the Holy Scriptures. At the close of the last century Rev. Dr. Lyman, of Hatfield, Mass., suggested the publication of an American edition of the Scriptures. After much discussion it was decided not to attempt it, as it was found there was not enough type in Boston to print so large a book. Now careful estimates place the number of Bibles printed by the seventy-three Bible societies and the private firms during the century at 280,000,000 copies. In 1800 the total number in circulation was less than 5,000,000. It was then translated into only about sixty languages; now in about 400. The century has also been remarkably distinguished for explorations, discoveries and the enlargement of the limits of geography. A hundred years ago nearly three-fourths of the globe was considered unknown; Japan, Corea and China were hermit nations, and all the [illegible] was shut from the investigation of mankind. No white man had dared to venture [illegible] Continent or [illegible] glone. Now a railroad [illegible] central reaches from Cairo to Cape Town, and [illegible] morning we read thrilling cablegrams from South Africa. A hundred years ago there was not a single Christian in the Fiji Islands; now there is not a single heathen.

The century has been pre-eminently distinguished for the growth of the spirit of international arbitration, which has attempted to take the place of a resort to the sword. From 1793 to 1893 there were fifty-eight international arbitrations. The number increases with the age of the century, thus showing a steady increase in the sentiment in its favor.

Bishop Galloway reviewed the territorial growth of the country since the beginning of the century, and showed how its area had constantly and wisely expanded. He spoke of the inheritance we received in this regard from our ancestors and the legacy we will leave to another generation. He dwelt upon the remarkable increase of the English-speaking people during the last century, and showed that they now controlled two-fifths of the total area of the globe. He then touched broadly upon the progress of the century in other nations, particularly England. The growth of journalism to its present proportions and influence, the recent advances in science and the arts were touched upon in his usual happy style, and the speaker concluded his address with an eloquent prophecy of the wonders to be accomplished in the twentieth century.

DR. B. M. PALMER ON THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

A very remarkable service was held in the First Presbyterian Church on New Year's Day. The occasion was in response to a general request upon the part of many persons that Dr. Palmer preach upon the occasion of the opening of the new century. The large church was filled with an audience made up of many different classes and variety of creed. Gentile and Jew, believer and non-believer, united in giving this venerable servant of God an opportunity to preach a great sermon upon a great theme. It is needless to say that the service was fully up to expectation. The text was Psalms ciii, 19: "The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens, and his kingdom ruleth over all." Heb. xii, 28, 29: "Wherefore we, receiving a kingdom which can not be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear. For our God is a consuming fire." We print the following synopsis from the Times-Democrat:

"The history of the world is an organic whole, and all of its parts are connected together by a holy and divine purpose running through from the first to the last, carrying along with it the continuous development of the human race, and terminating, as its definite conclusion, in the establishment of a kingdom which is to endure throughout the ages of a coming eternity — that kingdom which can not be moved, and in which we serve God acceptably with reverence and with godly fear.

"That Canaan of the old, and that Palestine of the new, world's history: a spot of earth which well deserves to be called the central spot, around which the whole history of the earth has revolved; the very line, narrow as it is, which divides the two civilizations of the earth, the Eastern and the Western; the land which gave birth in the fullness of time to that mysterious personage who, whatever may be the diverse opinions of men, stands up, according to the universal acknowledgment of the civilized world, as marking the equatorial line which divides the two vast continents of human history.

"All things from the Creation Day down to the birth of that Babe in Bethlehem, and all the history of the future until that solemn day when the earth shall be wrapped in its winding sheet of flame, and receive its baptism of fire to prepare it for the kingdom of God, forever to remain upon the earth, lead up to him who, there in the middle of human history, on the middle spot of the earth, is the redeemer of a lost and guilty race.

"I charge you to see in this brief connection of marvelous facts the stepping-stones of him who, in his majesty, sits upon the throne of the heavens. The Lord prepares his throne in the heavens, and his kingdom hath ruled over all the past, his own divine purpose being the scarlet thread that runs through the [illegible] web of the race to which we

"In my judgment, the human intellect in that age (the Grecian) reached to its zenith of glory. A race was born on that classic land who have left upon every page of their history the education of the world. With philosophic cast of mind, that ventured upon the great problems of human thought, they struck out the philosophies which should govern the thinking of mankind in all the ages.

"The Almighty who sits upon that throne raised up that people (the Greeks) and gave to them that genius that they should continue that language which he has made the sacred urn in which is treasured the revelation of those vast truths which we to-day, in this our sanctuary of worship, teach our people to learn, to trust, and to love. And then, as though to show that the hand of God is to be seen in all this free action of men, when the Greek language had been wrought up to that high degree of refinement that it was competent to this great task, God locked it up so that it should no longer be in that form the spoken language of his people, but set apart, as he had done before with the equally sacred truths of the Old Testament, to be the two great urns which shall contain the revelation of that life which is renewed solely to live in the world that is now, and the world that is to come. Surely, as I lay these facts before you without the expansion of argument, you can see the hand of God in all these phases of human history.

"All eternity is God's! Why should he measure his age upon the dial-plate of any clock, and why should we undertake to circumscribe his action within the passing hours indicated upon that clock which is hung up against the walls of eternity?

"God who reigns in the heavens is the God of supreme justice, and he has judgments for all who neglect or reject him. . . . In the just judgment of a righteous and holy God the American Indian was swept from the earth, and a great Christian nation rises up at this day to give him the honor which is his due.

"This morning, clouded as it is, shutting out the face of the sun, opens to us another one hundred years—not another twelve months, but another century. Face to face before old Asia stand the allied powers of Europe, all of them combined, in the very capital of the most populous heathen people on the globe, holding China by the throat and dictating the terms by which that immense empire shall hereafter subsist, and in what relation it shall stand to the civilized world. And there is old England, grand in her might because she is grand in her literature and in her religion, in the south of Africa, held at bay month after month by a tribe of people of whom we scarcely heard until they were embarked in this unequal contest.

"Christianity is brought face to face with the largest heathen empire on the globe, and before a heathen religion which, in my judgment, is the most utterly godless of them all, their worship consisting of little more than reverence for their ancestors, and a blind endeavor to avert the terrors of the demons they fear. . . . What is to be the result of this meeting of the two civilizations of mankind? Shall the stronger destroy the weaker and reign supreme, or shall they be strangely united, and through amalgamation bring out a third civilization, having the best qualities of both, and, therefore, superior to both?

"Our mighty civilization has grown strong in its own discoveries; has mastered the great secrets of nature; has ploughed beneath the surface and brought to the light those mines of ore and iron and lead and silver and gold which disturb the repose of avarice and are now shaking the earth to its centre. For what is it but the gold mines in Africa that lies at the heart of the war in the southern part of that country?

"During this century in which science has been gaining its triumphs, there has been, through war, a gradual strengthening of the nations as they have been severally shaken with its storms. This vast continent of ours, shaken to its very centre by a civil war, now reposes more solidly upon its base as the strong and mighty nation into which it has been converted.

"Guilty and sinful as this world is, shaken by wars prompted by human ambition through all the centuries of the past, there is yet to be a period of rest for the agitated and unhappy earth. . . . There will be a time when this earth, which has revolted from the law and authority and government of this King, and which has been stained through all its history with guilt and sin, shall, through that amazing love which can only be found in a Divine Being, be redeemed with all the people that dwell upon it, and his kingdom established here below. The earth redeemed shall stand at the blessed feet of him who came to die so that the dead might live through the power of his name: and he shall come and reign forever!"

THE LIFE TO COME.

Many think it strange that we know so little about another life. But the constitution of our earthly nature is inadequate to bear with advantage any more on this subject than faith may realize from the Word of God. An infant's eyes would be ruined if continuously exposed to the full glare of the sunlight, and the strongest vision would soon be utterly blinded if denied relief from the blaze of noonday glory.

Only Peter, James and John could be trusted with a view of the Transfiguration, and even then they had to be cautioned and commanded by the Savior with reference to what they were privileged to see, lest they should do more harm with it than good. Paul needed to be put under the law of silence in part, and under a life-long trouble of humiliating affliction, lest he should be more damaged than profited by his "visions and revelations of the Lord." And everywhere the intimations are that too close a familiarity with the things of another life, and the experiences of the saints in entering into them, would unfit us for our proper duties in this. Hence the mystery of death, the heavy obscurity which hangs over the abode and condition of the departed, and the rigid divine prohibition of all attempts to lift the veil or to get communications from the spirits of the dead. We may rest assured that if we could be any better off by knowing more than has been revealed, we certainly would have that knowledge. That we have it not is proof that it would not be good for us while yet occupied with our mission and duties in the present life. The all-wise and all-gracious God is to be trusted for this, and it is a part of his goodness to keep us back from seeing and knowing too much of the other world until the time comes for us to quit this earthly life. That will be early enough for us to get the information which our restless thirst would like to have before the time.—Dr. J. A. Seiss.

NOT FOR ME.

To be able to say, "This or that is 'not for me,'" is to have a very calming and sustaining influence operating on the mind. It will make us feel settled. The matter is decided, so far as I am concerned. A calm often follows the settlement of the matter, even though that settlement has not taken exactly the form which we should have chosen. We are something like David—when the child was alive, and there was a possibility of its recovery, he fasted and wept; but when it was dead, he rose up and ate and drank—he accepted the inevitable. While things are in doubt, and we do not know which way they will turn, we are often agitated, unsettled, nothing is accepted—and this can only be met by our putting ourselves into the hands of God, determined each one to accept what is or is not to be for him—"for me," or "not for me."—Rev. P. B. Power.

WON WITH A WORD.

I am sometimes startled at the ease with which a soul can be won. And I am often humiliated when I think of the many times and the many opportunities in my life which I have wasted and not used for the winning of souls to Christ. I want to illustrate the ease with which a soul can be won. Not very long ago, in a strange city, as the hackman got down off his box and opened the door to let me out, I dropped a quarter in his hand, and as I did so I grasped his hand and said to him: "Good night; I hope to meet you again in glory." I had often done that, and I thought nothing of it in this case. I went into the house, met my host, and retired to my room for the night. About midnight my host knocked at my chamber door and said: "Chaplain, that hackman has come back, and he says that he has got to see you to-night. I told him he had better wait until morning, but he said: 'No, sir, I must see him to-night, and I know that he will be willing to see me.'" When the hackman came up, a broad-shouldered, rough-looking man with a great whip in his hand, he stood there in my presence with the tears rolling down his cheeks like rain. Said he: "If I meet you in glory, I have got to turn around. I have come to ask you to pray with me." What a privilege it was to pray with that man! What a privilege to point him to Jesus—and yet I never saw him before in all my life. There are 10,000 men in this country that have not had an invitation to come to God in all their lives.—Bishop McCabe.

MY STRENGTH.

Be our days many, or be they few, from any burden which God may see fit to lay upon us, our life may gain not only contentment, but grandeur and nobleness. My strength during all my life has been precisely this: that I have no choice. During the last thirty-six years God has twelve times changed my home and fifteen times changed my work. I have scarcely done what I myself would have chosen. The support of my life is to know that I am doing what God wishes, and not what I wish myself.

My brethren, the best thing often that could happen to a man is to be thwarted in his favorite hopes. The old song has the hope that in time of old age we may find one face at our fireside whom we loved when we were young; but I would say, far rather than this: God grant that we may find him there in the home of our darkened life. Then all else will seem to us to be but dross. When a man has nothing more to lose; when his hopes are all beyond the grave; when we listen without terror to the ebbings and flowings of the tide of life and the rush of its storms—then, after the night, to us the day will come back, and after the tempest a great calm.

We know that it is God's work, and that God loves us better than we can love ourselves. We knew, then, that all our life is guided by him, so that we find consolation and contentment; and if we have those two things with us—consolation in all sorrows and contentment in any loss—we have the richest blessings which God can give us.—Archdeacon Farrar.

A church and an age that looked upon God as an infinite terror, seated upon the throne of the universe; that contemplated with complacency, if not with satisfaction spiced with pleasure, Dante's heathen hell, and Michael Angelo's monstrous picture, "The Last Judgment," was incapable of tolerance or philanthropy.

We need not go so far back as Savonarola's Bonfire Carnival. In later times pious men, determining how God does by their notion of what they would do in his place, have excommunicated young girls for wearing pretty flowers on their hats, and threatened with damnation loving and virtuous wives, who would not fling into a fanatic's bonfire a tiny marriage ring of pure gold.

When one abuses the pulpit to make a personal assault upon a disliked man, or to use insulting language he would not dare but for the protection of "the cloth," he does a wickedly and cowardly thing. What he truly deserves need not be discussed in this place.

But, if one has not considered it, he will be surprised that an angry preacher can do so much effective swearing without "poaching upon the preserves" of professionals who swear on the open streets. Much Bible language, when used out of both place and spirit, is effective for the purpose of cursing. Between open swearers who wear their vices openly—as cow-boys their pistols—and the swearing of an angry preacher, let him choose who cares. The cow-boy, however, is the more respectable and honorable person.—Exchange.

To think of religion in any other sense, than as a state of self-denial, is knowing nothing at all of it: for its whole nature is to direct us by a light, and knowledge, and wisdom from God; which is all contrary to the darkness, ignorance, and folly of our nature.—Law.

WONDERFUL PROSPERITY OF THE CRESCENT CITY.

In commercial, industrial and financial circles in New Orleans, the nineteenth century went out in a blaze of prosperity.

In imports, in exports, in customs' duties, in postal receipts and in bank clearings the year 1900 recorded the high-water mark in the material life of the Crescent City.

On the last day of the dying century, twelve large steamships, the aggregate value of whose cargoes reached the enormous total of $2,668,706, cleared for foreign ports.

Of these, one vessel alone—the Mechanician of the Harrison Line—sailed with a cargo valued at $1,000,000.

The exports for 1900 touched the startling total of $142,211,562. This is an increase of $45,645,584 over the exports of 1899.

The total in imports for 1900 amounted to $20,124,508. This is an increase of $6,049,274.

In customs duties the total for 1900 was $7,546,219, an increase of $2,860,453 over the total for 1899.

The receipts at the Postoffice in New Orleans for 1900 amounted to $493,076—an increase of $38,186 over the total for 1899.

The bank clearings for 1900 in New Orleans reached the total of $556,790,701—an increase of $98,571,483 over 1899.

TREMENDOUS SHIPPING.

Twelve large steamships, bound for different ports of the world, cleared at the United States Custom House, Dec. 31.

The total valuation of the merchandise on board these vessels amounted to $2,668,706.

One vessel alone, the steamship Mechanician, bound for Liverpool, England, cleared with a cargo valued at a fraction more than one million dollars.

This is the largest clearance of any single day during the year 1900, and the Custom House officials say this is the largest day's receipts ever cleared from this port.

The valuation of the exports for the month of December are slightly above eighteen million dollars, which is the second largest shipment on record, the largest shipments being made in October of the present year, when they amounted to over $22,000,000.

The cargoes of the vessels that cleared Dec. 31, were principally cotton and grain.

Of cotton there were 56,588 bales, and of grain there were many hundreds of thousands of bushels.

The Mechanician of the Harrison Line took away the largest and most valuable cargo. Her cargo was valued at $1,007,325. Of this $948,500 was for cotton and $58,000 for grain.

Following is a list of the steamships, the number of bales of cotton each carries, and their destination:

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

The century began in war, progressed in war, and is closing in war. The earlier years were marked by the most tremendous conflicts, involving all nations, till the unparalleled career of Napoleon culminated and terminated. The first half of the century was a succession of conflicts. It was reserved to the United States to present to the gaze of the universe the most extraordinary war for the most extraordinary cause that the modern world—and perhaps the whole world—had seen. The Crimean War, the career and overthrow of Louis Napoleon, the Franco-Prussian War, the struggles of Austria and Hungary, the commotions and wars resulting in the unification of Italy, and many other events justify the appellation to this period of the title, "The Belligerent Century." The Spanish War, the South African conflict, the convulsion in China, the projection of the United States into the oriental world, are all included in the justification of that title.

Nor should the British conquest of India, and the practical conquest of Egypt by the same commanding empire, be omitted; for these have required fierce and frequent wars. The Independence of Greece, the subjugation of the southeastern states of Europe, and the conflicts of Russia and Turkey, as well as the conquest and Russification of Poland, would themselves require a brush dipped in blood to depict the century.

So many and such protracted and desperate wars have stimulated invention to such a degree that instruments of destruction and defense have long since reached such a development that more than the cost of one of the wars of long ago is expended upon a single warship, or upon great guns that send half a ton across a county. And no sooner is the most stupendous and costly of these put to a successful test than another adequate to counterwork or surpass it is invented.—New York Advocate.

THE OLD AND THE NEW!

The passing of the old century and the coming of the new were celebrated in Carrollton in a manner befitting their importance. A good congregation assembled at the Methodist Church at 10:45, and spent the time in religious service. The music, under the direction of Mrs. Gard, was grand; the testimonies were hopeful; the prayers were earnest; the sermon was suited to the occasion and helpful to devout hearers. One hundred dollars, cash, were added to the Thank-offering over and above what had been previously subscribed. An interesting and beautiful gift was five dollars contributed by "Miss Baby Bryan," who arrived in Carrollton just in time to wail the old century and to hail the new. [Carrollton may not have the most "liberal" contributor to the Twentieth Century Fund, but evidently has the "youngest."—Editor ADVOCATE.] The service closed at 12:05 A. M., and immediately all the bells in town "rang out the old and rang in the new."

The next morning a company of devout worshipers assembled at the Presbyterian Church at sunrise, and enjoyed a most spiritual prayer service conducted by the pastor. The Presbyterians have not yet entered upon the work of raising their million-dollar thank-offering, but when they do begin, they will succeed.

The several churches of Carrollton are at peace among themselves. The respective congregations are united in Christian work, and the denominational comity is all that could be desired. Everything betokens a year of success. For this let all pray and work and give thanks.—Carrollton (Miss.) Conservative.

BOOKS.

Mr. Spofford's book is a perfect mine of library information, giving directions not only as to the purchase, but also with regard to the arrangement and classification of books, his effort being to show librarians how their work can be done with the least expenditure of labor, and how it can be made most useful to the public. However, he loves books for themselves, aside from their mission of filling shelves, and writes thus pleasantly and even eloquently of them: "Books may be divided into three classes; first, acquaintances; second, friends, and third, intimates. It is well enough to have acquaintances with a multitude of books, as with many friends, though in either case much time should not be given to merely pleasant interconrse that leads to no result. With our literary friends we can spend more time, for they awaken keen interest and are to be read with zest, and consequently with profit. But for chosen intimates and our heart companions we reserve our highest regard and our best hours. . . . There are some books that charm us by their wit and their sweetness; others that surprise and captivate us by their strength; books to refresh us when we are weary; books to comfort us when afflicted; books that stimulate us by their robust health; books that exalt and refine our natures, as it were, to a finer mold; books that arouse us like the sound of a trumpet; books that illumine our darkest hours and fill all our days with delight.

"There are pleasures that perish in the using, but the pleasure which the art of reading carries with it is perennial. He who can feast on the intellectual supplies of the centuries need fear neither poverty nor hunger. In the society of the immortals we become assured that heaven and earth may pass away, but no good thought shall ever pass away. The great orator, on whose lips once hung a multitude, dies and is forgotten. The great actor passes swiftly off the stage, and is seen no more. The great singer, whose voice charmed listening crowds by its melody, is hushed in the grave. The great preacher survives but a single generation in the memory of men. All we, who now live, must be in a little while with yesterday's 7,000 years. But the book of the great writer lives on and on, inspiring age after age of readers, and has in it more of the seeds of immortality than anything else on the earth."—(New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

Fainting Spells

Are peculiar to women. Men rarely faint. Many women are liable to what they term "fainting spells," and this liability is always most marked at the monthly period. This alone is sufficient to connect the "fainting spell" with a deranged or diseased condition of the womanly organs. The use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures irregularity, heals inflammation and ulceration, and stops the drains which weaken the body. It builds up the nervous system, increases the vital powers, and so removes the common causes of faintness in women. There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription;" neither does it contain opium, cocaine, nor any other narcotic.

"It gives me much pleasure," writes Miss Ella Sapp, of Jamestown, Guilford Co., N.C., "to thank Dr. Pierce for the great good received from the use of his 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I had suffered for three years or more at monthly periods. It seemed as though I would die with pain in my back and stomach. I could not stand on my feet without fainting; had given up all hope of ever being cured, when one of my friends insisted upon my trying Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. With but little faith I tried it, and before I had taken half a bottle I felt better, had better appetite and slept better. Now I have taken two bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and am happy to say I am entirely cured, and all done in two months' time, when all other medicines had failed to do any good."

THE EMPHASIS OF PERSONALITY.

Men are driven like dumb beasts in many of the trades of life. In the nations of heathendom they seem almost to lose personality. An army turns them into numbers where the individual is swallowed up in the company, the battalion, the corps. The factory turns them into machines watching other machines, or else the mind is trained to one small act of driving pegs or trimming a piece of leather into a certain shape. Man is lost thus in his work, his individuality is not counted, his personality ignored, his occupation giving no play to his mind, but always running in the same groove. There is nothing more deplorable than this loss of personality. The pliant, malleable character is the toy of every one who wishes a tool, and yet, after being thus bent to their purpose, the despised one. Then, on the other side, none are more admired than an individual whose personality stands out strong, distinct. It may be rugged, with a granite roughness; it may be imperfect, marred by some extreme of passion or pride or weakness; still it is commanding, though not altogether worthy of imitation. Such a character or individual will be far more sought after, holding the admiration, friendship and even emulation of many, than the impassive, harmless soul who has no striking individualism.

Christianity is pre-eminently for the cultivation of personality. It begins by putting the highest possible value upon a single soul; it looks at the most impassive man as one salvable; it talks of man as one who is taken into partnership with heavenly forces; it strikes off every thought of man as a machine, as an aggregation, as ciphers to make thousands. It isolates every man by responsibility, so that he can in no sense be the mere puppet in the hands of another, to step on the stage of life and off at the will of some more chief actor. It in every way by address, by symbol, by personal approach, arrests man to develop personality. It would evolve mind in its singularity, heart in its strange differences, united to emotions differing in shades and degrees.

Henry George struck a true chord, larger in import than he suspected, when he engraved it as the motto upon his shield, "I Am for Men." It was a burden of that unexpressed cry against tramping man's individuality into the ground by aggregations of wealth that look upon men as machine-operatives, who were the worst machines that wealth had to control, because they have to eat.

It is to educe all that there is of emphatic personality in one that grace is given to a soul. Come co-work with me, is the invitation of God. "Whom shall we send? who will go for us?" is the cry that sounds into man's sacred being to call out that co-operation with God. What more elevating to a person, what higher plane can a soul stand upon, what shall exalt my individualism so vastly as this call to my being to enter in with God in his plans. There could be no more emphatic denial of every thought of merging my singleness of being into a mighty host. Christ thus, too, puts his stamp upon all summing up of men into the masses, the crowd, for his ministry never acts as if to a host or to the masses, but to a single woman the well, a poor melted one who bes his feet with tears of grati- to that outcast leper who fell at et. He thus draws the mind to the unit rather than to the host, to the soul rather than to numbers. In this way a single man has all heavenly forces focussed on him for a time, and all the rest in heaven and earth seem to be forgotten.

Then to think of man as the common herd or submerged tenth, absolutely by our very language doing that which Christ would not consent to do. Christianity isolates man from the mass, thus valuing him as the single unit; looking at man as a living soul, not as an army whose numbers count, not dull machines whose use is only for sordid wealth. The Savior puts the weight of obligation upon every saved soul, fixes his high responsibility, then plants him in his providential relations, saying unto him, "Ye are the planting of the Lord"—"trees of righteousness," lift up your heads, spread wide your branches; heavy laden with fruit let them hang. The vast thicket in a forest may have the trees of largest growth, but only here can one assert itself and lift its crown to the sunlight above all the rest; but take them and isolate them, transplanting them upon the road or along some avenue, and everyone will develop into a beauty all its own, somewhat distinct in its shape. Thus with humanity en masse; it is only one in a thousand that can come forth into that individual glory and symmetry of character. Christ came that each soul might be saved, transplanted from such an atmosphere of being lost in the aggregate, with a new power and new relations into lives of personal development through the aid of the Holy Spirit, each differing in glory through the grace of God, and their personality emphasized and reaching the highest limit. RETROSPECTION WITH A PURPOSE.

The days glide into weeks, and they are succeeded by months which give place to years, but there is no check, no line where the one breaks into the other, but gliding as a skiff from a creek into a river, then on into a lake, at last lost in the sea. How imperceptibly Spring comes on, so surely opening into Summer, Summer ripening into Autumn, then Winter coming on with noiseless tread. How fortunate there is no cataclysm, earthquake or sudden shocks to thus mar in the seasons. The year has gone, and only the tolling bell, the stroke of the clock told when the one was counted off forever, and the other came upon the stage of action.

We stand on the other side and look back over the year to say it is gone, but how far short have we fallen in our duties. The works have been very imperfect, the opportunities so poorly met, the obligations so incompletely carried out. Time for the Indian or pagan is merely for the recurrence of the hunting seasons, the reaping of the maize, the preparation for Winter's bleak, winding sheets of snow; but to that intelligent heart that feels his bark is being borne on its bosom to eternity, it is full of tremendous import for far more than mere meat, drink and clothes. These measures of time are for a halt, when we shall take our bearings, like the mariner who twice a day takes his latitude and longitude. While there is often none more sad than that one who lives on and over the past, their whole conversation is filled with the past, the good old past; still there is a most beautiful and entertaining recounting of the past which is delightful in the highest degree from a heart that has not fallen into a sad and solemn despondency which clothes the present with all that is uninviting, and the past of their lives as altogether glorious.

There is a contemplation of the past which is highly beneficial as well as invigorating; it is to look at a year that is gone to re-enforce our characters, to discover our mistakes and failures at a distance when we are cool enough to judge them fairly; then to gather up our powers ready for a new and more vigorous effort in the immediate future. Like a great general who gathers his scattered forces, re-forms companies, consolidates his broken battalions, and calls out all his resources for a more vigorous attack, let us look at the past year with this in mind: we have failed; how was it, why was it; have our resolutions all frittered away because broken; have we called out all the reserve force of our characters? Then, with a new baptism of strength from on high, let us pass to the future with a prayer for a new trial from our Master, "This year also" grant, Lord, for more faithful service, better labor, more finished toil.

Remember, while we are thus asking for a new trial, there is another voice saying, "Let him alone" this year also. When the mechanic has finished his house, he sees where he lost time, where he made his error in joint or angle. When the life has been gone over again for a year, how many places we would like to amend, touching up here with true sympathy, yonder with a helping hand when that weary spirit was just beginning to break down; how much more pathos we would throw into those words, for that soul was on the border-land and we knew it not. But what are these regrets if they lead not to some more earnest action, more penetrating vision, more readiness to grasp the real conditions and meet them? Therefore, let us gather up all our resources, taking a full reckoning of this past year, and go forth into that before us, pressing forward with a forceful determination that rings out in the Savior's words when he said, "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day; for the night cometh, when no man can work." Into that is breathed the intensity of earnest endeavor that pressed upon His heart and life as a "magnum opus." If we lack that same constraining impulse in our lives, time holds not with us in its high import with us.

To look backward thus is to make us wary combatants with the adversary; it is to arm us anew for the trials, it is to harden our sinews for mightier struggles, it is to prepare our Christian manhood for hardness as good soldiers, till the crown is achieved through unremitting faithfulness. Look backward, but only in order to go forward more successfully; look, but beware it does not hold your attention too long or fill you with despondency. For our failures may we be stronger, for our defeats may our characters shine out more brilliantly, for our weary endurance the glory shall be far more exceedingly great. K.

"FEED THE FLOCK OF GOD."

These words remind us of Peter's last interview with his risen Lord. No doubt the apostle never forgot the tender and solemn charge of the Chief Shepherd, "Feed my sheep. . . Feed my lambs." After a long life of service he felt that the work of the presbyter was in a large measure feeding the flock. No more difficult task is committed to the ministry than the care of the believer. There is the work of training the disciples in the school of Christ, comforting in sorrow, guarding from false doctrine and, above all, supplying the soul-food, without which the child of God can not grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ.

This is a work which calls for wisdom, patience and deep personal knowledge of divine things. It is much easier to exhort and warn the impenitant and unruly. It is no great task to fulminate against evident sin and to anathematize popular evils already under the ban of a Christian sentiment, strongly entrenched in the conviction and experience of thousands. It requires small intellectual insight and less spiritual character. But to know the deep things of God, and set forth the larger privileges of the child of God, is only possible to the man whose life is in closest touch with his Divine Master. He must be a devoted and prayerful student of the Word. His soul must often keep solitary vigil with the Holy Spirit. His meditation must be long and sweet in the statutes and beatitudes of the Lord.

No man can feed the flock at second hand. The riches of the gospel can not be pointed out; they must be poured out. Out of the abundance of the heart this must come. A man with little insight into God's wonderful truth will have little more than mere phrases, phrases well-worn, to give to the flock. Poor chance for growth on such as this. What a test of ministerial qualification and fidelity! Alas! there are men who would feed the flock upon Five Hundred Skeletons of Sermons. Book well named in view of the results to man and congregation issuing upon its use. Strange that a man with an heart of flesh, having God's own Word to study and the Spirit of God within him, should deal out mere propositions to the souls of yearning, loving, trusting men and women whose cry is, "Bread of heaven, feed me!" Our solicitude should be that the Lord may enrich us in all knowledge and spiritual understanding.

But there are rich rewards in this service. There is a joy in unfolding the riches of grace. The man who feeds the flock will feed himself, and likewise he that starves the flock shall also be lean. How fresh and vigorous the man whose soul is rejoicing in the possession of new and larger views of the mysteries of the gospel! His life is full, and the flock knows the fact.

Nothing brings pastor and people closer together than this work of feeding the sheep. His reproofs we learn to bear, his exhortations excite our wills to action, his eloquence thrills; but the bountiful and soul-feeding truth draws us to the man and his Lord. Such a man may lead the sheep as he wills. His is the power of attraction. This was Jesus' power.

It is this phase of the pastor's work that leaves a permanent impress upon character and life. Much that we do is transitory; but the culture of the soul is the work we hope to present to eternity. Tremendous thought, that we are called to thus work with Christ, that his people may be presented without fault before the throne of his glory! "But our sufficiency is of God." P.

AFTER CONFERENCE.

The Conference has come and gone. The toil of preparation and the strenuous efforts "to bring up everything in full" is over. The social and religious enjoyments of our annual reunion have furnished a season of rest and spiritual refreshment. But what of the abiding results upon the ministry and the church? Surely, there are lessons and inspirations for the future.

It will be a sad day for Methodism if our Conferences become merely a matter of business routine. From the beginning they have been large events in the life of the ministry. Perhaps, in former years, when there was more preaching we received a larger measure of spiritual blessing. Yet there is still much to strengthen and enthuse the hearts of our preachers and laymen. The mere fact of such an aggregation of spiritual men engaged in the noblest calling committed to mortal responsibility is an inspiration. The reports of varied experience under trying circumstances are suggestive of sustaining grace and conquering faith. The hearing and receiving of appointments is a fresh and mighty call to the service of our Master. No man possessed of a heart touched by the Spirit of life can be unmoved by this solemn and holy event.

But all this is over, and we are again at our posts. The year, large with opportunity, is before us, and the new year is already rushing on to eternity. The Conference has quickened our sense of the supreme mission of the gospel. We are sensible to-day of a greater fidelity to the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. The ordination services and the reception of young men into our ranks has brought back vividly the vows we assumed years ago. Shall we the more earnestly endeavor to keep them? We have also felt again the connectional spirit in a newer aspect. We have heard from our Bishop and connectional officers the general spirit of the church, and felt again the dissolving of our local feeling as it passes into the larger view of the whole field.

The Conference has called to mind certain details of our work which have received scant attention. Certainly we have resolved to do better. Better study for the pulpit, better work in the pastoral round, and, above all, a closer fellowship with Christ, our Chief Shepherd. And let us remember each other after Conference. Your own charge may seem to require all your thought and prayer, but do not forget the ministry of intercession. Pray for one another. These, your fellow-laborers with Christ, are one with you. May the great Head of the church keep our hearts in the love of God and the patient waiting for Christ! P.

The ADVOCATE enjoyed a charming visit from Rev. J. W. Harmon, D. D., of the Mississippi Conference. This venerable servant of God has served the church for many years with unfaltering fidelity, and exemplified the faith he loves to preach. We are glad to mention his interesting brochure, "Thrilling Scenes in the Life of Dr. J. W. Harmon."

BISHOP W. X. NINDE.

Bishop W. X. Ninde, of the M. E. Church, died at Detroit, Mich., Jan. 3, aged sixty-eight. It was thought the cause of his death was heart trouble. He attended a funeral, and caught cold. The deceased was elected Bishop in 1884. He had the South America and Mexico work under his supervision during the last year, which he represented at the last meeting of the Missionary Committee. He had served in nearly all of the positions of ministerial work before being elected Bishop. A strong preacher and an able Bishop, who has faithfully performed his work, advancing the cause of his Master, and earnestly advocating the great missionary operations of the church which had so highly honored him. His last published words were: "'The children on the shoulders of a giant can see farther than the giant himself.' We speak of a high antiquity, but no one need envy the ancients who stand on the verge of the nineteenth century and look down the opening pathway of the twentieth. Sun, moon, stars are for signs and seasons. They shine with as clear a radiance as ever, and beckon onward the tireless worker—the restless explorer. What an hour for hope-brightening, faith-strengthening, zeal-stimulating! The world was never so old—never so young as it is to-day. The right-minded man can not repine. For him, 'Joy fills the golden cup.'"

The avenging of Baron von Ketteler by the bloody decapitation of a private soldier, who is said to have been stationed upon a certain street with orders to shoot down any foreigner who tried to pass, is a blot on the German Empire. Shall a national crime be punished by taking the lives of inferior individuals who are obeying the orders of superior officers? Is it not preposterous to be singling out certain individuals when the Empress and a majority of all the Princes and officials were deep in the plot to exterminate the foreigners? What a departure this scene of the bloody executioner and assistants, who had been so busy in their gory work that they were so bespattered with blood that their clothes were crimsoned! How different from that eloquent claim of the Emperor when he bade his corps go forth as the defenders of the Christian converts and missionaries! How his officers, standing around, gloated in this act of vengeance upon a common soldier! How far from the spirit of the Prince of Peace, whose followers they went forth to succor and rescue! It is truly a humiliating and pitiable sight; a blot upon the campaign of the civilized nations of the world, which hastened to save the beleaguered legations at Peking and the missionaries far inland.

No feats of the last century will stand out more distinctly in the missionary successes than those of inventing and transforming spoken languages into written forms, so that the Bible could be translated into them for the tribes and nations of earth. The invention of Rev. Jas. Evans, where he made a written language from the sounds of the American Indians, lead off in this work. This herculean work has gone on from nation to nation, from idiom to idiom, till the most remote nations and tribes far in the interior of Africa have been given the Word of Life. Not only so, but one has invented a written language for the blind of China, that they may be taught the Word of God. This has led to that marvelous discovery that some of the most ignorant tribes have the most musical, flexible, and yet vigorous language. One tribe or nation in the heart of the Dark Continent have a language which was so varied that there were many portions of the Bible that could be translated into it in three distinct forms, each equally conveying the great truths. This kills that theory that language is the production of the highest intellectual cultivation of a nation. What tedious research, long study, interminable details in such a task as that of Paton Pilkington, of Uganda, and these great scholars in this enterprise of translating the Scriptures into a language never before written. From the English universities they have gone forth to bury themselves, as the world says, in the heart of some tribe to learn and transform the tongue into a written form. They have surely a royal reward on high.

The martyrs of the nineteenth century will stand forth in numbers second to none, not even those of the first. In the early decades we are introduced to those in the mission fields, notably that of Madagascar, where, with a most unrelenting fury, the converts were followed up and tortured, some buried alive and put through all forms of deaths. Then, as each new mission field was opened and entered, the same track of blood and story of torture was enacted. Uganda, with its many who were so heartlessly put to death; then that vast army of Armenians who fell before the bloody Turk, while England stood by, the so-called "Defender of the Faith," with folded arms, looking on, bound by a secret treaty whereby she had ceded to her the island of Crete, and had promised non-interference in Turkey treatment of Armenia. In these last years China has filled up the long list of worthy spirits who counted not their lives dear unto themselves. Even the stolid Mongolian, whom some ignorantly class so low in the grade of humanity, filled with the power of the gospel of Christ, make kindred spirits to those who loved not their lives unto the death in the opening years of the Christian church. Then the heroic endurance of timid women—what shame, what agony they went through, worthy to stand with those first disciples. With that host of whom the world was not worthy they have united their voices in praise to Him who hath loved them and cleansed them by His own blood from every sin.

Mr. W. L. Blaylock and wife called at our office. Bro. Blaylock is publisher of the Texas Christian Advocate. Their Twentieth Century number was the finest in make up, both from an editorial and publisher's point of view, that came to our office. They are making an Advocate in Texas worthy of their large clientele. Rankin and Blaylock make a fine team. Dr. Cooper looked in upon the editor's sanctum, Monday, the thirty-first, the last day of the year. His telescopic vision can descry a student far off in the hills or the vales, and, like a bird of passage, he flies away to that fireside. He sees students in his nightly dreams and waking visions. His nightmares are composed of scores of boys just about to take the train for some distant college. He wakes with a start, and jumps for his grip to arrest their departure, and, with loving violence, draws them to his college.

Rev. J. A. Leech writes as follows from Okolona, Miss., Dec. 30, 1900: "Sister Raper, the wife of Bro. J. W. Raper, died suddenly at the parsonage home in Buena Vista, Friday morning, Dec. 28. Bro. Raper is left with seven children, one a little babe not quite two months old. She was buried, Saturday morning, in the beautiful cemetery at Buena Vista. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. H. C. Morehead, Rev. W. A. Bowlin and the writer. Bro. Raper requests the prayers of the brethren. A memoir will appear later."

Rev. J. H. Riggin, of Little Rock Conference, writes the following: "And so Bishop Galloway has transferred J. R. Moore from the Little Rock to the Louisiana Conference. This will cause widespread sorrow in our Conference. He was by every token one of our leading men. As a preacher, very few among us could equal him. He was for many years secretary of the Conference. Three times he has been a delegate to the General Conference. He has held honorable place on Boards of Trustees of our colleges and other important trusts. His removal makes a vacancy indeed. Deal gently with the young man, ye Louisiana brethren."

[None deal more royally with transfers than the Louisiana Conference. Sometimes we dress them down and export to St. Louis, Kansas City, Memphis, or to more extended fields. Then we have sent some to General Conference. But all who came from the Little Rock Conference have not proven prizes. Bro. Moore will have a cordial welcome among us.]

PHILIP D. ARMOUR.

Philip D. Armour, financier and multi-millionaire, died at his home at 5:15 o'clock P. M., Jan. 6, in his sixty-ninth year. The millionaire retained consciousness until within an hour of his death.

During the day he had realized that death was near. To those around him he had said: "I know I am very sick, and am ready for death when it comes."

Soon after luncheon, and just before the physician forbade his talking more, Mr. Armour, in feeble tones, said that he would like to hear the Lord's Prayer read. One of the trained nurses who had been attending him drew a chair to the bedside and slowly read from the Bible the prayer for which the dying man had asked. It was read sentence by sentence, and each was repeated by Mr. Armour. When the "Amen" had been repeated by him he sank back on his pillow and closed his eyes restfully. It was the last word the great financier spoke, except feeble farewells to his family a little later.

The property interests for which Mr. Armour stood are estimated at $150,000,000. His personal share of this property is variously estimated at from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000.

In works of charity Mr. Armour's monument will be found in the Armour Institute, to which but a short time ago he gave $750,000 in one remembrance. Asked once what he considered his best paying investment, he replied, "The Armour Institute."

The institute to-day represents an investment on the part of Mr. Armour and his brother, Joseph, of $2,750,000, and a yearly expense for maintenance of $100,000.

The appalling responsibility of meeting the Lord with an unexpended twenty-five millions, when all the avenues for benevolence have stood before him, open doors inviting him to enter, and this great accumulation of wealth was partly gained by gambling in stocks and futures. All the great achievements of life by this prince of merchants is overshadowed by this view of the Lord's reception of him who said to him, "Occupy till I come."

FRANCIS D. GAMEWELL AND THE SIEGE OF PEKIN

Rev. Francis D. Gamewell, who superintended the construction of the fortifications which saved the besieged legations in Pekin, is the son of the late John N. Gamewell, of New York, the inventor of the fire alarm and police telegraph which bears his name. He was born in Camden, S. C., and came of an old-time Southern Methodist stock, his grandfather and three uncles being Methodist preachers. Rev. Chas. Taylor, D. D., founder of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, in China, was his uncle.

After the Civil War, Frank came with his father's family to the North, and spent his youthful days in Hackensack, N. J. The natural bent of his mind was for scientific studies, and, having chosen the profession of civil engineer, he determined to have a thorough scientific training. For this purpose, in 1875, he entered the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, N. Y. But his studies were interrupted by a painful accident near the close of his second year. He afterward entered Cornell University, to be again turned from his chosen purpose by an attack of pneumonia. After his recovery he entered Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., where he graduated in 1881.

In the Fall of that year he went by appointment of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church to China, and was located in Pekin. He was married June 29, 1882, to Miss Mary Porter, who was a missionary in North China in the employ of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

In 1884 he was appointed superintendent of the West China Mission, from which he was driven by the Boxers in 1886, he and his little company escaping the rage of the mob only with their lives. He returned to Pekin and resumed his work in that city. He has for more than ten years been Professor of Chemistry and Physics in the Pekin University. While in this country on vacation in 1894 he took a special course of study in physics in Columbia College.

Mr. Gamewell has displayed a remarkable talent in the construction of buildings and the command of men. He is a most careful student of details, never trusting to guesses, or what some choose to call intuitions, but seeking with the most painstaking care and experimental testing the exact results of what may be intrusted to him. He has the scientist's instinctive worship of absolute accuracy. It was this, perhaps, even more than his personal magnetism, that won men's confidence. They had a feeling that he was strictly right in what he ordered, and they obeyed him willingly.

The buildings that he constructed are among the best in Pekin. Asbury Church, which was a model of beauty and strength, was almost entirely the product of his genius. He was called by Col. Denby, while Minister to China, to construct the most conspicuous building in the American legation—the Archives—which is pronounced by judges to be the noblest architectural foreign edifice in the city. Col. Denby desired to have the name of Mr. Gamewell engraved on a tablet of brass with others which was placed on the wall of the structure, but his modesty would not permit it.

When the Boxer peril arose, Mr. Gamewell was among the first and almost alone to appreciate its significance and probable magnitude. While others were slow to believe that the storm would break upon them in such fury, and consequently made little preparation for defense, he at once urged the assembling of the missionaries of the several compounds in one place for purposes of defense. It was largely through his influence that the Methodist compound was selected as the rendezvous of the Protestant missionaries. He began at once its fortification, and did it with such technical skill as to command the commendation of Mr. Conger, who, when he saw the works, said that in the event of need they already had the man who was qualified to fortify the legations.

After the missionaries entered the legations, Sir Claude Mac Donald appointed him chief of staff on fortifications, and gave him liberty to proceed according to his own will. His work there is now known the world over. A few days dispelled all doubt as to the wisdom of intrusting a work so exclusively military to a civilian. Even military men came to recognize his fitness, and gave their most hearty co-operation. Some of the German soldiers who at first repelled his proffer of help, saying that Germans did not need to fight behind sand bags, after losing several of their men, gladly accepted the bags, and were generous in their praise of the missionary engineer. Col. Scott, of the English engineers, who examined the works after the siege was raised, said, "You are worthy a place in the Royal Engineers." Sir Robert Hart said, "He has infused the spirit of fortification through the entire community." In his recent article in the Fortnightly he pays a high tribute to "his energy, activity and good nature, which were conspicuous throughout," and quotes with approval the utterance of Mr. Smith, "That man is a representation of limited omnipresence." Dr. Morrison, whose opinions, Dr. Martin says, "are like shots from a cannon," says of Mr. Gamewell that "he carried out the construction of the defenses in a most admirable and soldier-like manner." Rev. Courtney H. Fenn said: "Through all this terror Mr. Gamewell slaved. He worked night and day, and inspired us all with his magnificent courage and resource. The British engineer marveled at his work." Minister Conger wrote him: "You deserve and will receive the lasting gratitude of all the besieged. But I can not separate from you in this hour of our providential deliverance without bearing testimony that to your intelligent and untiring effort, more than to that of any other man, do we owe our preservation."

Mr. Gamewell's modesty is such that it is all but impossible to learn from him what he has done. He believes, and in this is strictly correct, that he is simply the instrument of the Infinite Love which has guided his entire life, and who turns all things for good to those who respond to his love.—Central Methodist.

FROM BRO. J. G. CAMMACK.

MR. EDITOR: To-day we begin a new century, new year, new charge, and a new editor. All of the past are gone, with many pleasant memories. We had a good editor, a prosperous and pleasant year, with lots of good friends that we left behind. To them all we say "Good-by," and in our introduction into the new year, with all its new relations, we would make a graceful bow; and, praying God's richest blessings upon us all, and asking the guidance of the Holy One, we enter our work with joy and gladness.

In our report at Conference we were enabled to make the best report in the history of the charge, and to our successor, Bro. M. M. Black, we bequeath an inheritance among a kind and prosperous people, with a plenty of work, fishing, hunting, and mud.

We have never been more comfortably situated then here—a good parsonage, with a good, kind and loving people. We held watch-night services here last night, and entered the new year, new century, singing, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." May this be our song of triumph during the whole year!

ATTENTION.

The Sunday-school superintendents throughout the Mississippi Conference are requested to pay special attention to the article in the ADVOCATE, last week, written by Rev. J. D. Ellis, secretary of the Sunday-school Board. I resigned during the late session of the Conference, and Bro. Ellis was elected to succeed me as secretary. All applications to the Board for help must be sent to him at Palmetto Home, Miss., instead of to me, as they have been for the last two years. In the article referred to, Bro. Ellis plainly states the conditions on which help can be secured, and all persons concerned will govern themselves accordingly.

I bespeak for Bro. Ellis the cordial co-operation of the Sunday-school workers throughout the Conference in his efforts to promote the cause, and hope that he will have the kind consideration of every one while serving us as secretary of the Sunday-school Board.

LOST.

In the hurry of departure after the reading of the appointments at the late session of our Conference, in Brookhaven, I left my overcoat, a black diagonal, on the altar railing. I learn that another was left, but evidently for a smaller man. If any brother accidentally got hold of an overcoat too large for him, it is no doubt mine, and I ask him to communicate with me at once, as I very much need it this wintry weather. The pocket should contain a pair of tan colored kid gloves. No other marks of identification that I remember.

REV. THOS. H. DORSEY, Arcola, Miss., EDITOR.

The Epworth Leaguers of Mississippi will give the new editor of the ADVOCATE a hearty welcome. He is a great friend to young people.

Dr. Black leaves the ADVOCATE in the hands of another, and just as he is going we desire to reassure him that he has the hearty thanks of the Leaguers of the State for many, many favors in the past, and he carries with him our good wishes for his success and happiness in the future.

We are now in a new year and a new century, with a new editor for the ADVOCATE, and new blessings fresh from the hand of God every day and hour. Let us do more real service this year than ever before.

Prof. Hayes, our State president, is doing everything in his power to get the work of the State organization in hand. Let everybody assist him; it is no small task to do what is necessary a State League president to do the work necessary in his office, and Prof. Hayes is a busy man. He has no time, no money to throw away; so let each of us help him, at least, by doing what he asks us to do.

Now, the Christmas times are over, and the new year is upon us, and Sister J. M. Wyatt, our State treasurer, is back in her office at West Point, Miss, and she is ready to receive the five-cent assessment from all the Leagues. Now, it is to be hoped that you will not put off this important matter. Sister Wyatt needs the money in the discharge of her duties as State treasurer. It is a small amount for any League to pay; yet it is a good sum when it is all in.

Rev. J. E. Thomas, our pastor at Greenville for four years, just closed, now presiding elder of the Greenville district, says that the Epworth League in Greenville is the biggest force in that church.

If the League is not a great help to the pastor in his work, it is because it is not properly worked. An Epworth League must be worked; it can't work itself.

At the last session of the North Mississippi Annual Conference we heard many of the pastors make encouraging reports of their Leagues. Let this department hear from you, so that others may be inspired by your success.

Let every League in the State secure as many sets of the Reading Course as possible, and read it; it is first-class.

Now for a full year's work for the Master.

YOU SHOULD NOT NEGLECT YOUR KIDNEYS

Because at all Times They Have the Most Important Work to Do.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease, and if permitted to continue fatal results are sure to follow.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

So when your kidneys are weak or out of order you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

Among the many cures of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, investigated by the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the ones which we publish this week for the benefit of our readers speak in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great remedy.

DES MOINES, Ia., Oct. 20, 1900

"I had been out of health for a long time, and I was taking medicine from a doctor's prescription when I received your sample bottle. I stopped taking the doctor's medicine and used the sample bottle of Swamp-Root. I afterwards took two of your large bottles, and it cured me entirely, and I have not felt so well for years. I thank you very much for sending me the sample bottle." D. W. SMITH, 1621 Center St.

D. W. SMITH.

What a Woman Says of Swamp-Root.

Mrs. H. N. Wheeler, of 117 High Rook St., Lynn, Mass., writes on Nov. 2d, 1900: "About 18 months ago I had a very severe attack of grip. I was extremely sick for three weeks, and when I finally was able to leave my bed I was left with excruciating pains in my back. My water at times looked very like coffee. I could pass but little at a time, and then only after suffering great pain. My physical condition was such that I had no strength and was all run down. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, but I felt certain that they were the cause of my trouble. My sister, Mrs. C. E. Littlefield, of Lynn, advised me to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial. I procured a bottle from my druggist, and found it a very pleasant medicine to take, and inside of three days commenced to get relief. I followed up that bottle with another, and at the completion of this one found I was completely cured. My strength returned, and to-day I am as well as ever. My business is that of canvasser; I am on my feet a great deal of the time and have to use much energy in getting around. My cure is therefore all the more remarkable, and is exceedingly gratifying to me."

MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince you—and you may have a sample bottle free for the asking.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain or dull ache in the back, excess of uric acid, gravel, rheumatic pains, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night to empty the bladder; sleeplessness, nervous irritability, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallow, unhealthy complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, loss of ambition, general weakness and debility.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

Sample Bottle Free. To prove its wonderful curative properties, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., when you will receive, free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a valuable book by mail, prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of this world-famous kidney remedy. Swamp-Root is pleasant to take, and is so remarkably successful that those of our readers who have not already tried it are advised to write for a sample bottle, and to be sure and mention reading this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE."

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take, and if you are already convinced that this great remedy is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

Home Circle

THE HOME ATMOSPHERE.

Foremost among the forces which shape character in childhood and youth is what may be called the "atmosphere" of the home. Parental example, the instruction imparted in school, the influence of companions, the work of the pastor and the Sunday-school teacher, and the formal efforts at training which may be put forth—all are helpful factors in molding the young life; but not one of them surpasses in effectiveness the silent, constant, and, we were going to say, irresistible ministry of this almost indefinable and yet easily recognizable educational agency which permeates the household, gives tone to its life, and, either for good or for evil, develops the tastes, the affections, and the entire character of those of its members who are yet in their plastic estate.

In some homes, for example, there is a distinctively literary atmosphere; the library is stocked with the best books; the study table is supplied with the magazines and weekly journals which occupy commanding rank in the world of literature; at meal-time and by the fireside the conversation oftentimes takes in topics in which the standard or the more recent writers of poetry, history, biography, and fiction pass in review; once in a while a photographic reproduction of a recent painting or statue about which the critics are talking, is brought home, to be discussed and admired; occasionally some friends who have recently been abroad come in with their collections of pictures, and chat delightfully about their foreign sight-seeing; questions that have arisen in the school concerning authors and their rank are introduced daily for exploitation, and, in brief, all the members of the family make some contribution to the common stock of interest which is maintained in good books and in the art and habit of reading them so as to appreciate and love them. Now, in such a home, a child unconsciously absorbs literary tastes and knowledge. Brought up among noble forms of literature, he early learns to browse among them, to admire them, to discern their beauties, and to learn the difference between them and ordinary printed matter. It is hardly too much to say that the atmosphere of such a household does more in this respect than the actual training of the schools in implanting and cultivating a love for noble and stimulating reading matter.

Take another picture: a home in which money-making is the one thought and aim. "How much did he make?" is, in such a circle, the most absorbing question that can be sprung. Profit and loss, percentage and interest, bank accounts and stock markets, form the staple of thought and conversation. No one living in such a home would ever learn that there are any other kinds of treasures besides those whose value can be reckoned in dollars and cents. Money is estimated as the one thing needful, and a desire to get it, by hook or by crook, becomes inevitably the ruling passion. Children bred in such an atmosphere imbibe, unconsciously, the spirit and aims of their elders, and grow up to be sordid seekers of riches. Their moral fiber is coarsened, their souls are hardened, they easily and early become victims of one of the most dangerous and deadly of all sins—the sin of covetousness. Is not their doom a convincing instance of the mighty and relentless force of the atmosphere of a home such as we have depicted?

If other illustrations were needed, one might be instanced—typical of many in the land—in which the prevailing spirit is that of worldliness. Dress, the dicta and the rivalries of society leaders, the arbitraments of the recent fashions, the latest play, the next ball, the "conquests" made by the reigning belles of the hour, are thought of and talked about as though they were really matters of supreme importance. Here let us not be misunderstood. The social world has its charms, its proper realm, its legitimate claims. We do not ignore, and we would not depreciate them. But we submit that a household given over to its yokedom breeds an atmosphere which stifles all the higher and nobler faculties and ambitions of the soul. Children reared in such an environment become encased in a shell of indifference, formalism, and agnosticism, which can hardly be broken, even by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." There is to-day no more subtle, strenuous, and uncompromising foe of the gospel than the spirit of worldliness. Alas for the homes where this spirit reigns supreme!

Over against these pictures let us place for a moment another sketch—a home in which a religious atmosphere prevails. There may be in it but little avowed religious instruction, although that work is not neglected; cant terms and professions of high attainments in piety are never heard here; but a spirit of trustfulness, of sincerity, of fidelity, of kindness, of joy, pervades the home circle. Bickering and quarreling between husband and wife are not known; the habit of nagging children, of fault-finding, and of scolding, or of using violent words, is conspicuous for its absence. The children grow up ready to testify, "If there is a good woman in the world, one who loves the Savior, and knows how to show others the way to him, it's my mother!" Piety in such a home is like the sunshine, all-penetrative, radiant, full of cheer, life-giving; nay, it is an atmosphere surrounding childhood, from birth, invisible, but irresistible in its healthful influence. Reader, what sort of an "atmosphere" is there in your home?—Western Christian Advocate.

BALLAD OF THE OVERWORKED TWENTIETH CENTURY.

The clock struck 12! the cannons roared! the bonfires gemmed the night!
The stars were snarled in golden ropes that marked the rocket's flight!
"The guest is here!" Loud rose the cheer; the city's gates swung wide.
"I greet ye! merry New Orleans!" the Twentieth Century cried.
"God give ye peace and much increase! God give ye wealth and mirth!
I'll live to see ye seated high among the great of earth!
I'll live to see your hopes in flower; your happy dreams come true!
I haste to join the passing hour! Adieu, kind friends, adieu!"
"But hold! but stay!" they bar the way with eager zeal and zest;
"To-night, at least, remain and feast, our dear and honored guest!"
"Odd's blood!" the Twentieth Century cried, and swift he scanned the clock;
"Ie thirteen minutes, woe betide! I'm due in Little Rock!
I'd fain stop here and taste your cheer, for the air is damp and raw,
But in half an hour, by standard time, I am billed at Omaha.
In the wooly West, where they know no rest, they have set their watches ahead;
At the earliest sight of my face to-night they will paint the Rockies red!
I dog the sun on his beaten track, I can only make my bow;
I left Berlin full five hours back; they are probably sober now!
I may not pause, by the solar laws I must hustle along, alas!
Where they watch the clock, with their guns on cock, at the village of Eagle Pass;
Then I fare me forth to the frozen north, where the Behring breakers foam;
'Twill be 3 a. m. in New Orleans when I knock at the gates of Nome!
So, a stirrup-cup and adieu, dear friends! no time for sup or song;
I must go on the run, or, a hundred to one, the calendar comes out wrong!"
The crowd fell back from the great guest's track, that nothing his way might block,
And in seven minutes by standard time there was whooping in Little Rock.
And this is the reason, fully told, so all may read aright,
Why he couldn't remain for a high old time on the noon of New Year's night.

GETTING ON IN THE WORLD.

A short time ago Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the millionaire philanthropist, delivered an address to an audience of young men in this city, in which he uttered the following precepts, exhortations, and counsels:

"I am going to give you a few points in my own life, and I feel at home in talking to you young men, because my grandfather, too, was a Baptist, a preacher. As a young man I had the best education in the world with which to begin life, for I was born to the blessed heritage of poverty. I hope the burden of riches has not fallen on the young men here. When this burden is laid on a young man he has temptation at every step of which the poor man knows nothing, and if he acts his part well, he deserves double credit. He is surely the salt of the earth.

"You hear a great deal about poverty nowadays, and the cry goes up to abolish poverty, but it will be the saddest day of civilization when poverty is no longer with us. It is from the soil of poverty that all the virtues spring. Without poverty where will your inventor, your artist, your philanthropist come from? God does not call his great men from the palaces of the rich.

"Fortunately, being poor, I was not compelled to make a choice of my career. It was not what I wanted, but what I could get. I have scribbled with the pen and have been a journalist, although I hope not of the yellow press. I was made a man at thirteen when I brought one dollar and twenty cents, which I had made with my own hands.

"To succeed a young man must be honest, moral, and sober. You can not trust a drinking man, and I would as soon trust the man who gambles at Monte Carlo as the man who gambles in Wall Street. The successful business man must be a good, all-round man, and must not do anything to excess. Business is affected by the small things in life. Events in far-off climes affect the business status in this and every other country. The terrible war, the awful massacre now going on in the Transvaal, the effort to strangle a republic, is having its effect upon our business.

"The real advantages of wealth are what it will enable you to do for others. But of every thousand dollars given to charity nine hundred and fifty might as well be thrown in the sea. Help the aspiring. It is of no use to boost a man up a ladder unless he is willing to climb himself.

"There are three classes of young men in the world: One starts out to be a millionaire. Another seeks reputation, perhaps, at the cannon's mouth. And, by the way, this shooting is bad business. I do not believe in taking a shot at any man, and, worse, going out of your own country to do it. I should like to see anyone get me out of my own country to shoot a man down. I believe the only time to kill is when your native land is in danger of invasion. A third young man, who will be successful, is he who starts out in life with self-respect, and who is true to his own self and to his fellow-men. He can not fail to win."—Exchange.

SANCTIFIED LISTENING.

Preaching may be regarded as dealing either with truth or with life. In the former case it addresses itself to the intellect, but in the latter it goes deeper. Both points of view are right, but the second is the more important. We hear, in order to obtain a mastery of the truth; but we hear still more in order to live well. We ought to go to church to get the perplexities of the past week cleared up, and to obtain light and strength for the duties of the week to come. It is a great thing when the truth makes us intelligent, but it is a greater when it makes us true and pure. A distinguished preacher has told of a lesson and rebuke which he received from a simple hearer. She had experienced so great benefit from a sermon of his that, chancing some time afterwards to receive a visit from him in her own home, she told him how much his message had been blessed to her soul. He asked her what the text of the sermon had been, but she was unable to remember. Somewhat annoyed, he asked her to tell him what had been the subject; but this also had completely escaped her memory. His suspicions were now thoroughly aroused, and he demanded how that could have been blessed to her so much of which she recollected so little. She still, however, adhered to the statement that the impression of blessing remained bright and strong in her feeling, though her memory had let the letter entirely escape; and her ready wit enabled her to demonstrate on the spot how this could be. Taking him outside the house to a green where some clothes, which had been washed, were lying perfectly dry in the Summer sun, she pointed to them and said, "You believe that these were drenched with water yesterday?" "Yes," he said, "of course." "But, look," she said, "there is not one drop of water in them now; they are as dry as they can be." "Yes," he said, "the water has completely evaporated." "Yet," said she, "it has done them good, though they now retain none of it." "Oh, yes," said he, "it has made them white as snow." "Well," she added, "though every word of your sermon has left my memory, I know I am still profiting by it for it has sanctified my soul." It was an unanswerable argument, and it shows that the truth, in passing through the mind, may leave something better behind than even a deposit of conviction—namely, a deposit of character.—Dr. Stalker.

"NO HAND TO HELP!"

Faith in prayer inevitably dies out of the soul that has lost its faith in the spiritual aspect and meaning of all that is and all that happens. Prayer has been described as the meeting-point of the seen and the unseen, the border-land between earth and heaven, and it is no doubt in regard to prayer that the blighting influence of this spirit of unbelief is first and, perhaps, most markedly seen. When the disciples expressed to Jesus their astonishment at the effect of his words upon the barren fig tree, his reply to them was, "Have faith in God." If only they had faith in their hearts, then their words and wishes should have power even to remove mountains. But is it not the case that this subtle influence of a hardly acknowledged unbelief is prone to creep in and make us imagine that the Lord's arm is shortened that he can not save; that his ear is heavy that he can not hear? And so we never enjoy many of those mighty works by which we might be blessed. Have faith in God. Let us see to-day that we have it as a settled conviction of our souls that, with miracle or without miracle, God is a small matter—but that somehow God does hear and does answer our prayer. Let faith in goodness, to begin with; faith in God as good, faith in a personal and a living God, faith in God's power and willingness to hear and help his children when they call upon him—let that faith come first, let that be most deeply rooted in our souls, and then let reason and science, with all their arguments and laws, come and adapt themselves as best they can to those which are the fundamental postulates of faith, the fundamental demands of the best part of the nature which God has given to us. That is the legitimate, the natural order of things. If these native instincts of faith are lost, well, then, there is nothing for us but a selfish, hopeless struggle against blind, unfeeling force—nothing else; no eye to guide, no hand to help. Guidance and prayer alike are simply exploded institutions. We ourselves are orphans, and utterly destitute indeed. James M. Hodgson, D. D., in Christian World Pulpit.

NELSON—In the city of Baton Rouge, on Sunday, Dec. 16, 1900, Mrs. E. E. H. NELSON passed to her reward, aged seventy-seven years. In the full enjoyment of her faculties, and surrounded by devoted relatives and friends, she fell asleep in Jesus.

Sister Nelson had been a Christian for many years, and adorned the doctrine of God our Savior by a consistent and eminently useful life. Her most conspicuous traits were an unfailing cheerfulness and a ceaseless effort to render some service to others. This was strengthened by a life of strong faith and a prayerful spirit. All classes were drawn to her. Old and young rejoiced in her genial companionship; never weary of her quiet conversation, always pervaded with a gentle humor. In speech she was cautious and just. I never knew her to even intimate evil of another. In the homes of distress, or in times of sickness, she ministered to the comfort of others in complete self-forgetfulness. Her testimony at the end was strong and true. She rejoiced in the personal presence of her Lord. A short time before she passed away she repeated,

"How happy every child of grace
Who knows his sins forgiven."

Doubtless she to-day knows her Lord in the rich light of his eternal glory.

F. N. PARKER.

COX—Dr. T. B. Cox was born Oct. 26, 1865. In August, 1892, he made a profession of religion, and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Learned, Miss. January 19, 1893, he was happily married to Miss Nannie E. Dickson, of Learned, Miss., and departed this life Nov. 17, 1900, being thirty-five years and twenty-one days old. It was the privilege of this writer to baptize him, receive him into the church, and know him all of his church life. A more consistent and faithful member I have never known. During an acquaintance of more than eight years I never heard anyone say the least thing against him. His faith in his Lord was great; great enough to triumph through life and sustain him in death. When death was rapidly approaching he could say, "I am not afraid to die." What a happy ending of a busy, a useful and faithful life!

The doctor was a successful business man, doing a large practice for his many friends, who esteemed him very highly for his many sterling qualities. In the sick-room he was very kind, and in his manner as gentle as a woman. As husband and father he was a real model, so much so that his devotion was a subject of remark. He will be missed as a business man, as a Mason, as a doctor, as a church member, but none will miss him so much as his little family—his broken-hearted wife and two little children. V. D. SKIFFER.

AUSTIN—Mrs. M. E. AUSTIN was born Aug. 23, 1831, and died in Clinton, Miss., Aug. 21, 1900. She was married in 1851 to H. D. Austin. Seven children blessed this union, all of whom were with her during her last illness. She was sick only a week, but suffered intensely. She had a consciousness of the presence of God, and bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude. She spoke often of seeing heaven, and said "it was so fair, so beautiful." Just before she died she called each of her children to her bedside, and, tenderly embracing them, said, "Be good, and meet me in heaven." Her beautiful death was the fruitage of a good and useful life. She joined the Methodist Church when quite young, and was always a consistent and valuable member. Her place at church was never vacant, unless providentially kept away. She was kind to the poor and needy, and liberal to every good cause. Her loved ones and neighbors rise up and call her blessed. Accompanied by a large number of those who had known and loved her in life, her remains were carried to Raymond, Miss., and there laid away to await the resurrection of the just. L. CARLEY.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Doing not dreaming is the secret of success. Thinking out plans will not amount to anything unless the thought be followed by a determined will to execute. Not the faithful talker, but the faithful doer, leaves the broad mark of the work accomplished. "Not he that saith, Lord, Lord, but he that doeth my Father's will." Not the son who promised, but he who went, was the one who received the reward. "This one thing I do"—not "This one thing I think"—made a St. Paul. "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily." Going about continually doing good was the example left by Christ, and the promise is given "to them who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality—eternal life."—Parish Visitor.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes, Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to January, 1902. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

MY SERVICE.

I asked the Lord to let me do
Some mighty work for him;
To fight amidst his battle hosts,
Then sing the victor's hymn.
I longed my ardent love to show,
But Jesus would not have it so.

He placed me in a quiet home
Whose life was calm and still,
And gave me little things to do,
My daily round to fill.
I could not think it good to be
Just put aside so silently.

Small duties gathered round my way
What seemed of earth alone;
I, who had longed for conquests bright
To lay before his throne
Had common things to do and bear,
To watch and strive with daily care.

So then I thought my prayer unheard,
And asked the Lord once more
That he would give me work for him
And open wide the door;
Forgetting that my Master knew
Just what was best for me to do.

Then quietly the answer came:
"My child, I hear the cry;
Think not that mighty deeds alone
Will bring the victory.
The battle has been planned by Me,
Let daily life thy conquests see."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Senator Gallinger made a strong plea for the abolition of the "army canteen" in a speech on the Army Reorganization bill. He said that the Senate amendment to the bill, limiting the sale of liquors in the canteen to beer, was merely a mask; that beer was an intoxicant as much as whisky, and that what was wanted was the absolute abolition of the sale of intoxicants in the army. In addition to speaking as a senator, he spoke as a physician, he being an honored member of that profession, having practiced for years before entering the Senate. He quoted statistics showing that the steady use of intoxicants destroyed the constitution and resulted in premature death. He presented a list of officers in the Philippines who not only objected to the sale of intoxicants in the army canteen, but refused to allow it to be sold to the troops under their command, and said that the clergy of the land, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and every other person who had the interest of the young men of the army at heart were opposed to the "canteen."

The Evangelical annual week of prayer for the blessings of the past year and supplication for a continuance of them during the present year, is being observed by two series of daily prayer meetings; one from 4:15 to 5:15 P. M., at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, conducted under the auspices of the Evangelical ministers of the city, and one from 11 A. M to noon, at the Metropolitan M. E. Church, under the auspices of the Woman's International Union. Both are being well attended.

The latest news from China tends to confirm the predictions of those who have from the first declined to believe in an early settlement of the trouble, and have said that the Chinese would take advantage of every opportunity to prolong the negotiations, while pretending to wish to bring them to a close.

It is a characteristic that is both American and commendable to desire to be first in everything. Dr. Calvin J. Pollock, of Kirksville, Mo., desired to have the honor of making the first application for a U. S. patent in the twentieth century; and Messrs. C. A. Snow & Co., his Washington attorneys, succeeded in getting it for him.

A suggestion worthy of more than passing notice was made in Washington this week by Judge Frank Long, of Iowa. The subject under discussion was the urgent need of a uniform marriage and divorce law for all the States and Territories. Judge Long said: "I have often thought that a convention of the States to formulate regulations for the granting of divorces, as well as the control of trusts and other interstate matters, would be a wise thing. It might be brought about by the President inviting the States to join in conference, and calling a convention to which each State would be asked to send delegates. The Governor of each State might appoint, say, half a dozen of the ablest lawyers of the commonwealth, who could be authorized by the Legislature to pledge the faith of the State that whatever statutes agreed upon by the convention would be enacted into law. The convention could then meet as any other legislative body, and after mature deliberation, draft such common laws as seemed to the majority wise, reporting its decisions back to the several States for ratification. I only offer this as a suggestion, but it seems to me there ought to be some way in which the States could get together on common ground in a matter of such common interest to all."

Mr. Charles W. Coyle, of California, who is making a tour of the East in the interest of the fifth international convention of the Epworth League, in San Francisco, delivered several lectures in Washington this week, illustrated with handsome views of scenery in California and en route. The Washington Epworthians expect to send a creditable delegation to the convention.

Probably the most unique religious service in Washington is that which is conducted every Sunday in the Chapel of Trinity P. E. Church, by Rev. O. J. Whildin, who is a deaf mute, for the benefit of a small congregation of deaf mutes. There is no music, no sound of any sort, only the gesticulations and rapid movement of the hands and fingers of the minister and congregation when they jointly participate in the service, and of the minister alone when he preaches the sermon.

The new North Carolina Avenue M. P. Church was dedicated Sunday, three services being held during the day. Among the ministers present was Rev. A. W. Mather, a former pastor; Dr. J. S. Kirzer, pastor of the Congress Street Church; Rev. J. W. Kirk, pastor of the Central Church; Rev. J. W. Gray, pastor of the First Church; Rev. E. Pearce, pastor of Mount Tabor Church; Dr. L. Elderdice, president of the Westminster Theological Seminary; Rev. H. D. Elderdice, and Rev. A. Norman Ward, the present pastor.

Dr. Charles A. Dickey, of Philadelphia, moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., preached the dedicatory sermon in the Church of the Covenant, taking his text from St. Luke xix, 13—"Occupy till I come." Previous to the regular services the memorial window to the late Gardiner Greene Hubbard was unveiled. It represents the parable of the sower. In the center is a figure of heroic size with the last seeds dropping from his hand, while slightly in his rear are two harvesters. The background is a bank of clouds tinted by the last golden rays of a setting sun. Below is the inscription: "In Loving Memory of Gardiner Greene Hubbard, 1822-1897. In the morning sow thy seed, and at evening withhold not thine hand."

Washington, Jan. 9, 1901.

"THE LIGHT OF LIFE."

BY BISHOP KEENER.

Light was created before either Sun, Moon, or Stars. It was, therefore, not solar light, or astral, or lunar, that came into expression at the command, "Let there be light." It was the more subtile fluid which we now know to be the electricity of the atmosphere, whether expressed in the cloud by positive and negative currents, meeting in mutual adjustment, with thunder and lightning; or whether in the revolving motion of the electric motor, or in the light which it supplies from the air without combustion.

Electricity annihilates Time—that is, it gets there several hours before it starts; say from London, on the same day. Time is the notching of space by the motion of the planets, but the motion of electricity is instantaneous, from America to Europe, or entirely around the globe.

If such a solvent of all motion, throughout all space, and, in fact, of all other departments of nature, whether solid, fluid, or aerial, was created by the Almighty in the instant of his command, is it unreasonable to suppose that he made this round world, with its forests, floods, animals, and atmosphere, by repeated commands, with intervals of daily revolutions? These spaces of time enable us to apprehend the mighty achievement of the Divine Word, for we, ourselves, are the creatures of Time, constituted for endless time—that is, for Eternity.

In this statement of the creation of all things God himself pauses to contemplate the work; by the one Architect, the Word, the Son of God, without whom was not anything made that was made. He declares each survey to be "good!" It was all that Infinite Wisdom designed and Infinite Love wrought. This estimate gave to the whole creation its stamp, not of the thought, nor of the hand only, but of the heart of God. It was intended for one who was about to be framed after God's image—for Adam and Eve. When these fair creatures of Wisdom and Love crowned the work, they constituted the audience which the Father of men delighted to honor; and the whole creation was then declared "very good."

The first chapter of Genesis, and that of the Gospel of St. John, have a marked resemblance in their order of statement and in the order of creative energy. The first word of the Genesis chapter suggests this correspondence, "In the beginning," which is the first word of the St. John chapter. In these chapters the work of creation goes on with equal steps; in Genesis, God creates the heaven and the earth; in St. John, "The Word was with God, and was God; the same was in the beginning with God; all things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." The third verse of Genesis introduces Light; the fourth verse of St. John the Light of Life—the light that dispels not the darkness of nature, but of the human mind.

It was to this light God sent a witness—John the Baptist. He came to bear witness of the light that all men through him might believe. This was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. The Evangelist then describes the profound darkness that veiled the Son of God from the mind of man: He was in the world, a world made by him, but the world knew him not; he came to those who by revelation were the elect of God, but they received him not. His presence was with power; it brought to men the possibility of Sonship, even to them who believed on his name—nay, more, a birth, an actual, spiritual birth, and men became the sons of God.

This darkness was more impenetrable than that of Chaos, and it was an act of Mercy to provide a Messenger who should testify to the Son of God. For thirty years Christ dwelt among us, engaged in dispelling the shadow of death that shrouded humanity. He was the glory of God, "full of grace and truth." To this wonderful Person the Baptist testified, that although he came after, he was in truth before him; that he came from the bosom of the Father.

This testimony John followed up day by day, pointing out the sublime Person of the Son to his disciples. "The next day," says the Record, "seeing Jesus coming to him, he said, 'Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.'" To this declaration he adds that he saw the Spirit descending as a dove, and remaining on Jesus, directly after his baptism, as he went out of the water. "I saw it," he says, "and bear record that this is the Son of God." What could be more historic, yet supernatural, than is this record of the Baptist? Again a day intervenes, as when the turn of earth separated between the fiats of creative power. "Again, the next day after," says the record, "John stood and two of his disciples, and looking upon Jesus, as he walked, he saith, 'Behold the Lamb of God.'" Then Jesus himself speaks. "Jesus turned and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They say unto him, Rabbi, where dwellest thou?" They wished to see the home of the Son of God. "He saith unto them, 'Come and see:' they came and saw, and dwelt with him that day; for it was about the tenth hour." What a gracious host was this Infinite Majesty to these enquiring disciples of John!

The most fearful night that ever clouded earth was the darkness which the princes of this world did not realize, "for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory" (I. Cor. ii, 8). He was among us, the maker of all things, visible and invisible, whether of things in heaven or things in earth, thrones, principalities and powers, all; yet we knew him not. It was this blindness that Christ came to heal. That wonderful chapter, the ninth of St. John, displays in detail his mighty achievement: The Son of God bringing light to the blind; natural light first, and then spiritual light—the light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. This was Christ's life, which in itself held the Light of Life; the one element of all spiritual being. At this revelation of the True Light ten thousand radiant symphonies burst into expression, "Peace on earth, good-will to men, and glory to God in the highest." No wonder the blind man realized the infinite glory of his Benefactor, the one who had opened his eyes. When Christ said, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" he answered and said, "Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?" And Jesus said unto him, "Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee." And he said, 'Lord, I believe," and he worshiped him.

The exhortation of the letter to the Ephesians stirs the soul of every Christian, "Ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of Light, and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." And, oh, sinner, what a call as of the latest trump of God, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Here is resurrection power, the sleep of death, and the Light of Life:

"Great God! on what a slender thread
Hang everlasting things!
Th' eternal states of all the dead
Upon life's feeble strings.

"Waken, O Lord, our drowsy sense,
To walk this dangerous road;
And if our souls be hurried hence,
May they be found with God!"

—Watts.

WHAT WILL WE DO WITH IT?

BY BISHOP WARREN A. CANDLER.

In a speech before the Convention for Social Study, in Washington, D. C., on Oct. 30, Dr. L. G. Powers, Chief Statistician of the Census, is reported to have said:

"When completed, the present census will unquestionably show that the visible material wealth of the country has a value of ninety billions of dollars ($90,000,000,000), and that of this vast amount twenty-five billions ($25,000,000,000) have been added since 1890."

He is further reported to have said of this vast accumulation:

"It is the aggregated savings of a people who have fed, clothed and housed more than any equal number of human beings in any other land or time, and yet it is a saving better than all the people of the western continent had been able to make from the discovery of Columbus to the breaking out of the Civil War. It is a saving which represents more houses and buildings, more furniture in homes, more implements and machinery to assist man in his work, more and better means of communication, more good clothes, good books and personal adornment than the entire race had saved during all the countless ages of struggles from Adam to the declaration of our American independence."

Remarking upon this stupendous showing, the St. Louis Globe-Democrat says:

"In all the elements of material greatness this country is advancing by leaps and bounds. In aggregate wealth the United States is far in the lead of the United Kingdom, which stands second among the nations in this respect. When the country's wealth for 1900 is reported, a few months hence, it will undoubtedly be found to be up to or above the $90,000,000,000 mark. This is a greater aggregate of wealth than was in the entire world at the birth of the United States in 1776."

These amazing statements show:

1. That our nation is the richest that is or ever was on the planet.

2. That our wealth is recent wealth—not ancestral estates, but fresh treasure recently dug from the earth and brought to light by American industry and ingenuity.

3. That enormous as our present wealth is, we will be far richer soon. In 1860 we had scarcely a capital of $30,000,000,000, but, despite the losses of a destructive Civil War, we have in four decades doubled our capital twice, and lived luxuriously in the meanwhile. In the last of the four decades we laid by nearly as much as we had in 1860; nearly as much as the nation had accumulated during the first seventy-five years of its history.

Where does all this wealth-getting lead? If with a capital of $65,000,000,000 in 1890 we accumulated so rapidly that in 1900 we owned $90,000,000,000, what will be the sum of our holdings in 1910? Can it be less than $125,000,000,000? And what then? Is it not quite within reason to say that if our nation be not overtaken by some overwhelming disaster, the national wealth in 1950 will exceed $200,000,000,000?

But how about the probabilities of disaster?

Nothing in nature threatens us. In that direction every prospect pleases. Seas and mountains and rivers and valleys and seasons are our servants, pledged to faithful and unchanging service.

But what of other perils? There is no other peril outside of ourselves that need make us afraid. Our danger is in ourselves, and if disasters overtake us, they will be the disasters incident to degeneration.

All the nations which have risen and perished have died as suicides. They died not while their veins ran full and strong with the warm currents of healthy blood, kept pure by poverty and struggle. They staggered under self-inflicted blows inspired by brains heated by the intoxication of luxury and hearts corrupted by the surfeiting of wealth.

And we do well to take warning. The disaster which threatens us is wrapped up in this very wealth which we vainly imagine is our invincible defense. We are in danger of the doom which always befalls "the nations which forget God."

Moses foresaw such a peril for Israel while yet his people were a houseless herd in the wilderness, and said to them: "Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day; lest, when thou hast eaten and are full, and hast built goodly houses and dwelt therein; and when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied; then thine heart be lifted up and thou forget the Lord thy God, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage; and thou say in thine heart, My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth. But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant which he sware unto thy fathers, as it is this day. And it shall be, if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them, I testify against you this day that ye shall surely perish." (Deuteronomy viii.)

In a few centuries this wandering company reached natural greatness, forgot the warning of their greatest statesman and inspired law-giver, and were carried away to Babylon. There, as they sat down weeping by the rivers, with mastrung harps upon the willows, they saw another illustration of the principle they had forgotten, and which, by forgetting, they perished. The Babylonish King "walked in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon, and the King spake and said, 'Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?'" While the word was in the King's mouth there fell a voice from heaven, saying, "O King Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken; the kingdom is departed from thee."

How oft has the story been repeated in other lands and times! And yet the world will not learn the lesson.

Will we refuse to learn it? Will we rush to ruin down the same incline by which other nations, ancient and modern, have hurried to destruction?

Undoubtedly if we heed not the lesson of their fate, we must incur the pains of their doom.

We are now at the parting of the ways. We must, with our unprecedented treasure, practice an unparalleled benevolence, and thus save the world; or we must in unexampled selfishness, with the frenzy of limitless luxury, destroy ourselves.

And let no one imagine that the South, because not as rich as the North, is exempt from this danger of God-forgetting opulence. Our section is alarmingly prosperous, unless it were more pious. The North has got more, and it gives more. But we are keeping enough to corrupt us.

Last year there were over $60,000,000 given to higher education in the United States, and less than $5,000,000 was given to institutions in the South, and most of the $5,000,000 was to negro colleges from Northern philanthropists.

In the name of heaven, what do our people mean? What will they do with all their wealth? Will they heap up hoardings and invite national conflagration by the fuel they pile around themselves?

There are in the facts herein given fuel enough, if set afire, to burn this nation to ashes. And the anarchist on one side, and the trust-boss on the other, are walking dangerously near the huge, inflammable mass with torches in their hands.

May the new century lead us toward a heaven of benevolence and away from the hell of heathenish hoarding!—Southern Christian Advocate.

Baltimore has six branches of the Methodist family, giving it at least numerical leadership among the Protestant denominations of the city. Applying the Roman Catholic principle of estimating membership, it can claim a larger constituency than that church. Four of the six Methodisms of the city are Episcopal. More than half of the aggregate numerical strength is in the Methodist Episcopal Church.—Baltimore Advocate.

JESUS CHRIST, THE SAME.

BY EDWARD A. COLLIER, D. D.

Glorious King, although Thou art
Throned on Zion's holy hill,
Meek and lowly still Thy heart,
Grace and truth Thy lips distill;
Still the same Thy tender plea
"Come, ye weary and oppressed;
Come, ye toiling ones, to Me;
Come, and I will give you rest."

Still the same Thy saving might
As on raging Galilee,
Still, when tempests wild affright,
Thou canst hush the wind and sea.
Oft as storms around us sweep,
Dark the night and full of fear,
Come Thou, walking on the deep;
Speak Thy word of peace and cheer.

"Every manner of disease"
Great Physician, Thou canst heal;
Touched with our infirmities,
At Thy throne of grace we kneel.
Wounded, sick, to death brought nigh,
Grant us, Lord, from sin release;
Swiftly answer to our cry—
"Faith hath saved thee, go in peace."

On Thy cross of love and grief
Thou for cruel foes didst pray;
And unto a dying thief
Open paradise that day.
Now and evermore the same,
Unto us forgiveness give;
By Thy love, Thy cross of shame,
Raise us, Lord, with Thee to live.

BREATHING ROOM FOR THE SOUL.

There is something very suggestive in the thanksgiving which David returns to God for bringing him into "a large place." He had been beset by enemies, and had been compelled perhaps to hide away in a cave, and kept in narrow quarters, and so, when his enemies were overthrown and he was permitted to go out at will on the mountain or in the valley, to go freely in the open fields or in the town, to breathe the air of liberty with none to make him afraid, he would have, because of his past experience, a new sense of appreciation of the largeness of an unfettered, uncramped life.

I saw a man recently who lived for many years in the heart of a city, who had moved out into the suburbs, where he had a little ground, about, with chance for a garden and a few apple trees, and I asked him why he liked being out there so much better, and he replied: "Oh, I have a chance to turn round and to breathe."

The soul needs breathing room as well as the body. And to give it a chance to breathe well, we must not crowd it down too close with worldly things that can never furnish an atmosphere for it. The supreme folly of the rich man described by Jesus, whom God named "Fool," was that he undertook to feed his soul on the kind of goods which he could stow away in his barn. Many people are making the same mistake now. They crowd their lives so full of work and pleasure that appeal only to the temporary life that they smother the soul to death.

There are some simple things that help to give breathing room to the soul. One of them is Bible reading. The best soul atmosphere in the world is that which clings about the Word of God. We have a great deal to say now about condensed foods. And we have exhibitions once in a while showing the marvelous power of liquid air. There is more condensed spiritual atmosphere, if I may so speak, in the Word of God than anywhere else in the world. There are breezes stored up in the Psalms which a man may feel on the inner brow if he gives himself up to them for but a few moments. The water of life springs fresh and cool and inspiring from many a mountain range of Bible philosophy. A fragrance sweeter than that of wild flowers, and a charm more entrancing than from water lilies, may be breathed from the sayings of Jesus, and from the incidents of loving self-sacrifice and transformed living which one finds in the stories of early Christianity in the New Testament. If one will give up a certain amount of time every day to reverent reading of the Bible, the soul will have a chance to breathe.

Prayer is another source of spiritual atmosphere. Quiet contemplation of the divine existence, of God's nearness, of his loving care, the breathing out to him thanksgiving for past mercies and present joys, and the expression of the longings and desires of one's inner self, are soul-breathing. Especially is this true of secret prayer. To go alone into the closet and shut the door, shutting out troublesome thoughts of money and perplexing problems of expediency in daily living, and turning to God, seeking his guidance, opening the heart, and pouring out its confidence in loving trust to the Divine Friend, is for the soul's breathing like going out of some smoky city, where the air hangs low with fumes of oil and the dust of traffic, into the open country, where the breath of the fields and the woods sweetens the clear atmosphere through which the eyes look up to the stars.

Another way through which the soul finds breathing room is in doing good to others. Jesus kept his soul wholesome and sweet during his earthly pilgrimage, not only by much prayer and communion with God, but by going about doing good. Day by day he had the satisfaction of knowing that his deeds were blessings to others. And so his soul breathed constantly this atmosphere of helpfulness and blessing.

No man can have a wholesome, healthy, happy spiritual nature unless he gives the soul breathing room in unselfishly doing good deeds to his fellow men. Many a man who has been selfish and fretful, unhappy, spiritually diseased, has had his life transformed into joyous, spiritual health by being led into fellowship with Christ in bringing blessings to others.

Dr. Arthur Brooke points out how well Dickens pictures this in his "Christmas Carol." At the beginning of the story we have a portrait of Scrooge, a tight-fisted man, hard as a grindstone, sharp as a flint, from which no steel had ever struck out generous fire, secret and self-contained, and solitary as an oyster. Nobody ever stopped him on the street to say, with happy looks, "How are you?" Even the beggar never implored him for alms; no child ever looked up in his face to ask the time of day. He was rich, but dismal, morose, and blue. He had never done good to anyone. He had planned and toiled only for himself, but he was visited by three ghosts—the ghost of the past, the ghost of the present, and the ghost of the future; and they taught him a lesson. He became a good friend, a good employer, and a good man, and opened his heart and his purse to others, and his soul began to breathe, and happiness and beauty blossomed in the life that had been desolate and barren. I commend to you these three store-houses of condensed spiritual atmosphere, open to all: prayer, Bible reading, and unselfish service for your fellow-men.—Louis Albert Banks, D. D., in Epworth Herald.

A GOOD STYLE.

Style counts for a great deal—we mean, of course, style in the delivery of a discourse. Of all men, the preacher needs to acquire a good style, for the reason his success in influencing the people depends as much upon this as upon the subject matter of discourse. Posture, gesture and voice are the three things to be cultivated and made pleasing. No public speaker, if he would come to his best, can afford to ignore this fact. A good style or good taste in the pulpit go very far toward atoning for an empty message. Screaming and ranting, storming and stamping, are altogether out of harmony with reason. The effect of many a sublime theme has been destroyed by a total disregard of the rules of good speech. These are not little things in the life-work of the preacher; next to the message of life they are weighty and of vast importance.

We cut the above article from the Pacific Advocate because it is good, and we call up a few illustrations from the recollections of our past life. One brother was a very disagreeable speaker in his youth, made ugly faces, got his voice into the harsh tones, and his gestures were exceedingly awkward. People disliked to hear him, but he improved by giving attention to his delivery, and became a truly great preacher. The change was very marked.

Many years ago circumstances led me to use a written sermon in the pulpit, but it led to a sad failure. Much later than that the use of copious notes repressed my usual freedom of mind and feeling on one occasion, and the sermon was delivered under restraint and without full effectiveness. In a ministry of more than half a century I have never known a preacher to use a manuscript in the pulpit with entire ease to himself and general satisfaction to his hearers. In every instance there was something not just up to the idea of gospel preaching.

There have been many earnest preachers whose careless disregard of grammar and pronunciation had the effect of drawing attention away from their subject, and starting thought and conversation toward their mistakes—a very serious misfortune. It would seem that any conscientious lover of Christ and of souls would try hard to keep from leading the minds of hearers away from truth by a blundering use of words; but, alas! too often all that is heard from young people about a sermon is said in ridicule of its bad grammar and pronunciation! And this fact is surely enough to drive out of any preacher whatever of contempt he may have for correctness of speech. For Christ's sake he ought to learn that a noun in the singular number must have its verb in the same number, and that there is a right and a wrong way to pronounce all words.

Contempt for correctness of speech has no merit. It may be recklessness, but is not Christian courage, and falls far below a proper regard for what is becoming in work done for God, whose word requires every sacrifice laid on his altar to be "without blemish." Thought is good, and it is right to put the best of thought into a sermon, but the influence of noble reasoning will be spoiled if the preacher fails to put the emphasis in the right place, gives the wrong sound to his vowels, changes consonants from hard to soft, or from soft to hard, and yells just where he ought not to yell. Many fine sermons have failed to make the impression they should have made because the preacher's delivery was bad.

Now, let us have an all-round correctness, not all in elocution and oratory, nor chiefly consisting in delivery, but the soul filled with the Holy Ghost and perfect love, the mind wholly consecrated and well trained, the manners polite and courteous, and proper attention given to a correct delivery of God's truth.—Florida Advocate.

HELPING ONE'S SELF.

An eminent author has published a book on "Self-Help." The theme is interesting and the treatment fascinating. The most that men do is intended to help themselves. Some live for this alone. But the course by which men seek to benefit themselves often proves vain. Instead of furthering their own ends and promoting their own comfort and happiness, they are working against their own interest. This is true not only of vice and crime, but also of a large part of the more serious work of life.

The best way to help one's self is to help others. This is not the view worldly men take. They imagine that the more they do for others the less they have left for themselves. They get all they can, give as little as possible, and keep all they can. They do not give to help the poor, to build great institutions for educational and charitable uses, because they believe that giving will diminish their store and weaken themselves. When they give at all they try to do so in such a way that all men will know it in order to make it work for their own good after all. They give for themselves, and not for others.

How difficult it is to keep self from having too prominent a part. Is it easy for the preacher to keep self out of his sermon? for the singer to keep self out of the song? for the worshiper to keep self out of the prayer? Nature clamors for self. While the spirit seeks after God and the good of others, the flesh still pushes self to the front.

If we could only understand, and have courage to trust, the philosophy of the gospel, we should have little trouble about self. The science of Christianity reverses nearly all the maxims of the world and all the wisdom of the sages. He that will save his life must lose it, and he that will lose his life for the sake of righteousness shall save it. He that will be the greatest must condescend to be servant of all. He that will be richest must give all he has. He shall have a hundredfold in this world, and in the world to come everlasting life.

No man shall ever find happiness while seeking it for himself. The self-centered man can not be happy. He may find gold, he may acquire knowledge, he may achieve fame, he may have pleasure in the world, but all these can not pour one ray of genuine bliss into a self-centered soul. Let one who is unhappy do what he can to relieve the sorrows of others, and his own sorrow will be turned into joy. Let the burdened soul do what he can to bear the burdens of others, and his own burdens shall become light as air. Let him whose life is bitter begin to do what he can to sweeten the lives of others, and his own life will become sweeter still. Let him whose life is narrow do what he can to enlarge the lives of others, and his own life will become broad and deep and rich. "Give, and it shall be given to you, good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over."

When life's utmost verge shall be reached and we shall look back on the journey, the only part that will afford us any comfort and satisfaction will be that which we have devoted to helping others. Then shall we see and know that all we have done for self alone is nothing but wood, hay, and stubble, which, like a parchment scroll, shall shrivel up and turn to dead ashes in the flames of the judgment of God, while all that we have done for others with a sincere heart is gold, silver, and precious stones, built into the kingdom of God to endure forever.—Christian Advocate.

NO PLACE AT HOME.

I met him on a street corner—a bright, black-eyed lad of perhaps fourteen summers. I had seen him there evening after evening, and wondered whether there was no one who knew the temptations he encountered. I made friends with him, and won his confidence. Then I questioned him kindly in regard to his spending so much time in the streets.

"I know," he said, looking up at me in such a frank, winning way, that I could not help thinking what a noble man he might make, "the street is not the best place for a boy, but you see there's no place for me at home."

I was surprised and pained at the answer.

"How is that?" I asked.

"Well, I have two grown-up sisters, and they entertain company in the parlor every evening. They give me to understand that I am 'a third party,' and not wanted. Then papa is always tired, and he dozes in the sitting-room, and does not like to be disturbed. It's pretty lonesome, you see; so I come down here. It was not always so," he went on. "Before grandma died I always went up to her room, and had a jolly time. Grandma liked boys."

There was a quaver in the voice that told of a sorrow time had not yet healed.

"But your mother?" I suggested.

"Oh, mamma!—she is only a reformer, and has no time to spend with me. She is always visiting the prisons and work-houses, trying to reform men, or writing articles on how to save the boys."

"And her own boy in danger?"

"Yes; I am not half as good as I was before grandma died. I am getting rough, I am afraid. There does not seem to be anyone to take an interest in me, so it does not much matter."

It was hard, bitter truth; and yet I knew that this was not the only boy who needed a wise, gentle hand to guide him through the dangerous period.

Mothers! Make home the brightest spot on earth for your children. Take an interest in their sports; make yourself young for their sakes.

I think the saddest, most hopeless thing I ever heard from a boy's lips was that sentence: "There is no place for me at home."—The Household.

SPEAKING THE TRUTH IN LOVE.

Truth is conformity to reality. To speak the truth is to represent things as they really are. It is the duty of all Christians at all times to speak the truth. Trickery of speech, suggestion of what is untrue, attempts at any kind of deceit, violate the law of Christian truthfulness. All statements of occurrences, all declarations concerning ourselves or others, should be the simple, unvarnished truth. Sincerity is a sterling virtue of Christian character. It is that part of the Christian's preparation for the battles of Christ against evil, without which all his armor is rendered unserviceable. "Stand therefore," says the apostle, "having your loins girt about you with truth." No successful stand against the evil one without this. As a flowing ungirt robe is to a warrior, impeding his movements, tripping his feet, leaving vital parts exposed, so is the lack of truth to a follower of Christ.

It is a sin to which unregenerate nature is peculiarly liable. The devil deceived our first parents with a lie to their utter ruin, and the stamp of that ruin has been on the race ever since in this natural likeness to the father of lies. Good men are more easily led astray by the inclination of the old nature in this respect. David felt it, and cried in an agony of heart, "Remove far from me the way of lying." Abraham succumbed to it. Peter, even after his fall and restoration, was guilty of dissimulation, and was reproved by Paul for it. We may yield to a "lying spirit" in our testimonies as Christians by exaggerations and additions to our experience. We may violate the truth in simple narration by remembering what would have been best to say or do, and adding it as the thing actually said or done. We may color a statement in argument. We may purposely misquote others. We may make covert insinuations or general representations which are not in accordance with facts, in distorted proportions, or we may suppress facts which are necessary to a knowledge of the whole truth.

To be like our Master, we must be transparent in word and deed. We must be able to say with Paul, "We have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty." "Our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward."

Truth and love are bound together as component parts of Christian character. Some translators render the words, "speaking the truth in love," in this form, "living in truth and love." The idea is the same. We can not live in the truth unless we live in love, and we can not live in love unless we live in truth. A man who loves his brother can never act untruly toward him, and a man who lives in truth can not do anything but seek his brother's good in the spirit of love. And this is the hope of Christ's servant in proclaiming the gospel to the lost. His only prospect of success is that he has God's truth in his hand and in his life, and God's love in his heart.—Mission Bulletin.

DESIRES SATISFIED.

Most men have what they really want. That is, if a man puts his life into a want, or puts a want into his life, so that he is not content to live without that one thing which has his heart, he is likely to get it, and not likely to stop until he has got it. The trouble with men generally is, that their thoughts and desires do not center on one thing at a time, so that they feel they must have that one thing, or die. They have longings passing through them, but not possessing them; and they fail to rise up with determination, and to press forward without stopping or swerving until they have reached and compressed the one end of their desires. A hungry man usually gets food, and a thirsty man drink. A man finds time, however busy he is, to make the one call of love or business or sympathy which he really wants to make, when it ought to be made; and he takes time to write the one letter he wants to write, even though he leaves fifty other planned letters unwritten. If it is money, or knowledge, or spiritual power that he reaches out after with utter longing, he gets it, sooner or later. Let no man, then, complain that he really wants better things than he has, but he can not get them. The difficulty with him is, that he does not really want the better things which he says and thinks he wants, and so he is content to live on without them, and to take lesser things as he goes along. The words of God with reference to the highest blessing, as applicable to the lower blessings also, are: "Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart."—Sunday-School Times.

DIVINE COMMUNION.

There is no possible way of finding comfort amid the providences that come to us in life but in an intimate and habitual communion with God. Much as we may desire to avoid providences, often of an afflictive and disciplinary character, our Heavenly Father sees it wise to administer his government over us in a manner that often hides his love to our human thought. Doubtless, in this way, he would keep us from pride and vanity, impress upon us our absolute dependence upon his guidance, instill a deeper religious conviction in our minds, perfect more fully our ideals of a true life, and clarify our vision of spiritual things. But, theorizing thus, as we often do, how few accept his way with unruffled composure, rejoicing that we are in his hands! Such blessed rest in God comes to us only through one well-trodden path—the path of holy prayer. We do not mean an approach to the mercy-seat merely at stated times and in formal utterances, but a constant drawing near to him in the silent depths of devotion, in the soul's unuttered supplications, in the hourly spiritual contact of the human with the divine heart. But this power to pause amid conflicting uncertainties, and let God give light upon the path in his own good time, is not the product of human philosophy. This ability to wait until he shall solve the problem belongs only to souls that are constantly closeted in his presence. Helping him to decide difficult questions is one of his ways of "rewarding them openly."

And who will say that this is not a rich reward for obeying our Lord's command, "Enter into thy closet"? Can anything surpass such comfort as is found here? Toiling, weary pilgrim, wherever thou art found, enter into the inclosure of prayer, and abide very near to him who "seeth in secret." Oh, what safety is here!—Methodist Recorder.

THE TWO CENTURIES—A MIDNIGHT MEDITATION, 1900-1901.

It is the silent meeting and parting of two centuries—the century of our birth and the century of our death!

To the old—adieu! To the new—a DIEU! We are wholly through with the dead century—adieu! For the new and living century we greatly need God's grace and aid: therefore, to the new—a DIEU!

But hold! Do we need God's grace any more for our to-morrows than for our yesterdays? Is not the past present with him who is from "everlasting to everlasting"? Are not the forces of the remotest past still active, its laws still-binding, its consequences still following, its facts still living in consciousness and still interwoven in the texture of character?

It is not so easy to dismiss the obtrusive and unwelcome past. It can not be done by simply forgetting, nor by the touch of a talisman; not by the utterance of a syllable, nor by the observance of a sacrament. A careless "adieu" will not break that spell! Sin does not wear out by lapse of time. We can not let go of the past except in one way, and that is God's way. A miracle of transmutation is necessary. And it is God's work; his work of mercy through his work of righteousness in Jesus Christ. Therefore turn over the past to God!

How far into the new century shall each one of us go? To God we leave this, for he alone knows.

What shall be the measure of our personal joy and sorrow? What good shall grow out of our past? All such questions we must leave to God.

And when this new century shall have grown old, "where amid the vast dominion of the all-creating One" shall each one of us be found? We leave this problem also to God, for he does know; and knowing his love to be commensurate with his knowledge and his power, we are content to leave our past, to consecrate our present, and to commit our future to God our Father—"the King eternal, immortal, invisible; the only wise God, to whom be honor and glory unto the ages of the ages. Amen."

Let us, therefore, always hope and never despair! Let us daily live in the light of our Father's unfailing love!—Bishop Vincent.

Our Heavenly Father always draws us with the cords of love. How slowly do we respond to his gentle impulses! He draws us to exercise a more simple faith in him; but we have not yet attained to Abraham's confidence: we do not leave our worldly cares with God. Our meager faith brings leanness into our souls; we do not open our hearts wide, though God has promised to fill them. Does he not this day draw us to trust him? Can we not hear him say: "Come, my child, and trust me. The veil is rent; enter into my presence, I am worthy of thy fullest confidence; cast thy cares on me. Shake thyself from the dust of thy cares, and put on thy beautiful garments of joy."—Selected.

THE TRUE SOURCE.

Editor The Ram's Horn:

In the last issue of The Ram's Horn I noticed this paragaph, which particularly impressed me: 'Revivals are not gotten up; they are sent down." I believe that this is a fact to which we preachers need our attention called very frequently. I enclose a few verses which the remark inspired. Fraternally,

W. G. HARBIN.

Moorhead, Miss.

The preacher sat at his desk one night,
His daily task was done;
He'd visited the people right and left,
And prayed with every one.

He brought his barrel of sermons out,
And conned o'er many a text,
For his church was dead, and the preacher knew
He must get up a revival next.

He laid his plans in a careful way,
He chose his subjects well;
For the church was cold; the town was "warm,"
And every sermon must tell.

He had a sermon for lazy ones
In the vineyard, to begin;
And some of the scathing, blistering sort
For the motley crowd of sin.

And satisfied, the good man knelt,
And hope filled up his cup,
While he prayed for the Holy Ghost to help
Him get that revival up.

Then he slept and dreamed, and thought he stood
In a lonely and barren place,
And a crowd of thirsty, perishing sheep
Lifted pleading eyes to his face.

And he knel't and clawed, and scratched in the ground,
In an effort wild and vain,
To dig to where the water was,
And draw it up to the plain.

And the thirsty flock sank down in the dust,
And perished, one by one;
And the parson dog in the hard dry ground,
But of water found he none.

Until at last, in wild despair,
He looked toward the sky,
And called to his God: "O, Lord! O, Lord!
Send water, for they die!"

And a cloud spread over the brazen sky,
And its precious treasure spilled;
And the water ran in the hole he dug,
Until the hole was filled.

And the thirsty, perishing sheep of his flock
Drank 'till their thirst was slaked,
And the minister shouted aloud in his sleep,
Shouted, and then he waked.

And he pondered his dream, and pondered it well,
For he knew its doctrine was sound;
For men can't get a revival up
Unless God sends it down.

Items from the Field.

FRANKLINTON, LA.

I reached my new field, Franklinton circuit, on the last Saturday of December, and the end of 287 miles' move. My family will come over in about two or three weeks. I have had a kind reception. The people are generous and hospitable. We hope for a successful year's work.

Yours in Jesus,

R. M. BLOCKER.

FROM BRO. W. J. PORTER.

On account of sickness in the family of my predecessor, Bro. McManus, I had to rent a house, which I secured in Hammond, La., where we were cordially received Saturday, the fifth instant. Preached to good congregations in Hammond yesterday. I find that Bro. McManus was abundant in labors, and is well reported by the brethren. This field seems to be white unto harvest and needeth more labors. Hope, however, to be of some service in this part of the vineyard.

GLEN ALLEN, MISS.

I am now very comfortably domiciled at Glen Allen, on the bank of Lake Washington, this being my first visit and also my first charge in the great Mississippi Delta, and I am very much pleased at present, and think I shall be delighted with my work for this year. It has never been my privilege to live in a community the people of which were more generous, kind-hearted, refined and hospitable. They bought a parsonage and furnished it and had all things ready, and when our house hold goods arrived we moved in, and, oh! such another pounding as they gave us. Such as flour, sugar, coffee, ham, bacon, grits, baking powder, rice, macaroni and other things nice and numerous, and when Christmas came they just sent us cakes, candles and other delicacies liable to make the preacher take courage and feel invigorated, and make his poor wife and little ones smile.

I think by Autumn, if they continue feeding me as they are now doing, I can have the hay I receive all nicely baled and sent to our very delicate, feeble, and modest, but dearly beloved "Gilderoy," a stationer of Oxford fame, who, I think, needs it more than your unworthy and delicate scribe. But enough of fun. Let us try, by the grace of God, to make this the greatest year, spiritually, educationally, and financially, the North Mississippi Conference has ever known. We can do it if we will only apply our hearts, brains, minds, souls, time, influence, any and all the powers and energies we possess, to the glorious cause of our blessed Redeemer.

Yours for education and Christianity,

BROOKLYN CIRCUIT.

I was appointed as junior preacher with Bro. W. L. Hightower to the Brooklyn charge by the Mississippi Annual Conference at its recent session in Brookhaven, but did not reach our new field of labor until the fourth instant.

Leaving my mother's home, near Hazlehurst, Dec. 31, 1900, we, after traveling more than one hundred miles by private conveyance, reached the parsonage in the small, but growing town of Brooklyn. As we journeyed hither we shared the hospitalities of our good friend, Bro. McDonald, who continues to abide in the parsonage at Tryna. He had planned to have a watch-night service at Bahala's Chapel, but inclement weather interfered. The kindness we received at his hands will not soon be forgotten; and his home, how like the Palace Beautiful, where Christian found so much to encourage and strengthen him as he journeyed towards the Celestial City. We were loath to leave so pleasant a place, but our command was to "Go."

So we came on to the home of Bro. Isaac Applewhite's, whose kind, Christian hospitalities we had shared some two years ago in company with the Rev. W. M. Williams. Kindness was also shown us by Bro. John Davis, whose home had more than once sheltered the now sainted T. S. West.

Reaching Hattiesburg, we went immediately to the home of our genial-hearted presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Simmons, where we remained over night, and the following day we measured the twenty miles that lay between that city and this place. There was a superabundance of mud and water along a good portion of the way, but Bryan, our faithful horse, brought us safely on. Soon after our arrival here our co-worker, Bro. Hightower, handed us, as a Christmas gift from the Gulf and Ship Island R. R. Company, a "pass," which entitles us to free travel over this road during this Conference year. As the Brooklyn circuit embraces the larger portion of the territory adjacent to this G. and S. I. R. R., between Gulf Port and Hattiesburg, this means to us a saving of fully $30. Was ever a poor mortal more highly favored than me? Such kindness upon the part of our benefactors will surely be rewarded.

Bro. Hightower, our senior preacher and co-laborer, though small in stature, "towers high" in intelligence and usefulness. We have ten monthly appointments, which will doubtless keep us both well employed. But who could be contented with nothing to do? We made a feeble effort at preaching here on yesterday to a full house, both morning and evening. The contractor commenced work on our church at this place to-day, and we hope to complete it by March.

THE LIVING CHRIST.

The Christ whom we worship and adore is not the pallid and suffering Christ who was nailed to the cross and afterwards laid in the grave, but the victorious Christ who rose on the morning of the third day, ascended later into the heavens, and sitteth now and for evermore at the right hand of the Majesty on high. All power in heaven and earth has been given into his hands. He is head over all things to the church.

Though throned in glory, he still yearns over the church that he has purchased with his own blood. In the early days "he gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Nor has he ceased in those later ages to send similar gifts to men. Every true minister of religion, no matter when nor where he arises, is a direct bestowment from his hands.

It is this fact of a living and active Christ that guarantees and secures an ever-living church. What a world of meaning is folded up in those words which he spoke on the night before his crucifixion: "Because I live ye shall live also." The life which is in him as a source or fountain flows down through the channel of a true faith into the hearts of all who are his. Let those who will call this a mystical word. It is just as mystical as the gospel, no more and no less. "I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing." Even deeper is that other figure in which our Lord is called the Head of the body, every believer being a member in particular.

There are thousands of Christians dwelling in every land under the sun belonging to every rank and class, and representing every shade and degree of intelligence, who have the witness in themselves that their Lord is alive—else how could he stir such mighty tides of life in their souls? Can that which is dead quicken and sustain life? To ask the question is to answer it.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

But more wonderful than his teaching is the fact that Jesus only began to be a force in the world when he ceased to breathe. His ethical standards are now universally regarded as not only the best yet taught, but ideal and perfect, while his teachings concerning God and man, the compensations of wrong doing, sickness, sorrow, death, most of which found fullest expression during that last week, are the dearest possessions of all who are seeking light on the mysteries of our earthly existence. His influence has grown young "without ceasing," and his story even now "melts the noblest hearts." A hitherto unfelt force came into the world from the last hours of Jesus on the earth. Even Renan calls him "This sublime person who each day still presides over the destinies of the world."—Dr. A. H. Bradford.

A STATEMENT.

Dr. Boswell came to the city the last of December preparatory to taking charge of the ADVOCATE as publisher and editor. When he approached Dr. Black for a settlement of the business, he found that there was a wide difference of opinion upon what constituted an equitable and just settlement of the business. They were nearly diametrically opposed each in what he thought was the proper method of arranging the finances in hand. After some extended consultation with the local members of the Publishing Committee, Dr. Boswell, thinking there was no chance for a settlement, resigned as editor and publisher, and returned to Nashville. The president of the Publishing Committee then was forced to call the committee.

Dr. Black, the next morning after Dr. Boswell left, presented a compromise proposition looking to a settlement of the business without further delay. The chairman of the Publishing Committee was forced to call a meeting of the committee in order to arrange the settlement of the business with Dr. Black, as he and Dr. Boswell were not agreed. The committee met on the morning of the ninth instant. All were present except Dr. Sawyer, who was detained by sickness. After a full discussion of the business, with Dr. Black present, stating his position fully, and the position of Dr. Boswell being presented, there was an amicable and satisfactory settlement reached, there being concessions granted upon the part of both sides.

Dr. Boswell having notified the committee he would serve, provided a satisfactory arrangement was made with Dr. Black, was re-elected editor and publisher by the unanimous vote of those present. The order of the committee was that the contract was to be for three years. Dr. Boswell will be down to take charge for next issue. S. S. KEESER, Chairman.

WITNESSES TO THE TRUTH.

The Great Teacher put a new value upon truth by taking it out of the realm of abstraction and mere theory, and developing it into that which was pre-eminently to dwell not so much in the mind as in the heart of man; not mere theories, but to become emotion life being. No wonder that one with ridicule asks, "What is truth?" when all the Grecians of that day and scribes in their life were at the antipodes with that truth, though they professed to be ardent lovers. Christ came into the world, so he announced, for this end, to be a witness to the truth. All his followers from that day to this, if following in his footsteps, stand for the truth not merely sponsors, but witnesses that have thrown all the weight of their characters into their testimony. They are not merely believers in it who endorse a theory of truth, who believe in one line of reaching conclusions, but in a more intense form they are to embody it within their own living. All truth claims for a dwelling-place in that secret and holy place of our being, the soul—from thence it is to color all the life. Truth in the inward parts, so that a man would speak the truth in his heart. It is to be the very power in their lives which lines them off from the rest of humanity; they stand forth living witnesses to that which is far more than theory, than a chain of reasoning or a law merely of the perfect science, but a living energy that abides as the highest and purest laws of our being.

To be witnesses we must be competent by our knowledge of the truth. Do you know the truth; has it made you free? Broken the bands, unloosed your bonds of spiritual death, brought you out into the liberty of sons of light, the children of God? Have you given your mind and heart over into the leadership of that spirit of truth who surely will lead you into that glorious knowledge of the law of life? There is no competency which will avail, but a knowledge that is experimental in the deepest and largest sense. Who can tell the secret of that law of the Lord, who declare it, but one who has been indoctrinated by the spirit of truth? How far short all other mental knowledge, all merely theoretical learning of the laws of pardon and salvation. How can you say what we have known we declare it unto you? Competency thus takes in a new knowledge, not merely of sight, but of that which has become a part of the consciousness always abiding with us. Do you bear the name of Christian, yet not a competent witness for the truth?

A faithful witness was one of the encomiums passed upon Christ's testimony. So with his followers none but the faithful shall at last be crowned for their fellowship with him as a witness in the midst of the false, the untrue of time. Within your own heart are you faithful there to the truth; do you speak it there; do you keep it there; is your heart true, and are you true to it? There is a world all our own within, if false at core, will be false all through. Truth in the inward parts, said the Psalmist. It takes much persistent, earnest effort to be faithful to it in your own heart. You can hold it down in unrighteousness, be treacherous to that knowledge which you have in your own heart. Are you faithful in your secret chamber, where God's eye only discerns? There is a faithful witnessing to it without which must make your testimony public. You, as a Christian, must stand for the truth. You must be unabashed by the frown of the world, clear in your maintenance of knowing and living that truth. With a courage that will not let the lust for fame, the enrapturing excitements of pleasure, the thirst for wealth, the love of popularity, that pitiable fear of the voice of the people, nor any other strong power that shall assail you in the act of standing with your Lord. How often these all have brought up the witnesses that should have been faithful unto death. Have you ever sold out your knowledge, by holding it in abeyance for a time, failing to confess when that critical and opportune time for you to stand unblanched in the presence of those who were the secret enemies of the truth? Glittering wealth has slain its tens of thousands who were found wanting when the truth needed to be declared. Faithful we must prove even unto death, like our Lord.

Witnesses in that highest sense which far outstrips all mere testimony in earthly courts, we must throw our very life into the testmony. That was where Christ as Teacher far excelled all that earth has ever seen or heard; he could and did throw his whole life into his testimony. He gave not merely the ultimate truth on any given subject, the whole of it, the perfected truth which had no complement, but he was that truth himself. He was the truth. So every one of us, in a pre-eminent sense, are to throw our very lives into the testimony we give to the world. We not only believe in love that is dwelling in our heart, but we propose to live it as far as it is within our power. We not only discredit egotism, conceit, pride, but we are going to live in humility, meekness and, as far as possible, follow in the steps of our meek and lowly Master who came into the world to serve. We not only believe in forgiveness and pardon, but we will, by the grace of our Lord, show forth our own peace by a living character strong in its lines. With truth in our hearts we will live in all godly sincerity, eschewing all flattery, all dubieness of life, wishing all men well and endeavoring to carry out that line in a holy walk. Discarding all the false in every form, in every attitude of life. Lovers of the truth, holding it as one of the most sacred things in our existence, manifesting it in all kindliness to our fellows.

Let us call upon that mighty Spirit to aid us in thus throwing our life into this testimony by living with the Christian graces adorning our lives as our Master did with the truth embodied in his own walk. Let us not by word merely speak of faith, but manifest that power in our life among men. In this highest sense adorning the truth we have professed before men. Throwing our lives into this testimony with an unfaltering courage, with a devotion that would sell all else rather than barter our knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ. It is this form of testimony at last is alone to count with the world that which puts up its very life upon the secret of the Lord within a heart. Are the truths of salvation held in light esteem about you, my friend? Look within, see if you have been a faithful witness; have you thrown your life into your testimony? Are the great truths of purity, godliness, held in ridicule around you? Do they say, like this one old, "What is Godliness?" We have heard of it, we have read of it, but what is it, where is it? The Lord forgive if such a question can be justly asked where we have been walking as professed followers for, maybe, ten or twenty years. May the Holy Spirit help us to be able to throw more of our lives day by day into our witnessing for the truth. May we be empowered to embody more of that mighty gospel truth into our characters each day we live. To exemplify the truth in daily life is confessing Christ; to merely believe, give mental assent is a profession of Christianity. A subscription to a creed will not avail; it must be crystallized in our lives.

K.

"THE LIGHT OF THY COUNTENANCE."

There is no view of parental love that is more charming than to see the face of a parent beaming with that strange light of loving pride in a son or daughter. The grandfather in some grandchild, he is all attent to hear what is to be said, and all that is uttered is clothed by this loving devotion, with a value that appears extravagant no doubt to the third party. What a shining face love adorns them with! Who can describe that weird light of love that shines forth from such a face? It is this no doubt the Psalmist takes to indicate the blessing of our Heavenly Father who thus lifts upon us the light of his countenance. In other places it is spoken of as God causing his face to shine upon us. To walk in the loving joy and pride of an earthly parent is indeed high felicity, and well worthy of the most devoted obedience and reverence for our parents; but what of that superlative joy of having that Heavenly Father shine upon our pathway with beams of divine love? It is not surely merely the thought of divine glory which shall be like that light that lit up the face of Moses when he came down from the mount after receiving the law from God's hands, from which the children of Israel shrunk back and requested that the face of Moses should be veiled. "Moses wist not that his face shone," but the host shrunk back in fear and awe at that supernal glory that wreathed his countenance, and they asked him to veil his face, while speaking to them. That was no doubt the light of divine glory from the person of God in his ineffable holiness. This light is that of approval of loving endorsement of life, in its leading purposes and deeds. "Turn us and cause thy face to shine upon us" is the sentence utilized in another passage by the Psalmist, who evidently revelled in this thought of intimate interest that the Heavenly Father had in his life, following his very footsteps like a mother's eye follows through a room or company the movements of the daughter, the pride of her life.

This reveals that Face with the light of love and benevolence beaming from it, flashing a strong, clear radiance upon the pathway of an earnest child who in reverence and loyal devotion is endeavoring to walk in uprightness of life. It may be it is this light growing brighter that makes the pathway of the just shine more and more until it breaks into perfect day, like the rising sun that throws out its golden outriders of light till the full-orbed dawn comes upon the whole horizon. The just growing nearer and nearer to that Heavenly Father have this light from his face intensified and glowing with a diviner radiance.

This was one of the forms of blessing the children of Israel first uttered by Aaron, "The Lord make his face to shine upon thee;" so it is carried down the ages. There is no language that can convey more intimate loving interest in one than to have the Face of our Heavenly Father shining upon our pathway. This is the blessing which Israel was coveting when in calamity they prayed for him to turn us and make thy face to shine upon us. When they were under his shining face all was well: when that face turned away in disapproval they knew there was imminent peril, for it turned away because he was of purer eyes than to behold sin. To have that eye look upon us in divine compassion and love is surely life. If he will not regard our prayer when there is iniquity in the heart, how much more assuredly he can not shine upon that pathway which has selfishness, pride of life, lust for self, thirst for mere honor of men. He turns away his face from such professed followers who are lost to that true felicity of his approving glance upon life.

The eye of God fixed upon a single life to some seems to be contracting the thought of him who fills immensity, but our sentence thus narrows for a time that vision that takes in the vast universe. It is the eye fixed upon the footsteps of a single soul, beaming upon the pathway of a lonely one who walks far apart from all men, or upon that of one who is in the midst of impingement and contact of ten thousand other lives. Yet that face shines in approval and pours that loving endorsement into that soul by the Holy Spirit's impress. Yes, all our life can be stepped off in the "light of his countenance." Walking in it gives us that thought of progressive life, and yet that constant approval of our Heavenly Father who thus smiles upon the whole course of faithful children. There is nothing can compensate for being lost in the mass, so there is no thought of God's love so glorious as thus to be singled out and have his smile light up our pathway in this world of sin. Some minds think of God looking upon humanity in multitudes, never singling out a life, but this gives emphasis to this light flashing along a narrow footpath of a solitary soul.

There is also the thought of ever abiding under the presence of our Father, moving in his presence, and thus having a light constantly upon our way. It is the view of highest life here introduced, always walking in the presence of an ever-approving Father whose approbation lights up the pathway by divine love radiating from the face of our God. The Holy Spirit is to shine in our hearts so we are to see the glory of God in the face of Christ; then as children we are bid walk before him and revel in this light of his loving approval upon the whole course of our lives. The lives of Christians need not be those of an ever-changing vision of God, now full of light, then his face turned away in disapproval and condemnation, but a path radiant with this light. Oh! to keep ourselves approved of God, with his benign light of love upon our life. Walking in his presence ever under the discerning gleam of that eye will lose all its terror if you become conscious that it is full of compassion and mercy towards you in your weakness, even more full of deepest affection for you in your struggles, trials and conflicts, while moving ever to him as the center of your being. Having this approbation continuously, is the joy of life that dwells within, unalloyed by the disapproval of any other being in the universe. This One always allaying the fears of conscience by his voice saying, "Fear not, my son, the victory shall be thine." Walking in this light which shall finally bring us to his presence. To that city where there is no sun nor moon, they are useless, for the glory of God will lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. We must walk here in the light of his countenance, that we may dwell forever in that effulgent glory where Christ is the Light forevermore. K.

A delightful reception was tendered Rev. Thomas B. Clifford and his family, last Monday night, by the members of the Dryades Street Church. A large number were present. Music, recitations and refreshments were included in the programme.

RELIGIOUS INTEREST.

One of the characteristic expressions of our modern life is the eagerness with which people devour the newspapers. No influence is more conspicuous than this great medium of the thought and actions of the civilized world. In a literary way it meets the wishes, if not the needs, of a very large proportion of our people. Many men have not the time or inclination to read large or substantial works upon questions of the day, or matters of social and scientific interest. And it is true now, as it has always been, that men's opinions are generally the result of the thinking of other men, who, by reason of superior knowledge or special gifts of expression, are able to lead others. The average man wants his information in condensed form, and he welcomes clear-cut interpretations of the problems which are vitally involved in the common life of society. It is for these reasons that journalism has risen to a place of extraordinary and permanent influence. It is accessible, cheap, and encyclopedic in its range. The new century is likely to see large and useful developments in the power of the press. Much of it is already good, but a great deal is pagan, so far as moral and spiritual influences are concerned. Whether there will ever be great Christian dailies or not, is a question; and, even if there could be, they will never make void the need for specifically religious journals. And this need has never been greater than now. Nor has there ever been a time when a virile religious press would be more welcome than now. Godless and guilty as the world is, in the hearts of men there is an undying interest in religious matters. The time is calling for a vigorous and clear-cut presentation of religious truth.

For one thing, there is the perpetual menace of false doctrine. The multiplicity of isms and theories concerning religion are a constant source of danger to the unarmored adherents of the church. False doctrine and the most seductive perversions of the truth are being so propagated as to invade all ranks, and to pervert and seduce almost the very elect. Our people are open to persuasion and attack from every side. It is a singular fact that the progress of all these delusions is due more to the printed page than to the voice from the platform and pulpit. We must meet all this by the circulation of our religious literature. The pulpit can not do all of this work. It is designed more for the positive enunciation of truth and persuading men to immediate action. Our pulpit work must be reinforced by the reading of sound doctrine by the people. As a protection for our people, we must circulate our own papers. We must furnish their minds and nourish their hearts with the best literature at our command.

Again, the tone of popular reading is secular, unspiritual, and much of it diabolical. We must supply the antidote to the mental poison everywhere prevalent. And we can not do this unless we circulate the literature of the church. That man who fails to promote the spread of good books and papers among his people is positively negligent in the discharge of his pastoral duties. The matter must be put in this shape before we can secure a conscience upon this point. To say the least of it, it is a very great want of administrative ability to ignore such a powerful aid in the discharge of the work of the ministry. All of our enterprises languish because of the failure to impart to the people adequate information. If we wish to maintain enthusiasm and active interest in the missionary and educational work of the church, we must inform the church. A fully informed church is sure to be an active church. An intelligent membership will rally to the preacher with a zeal supported by permanent conviction.

In all of this the laity have their responsibility. The ministry can do much, but our membership must awake to the fact that they must be a reading as well as a praying people. No people in this age can grow upon ignorance. An intelligent consecration to the work of Christ depends upon an intelligent estimate of the extent and nature of that work. May this year witness a great movement to sow down this country of ours with thoughts and facts which shall kindle the hearts of God's people with a mighty purpose to hasten the coming kingdom of our Lord and his Christ! P.

THE COMING REVIVAL.

From every quarter comes the cry for a great revival during this opening year of the twentieth century. At the North the leaders of all the evangelical churches are sounding the note, not merely of earnest desire, but of positive faith and anticipation. The watch-cry of our sister Methodism is "Two million souls" during this year. This is cheering indeed. One of the surest evidences of a regenerate church is the passion for souls. The primary mission of the church is the conversion of sinners. There can be no mistake as to our Lord's intention in commissioning men to carry on his work. His own example, and often expressed purpose, was that he came "to call, not the righteous, but sinners to repentance." The passion for conversions inspired the first ambassadors of the cross with irresistible zeal.

During the past few years, the popular note has been heard largely in presenting social aspects of Christianity. The agitation and investigation of social conditions has caused a large measure of attention to be given to the physical and temporal salvation of men. We are now emerging from all this, doubtless with a better understanding of men, socially and psychologically, but also with a profound conviction of the fact that men need not merely reformation, but regeneration by the power of God.

A revival is never the result of merely benevolent or humane sympathies. Its causes, so far as human actions and conditions are involved, lie deep in dogmatic conceptions of truth which have seized hold upon the souls of men. The appeal to history is the vindication of this statement. A restless, uncertain and critical atmosphere can not furnish the force of conviction necessary to aggressive work. It will, from sheer emptiness and uncertainty, cause men to fall back upon the positive and dogmatic aspects of truth.

After all our investigations, we are now more certain than ever that ours is a lost and guilty world: that there is no hope for the race except in the salvation of the individual sinner by grace. Our work to-day is precisely the work of the apostolic church, and our basis of action is identical.

We gladly join with those who anticipate a great revival in the present year, and take this occasion to call attention to what appears to be, at least, a national movement. The best thing about the movement is its clear-cut program of work and the attitude expressed towards the fundamental truths of the gospel.

First of all, is the sense of absolute dependence upon the leadership and power of the Holy Spirit. This is truly apostolic. The work and person of the Holy Spirit is recognized in every utterance. And this, too, in connection with doctrinal statements. There has been a tendency to refer to the work of the Spirit as principally subjective experience and mystical in nature. But the action of the Holy Spirit is based upon historic fact and in emphasizing objective truth in its relation to souls. A vague mysticism is not the true manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power.

Again, the revival looks to individual work. It has been found that mammoth mass meetings and conventions produce far more sound than spiritual power. The evangelizing power of the church is wholly in the pressure brought to bear upon the individual sinner to repent and immediately accept Christ. The essence of revival work is this focalizing upon the conscience of men all the regenerative powers of the Redeemer. There must be the faith and expectation of immediate results.

Our deep need to-day is the mighty passion for souls. All theories and interpretations notwithstanding, the simple fact is before us, the church and the ministry that hungers and yearns for conversions will get them. Human nature is unchanged, and the power of God is unabated. The old themes of sin and salvation are the matter for the new evangelism of every age. Jesus Christ, and him crucified, is the one gospel for the ages. May God clothe us with humility and power, that we may preach it this year with unction and joy, fulfilling the will of him who loved us and saved us through his precious blood. P.

Rev. J. B. A. Ahrens, D. D., is considerably better. Let the entire church pray that he fully recover.

OUR KENTUCKY LETTER.

I have read the proceedings of your three patronizing Conferences with great interest. Dr. Bolling, of Shreveport, I need to know in Denver, Col., and later at Lexington, Ky.; a gifted and useful man. It is hard to get the disciplinary questions and answers at a Conference, but they are "mighty interesting reading," and I wish the papers would make a business of publishing them. I am very glad of such reports as appeared in the ADVOCATE, but in the absence of statistics I can not tell how you are doing in reference to numerical progress. Well, I hope, though these are heavy days in reference to making gains.

I see the North Mississippi Conference admitted nine on trial and readmitted one (no mention of how many received by transfer); one located, five died, one expelled, and four transferred, which indicates a gain in the workers. That Conference is very near the numerical strength of our Louisville Conference; about the same number of traveling preachers, and only about 3,000 behind the Louisville Conference in membership.

The Mississippi Conference admitted six on trial, received one from the Baptists, one readmitted and six received by transfer, three located, a number of deaths, and those transferred not mentioned, but likely there is a healthy growth in this Conference.

These two Conferences were held by Bishop Hargrove. I was the secretary of the Denver Conference at Trinidad, Col., in 1882; the first Conference the Bishop ever held. He began painstaking and considerate of every interest. He and his good wife showed our Western work great attention, and often cheered our hearts by their kind words. I am glad to see him still pursuing his careful business methods with the Conferences, and shall be glad to see his sermon on Judas, which the Mississippi Conference requested him to have published.

The Louisiana Conference was held by Bishop Galloway. We were bedfellows at J. Thompson Brown's, in Richmond, Va., when he was made a Bishop. It was prophesied of old that there should be "two in a bed—one should be taken and the other left." So it fell out. I remember vividly a grand time with him at one of his Conferences at Council Grove, Kan. He is a wonderfully companionable man. He was not born with a silver spoon in his mouth, as I know of, but he is a horn talker. Sorry to miss the list of those admitted and those received by transfer. I see five were transferred to other Conferences, and I suppose you are keeping up the supply. You have a grand Conference, and many a worker will be inspired by you during the coming Missionary Conference in your great city.

Our Louisville Conference enjoyed the presidency of Bishop Hendrix—a well-rounded and well-furnished man. His talks were always good, and his address to the class to be admitted into full connection was very fine. Rev. W. H. Howard, of the Denver Conference, was with us, visiting his people and his home Conference. I had the pleasure of taking him West when I was presiding elder there. He has proved himself about the best stayer of us all. Our Conference was stuck in the mud a while, but we caught our footing a year ago, and this last year reported a gain of 1,370. We admitted nine on trial, readmitted one, and received three by transfer, two discontinued, three located, one transferred, one died, and two fell out under the twentieth question, and an unusual number went on the superannuate list, but still the work was well manned, and we are hopeful.

Well, you have all done wisely in rallying to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. It is hard to start a Conference organ and sustain it. The NEW ORLEANS will now have a constituency of 110 or 115,000.

At our last session we adopted the Central Methodist as our organ, and elected Dr. J. W. Lewis and Dr. W. F. Lloyd editors. They are making a splendid paper, and giving entire satisfaction.

The Louisiana Conference did itself credit in honoring your Bishop Keener, one of the grandest men of the age. He gave me my first appointment, and eight years afterwards transferred me to the Denver Conference, and used to write to me when I was editor of the Rocky Mountain Methodist, and I was delighted to dine with him when in New Orleans. I have heard him make many a telling hit at General Conferences and elsewhere. Always at himself, and apt in his answers. It is a blessing to know such a character.

GENERAL MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

There was an enthusiastic meeting of the preachers and representative laymen of New Orleans in Carondelet Street Church on the evening of Dec. 20, 1900, to discuss ways and means and plan for the coming of the great Missionary Conference to be held in April.

Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Rev. P. L. Cobb, and Mr. G. W. Cain, members of the Business Committee representing the Mission Rooms in Nashville, were in the city to meet the local committees looking to organization and arrangement for the Conference. The secular press of the city, especially the Times-Democrat and the Daily Picayune, gave full accounts of the meeting, and represented it as full of interest and enthusiasm. It is evident from the spirit in which the people of New Orleans have thrown themselves into the arrangements for the Conference, that nothing will be left undone by them to make the great gathering a complete success.

Brief addresses were made by the visiting brethren, in which was brought out the fact that the enterprise was born in New York last April at the great Ecumenical Missionary Conference, and that it was the prayer and purpose of the missionary leaders of the church to translate the results of that wonderful missionary meeting into our own beloved Methodism and her evangelistic enterprises. The speakers expressed the hope that the whole church might be quickened into new life, interest and zeal in behalf of the salvation of the world. It was evident from the reports of the Nashville Business Committee that the sentiment in favor of the Conference had steadily grown, and that the entire connection has evinced an interest far beyond the most sanguine expectations of those who projected the Conference. The Annual Conferences have, without exception, elected delegations, and have selected from among their best men, ministers and laymen to attend this Conference. Letters from the delegates show they are planning to attend in force.

Among the invited speakers and those who are to read papers, the following names were announced as having responded favorably: Bishop E. R. Hendrix, Dr. O. E. Brown, Rev. J. W. Tarboux, of Brazil; Dr. W. H. Park, of China; Rev. G. B. Winton, of Mexico; Dr. S. H. Wainright, of Japan; Dr. J. F. Goucher, of Baltimore; Rev. W. E. Edwards, Dr. R. J. Bigham, President Booker T. Washington, Mrs. S. C. Trueheart, Miss M. L. Gibson, Miss Belle Bennett, Mrs. Florence Kelley, Miss Mary Helm, Bishop J. M. Thoburn, of India; Mrs. Ballington Booth, Dr. Jas. Atkins, S. Earl Taylor, Jno. R. Pepper, Dr. W. H. LaPrade, Miss Belle M. Brain, Rev. W. A. Wilson, of Japan; Dr. C. F. Reid, of Korea; Rev. E. A. Tilly, of Brazil; Rev. D. W. Carter, of Cuba, and Rev. J. J. Methvin, missionary to the wild tribes.

A wide-awake Executive Committee, composed of three preachers and four laymen, was elected as follows: Rev. S. S. Keener, D. D., president; Rev. W. H. LaPrade, D. D., secretary; Rev. F. N. Parker, Dr. E. L. McGee, and Messrs. W. W. Carre, F. A. Dicks, and W. B. Thomson.

The committee met the following day and organized for work. They appointed W. W. Carre and W. B. Thomson a Committee on "Hall;" F. N. Parker was appointed chairman of the Committee on "The Press;" Dr. E. L. McGee, chairman of the "Entertainment" Committee; T. B. Clifford, chairman of the Committee on "Trains;" J. F. Foster, chairman of the Committee on "Homes for the Guests of the Conference;" G. D. Parker, chairman of the Committee on "Hotels and Boarding Houses for Lady Delegates and Visitors;" F. A. Dicks, chairman of the Finance Committee, and C. D. Atkinson, chairman of the Local Exhibit Committee. Tulane Hall, a spacious auditorium with a seating capacity of fifteen hundred, and centrally located, has been selected.

All business communications relative to arrangements in the city itself should be addressed to REV. W. H. LAPRADE, D. D., Sec., 512 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

AN APPEAL.

I write this appeal in behalf of as true and faithful man as ever honored the rolls of the Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences. Ever present at the call to duty, and uncomplainingly faithful in the discharge of hard and continued labors, none among us can show a better record than can the Rev. P. A. Johnston. His active work is now over, and yet he as uncomplaining, and as faithfully suffers the will of the Master in the sweet quiet of his humble home, as he obeyed it on the field of battle in the contest for souls. Indeed, it is a benediction, and an ever-drawing nearer the gate that opens to "the rest that remains to the people of God," to be in his presence.

But the day of his physical strength is gone, and the man of God who has ministered to others must now be ministered to by us. He has bought a home in this city, and it is paid for except the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars. I want his friends and the friends of our Lord to help pay this debt; and if a little more is given, it can be used to make him more comfortable in his home. Send money to me, and I will acknowledge the amounts in the ADVOCATE until all is paid. Please send at once, as time must bring pressure.

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

Rev. J. D. Newsom has located in Maben.

Rev. J. M. Massey, who was granted a supernumerary relation, will serve Cumberland circuit.

The friends of Rev. J. F. Evans in Vaiden have purchased a home for him and his family in that pleasant town, where they are comfortably located.

In the death of Rev. M. H. Honnoll we have lost one of our truest and most faithful preachers. We shall greatly miss his genial presence and edifying counsels in our ecclesiastical meetings.

Bro. Raper and his children have the loving sympathy and earnest prayers of the whole Conference in their great bereavment. May they prove by faith that the "Lord is a stronghold in the day of trouble, and that he knoweth them that trust him."

The printers have disappointed us in getting out the Conference Minutes within the time agreed upon; but from latest information, I feel assured that ere this is read by the preachers, they will have received their packages; those living convenient to express offices by express, others by mail. Enquire diligently, brethren, at your offices.

We exceedingly regret to hear of the serious illness of Sister Thames, wife of Rev. S. M. Thames, of Minter City. May her valuable life be spared to her family and the church.

Rev. J. S. Oakley is very sick. Let prayers be made for him and his family by all the church.

We greet the new editor, and bespeak for the ADVOCATE renewed prosperity.

TO PASTORS.

DEAR BRETHREN: Numbers of Methodists come to New Orleans to make the city their home. A very large proportion of them are lost to Methodism, and some of them to Christ, because of their lack of power of resistance against the new temptations of a large and gay city. These, or many of them, might be saved if pastors of the city churches knew of them. The purpose of this note is to induce their former pastors to furnish this information.

Please, brother, if one of your flock should come to New Orleans, write at once to some one of us, giving name (and address if possible), so that religious influence may at once be thrown around him.

LOST.

In the hurry of departure after the reading of the appointments at the late session of our Conference, in Brookhaven, I left my overcoat, a black diagonal, on the altar railing. I learn that another was left, but evidently for a smaller man. If any brother accidentally got hold of an overcoat too large for him, it is no doubt mine, and I ask him to communicate with me at once, as I very much need it this wintry weather. The pocket should contain a pair of tan colored kid gloves. No other marks of identification that I remember.

A Letter to Dr. Pierce is the First Step to Health for Weak and Sick Women.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free, and under seal of the strictest privacy. In a little over thirty years of practice as chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., Dr. Pierce, assisted by his staff of nearly a score of physicians, has treated and cured over half a million women. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Offers of "free medical advice" made in imitation of Dr. Pierce's offer of free consultation by letter are advertised by persons who are not physicians, and are not qualified to give medical advice. Every woman should consult her own safety by careful inquiry into the genuineness of such offers.

There is no offer similar to Dr. Pierce's, which has behind it an institution of national note, such as the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., with its staff of nearly a score of physicians, presided over by a specialist of Dr. Pierce's experience and success, in the treatment and cure of diseases peculiar to women.

How Other Women Have Been Cured.

"I suffered untold misery for many years with uterine trouble," writes Mrs. Mary E. Wilcox, of Emo (Rainy River), Algoma Co., Ont., "until I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's good medicine and used the local treatment as advised. I took two bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and two of 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I also sent for one box of your 'Antiseptic and Healing Suppositories.' I have only used two and that was two months ago. I would advise every woman who suffers from ulceration of the uterus and piles to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' They are the best medicines in the world. Also write to Dr. Pierce for his fatherly advice. I have felt better in these past seven months than I have for years. Every month I used to have to go to bed and have hot poultices and take laudanum to ease the pain. I don't go to bed now nor do I take laudanum."

"I have used your medicine as you directed," writes Mrs. Caroline Hammac, of Hammac, Escambia Co., Ala. "I have only used one bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and in connection I used one bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery.' Six doses a day, three of each, and sometimes I used the tablets as you directed. I feel well. I am hard at work and have been for some time. I had been under a good doctor five years for this same disease and you see how quick your medicine cured me."

"About a year ago I had a mishap which left me in very poor health for some time afterward," writes Mrs. Cene Johnson, of Gordon, Sheridan Co., Nebr. "I employed a local doctor but got only temporary relief, until I commenced using Dr. Pierce's medicine, which I did after consulting you. I am now as well as ever. I took five bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' and one of the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I would recommend these medicines to all who suffer as I did."

If you are sick or ailing take advantage of Dr. Pierce's offer of free consultation by letter and write today to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

WHEN I WAS A BOY.

BY EUGENE FIELD.

Up in the attic where I slept
When I was a boy—a little boy!
In through the lattice the moonlight crept,
Bringing a tide of dreams that swept
Over the low red trundle-bed,
Bathing the tangled curly head,
While moonbeams played at "hide-and-seek"
With the dimples on each sun-brownèd cheek—
When I was a boy—a little boy!

And, oh, the dreams, the dreams I dreamed
When I was a boy—a little boy!
For the grace that through the lattice streamed
Over my folded eyelids seemed
To have the gift of prophecy,
And to bring me glimpses of times to be
Where manhood's clarion seemed to call,
Ah, that was the sweetest dream of all—
When I was a boy—a little boy!

I'd like to sleep where I used to sleep
When I was a boy—a little boy!
For in at the lattice the moon would peep,
Bringing her tide of dreams to sweep
The crosses and griefs of the years away
From the heart that is weary and faint to day,
And those dreams should give me back again
The peace I have never known since then—
When I was a boy—a little boy!

BIRTHPLACE MEMORIES.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Having contributed for thirty-five years or more to the columns of the excellent Messenger, I trust that it will not be presumptuous for me to offer a few personal reminiscences. On a recent Sabbath I preached to the students of Cornell University at Ithaca, whence I came to this my beautiful native village of Aurora. The Cayuga Lake, on whose shores the village stands, is to-day a mirror of silver; in the days of my childhood it was to my eyes more attractive than all "the rivers of Damascus." Of the people who walked these streets when I was an infant, not a solitary survivor remains! The tasteful white village church has given place to a more elegant brick edifice, in which the young ladies of "Wells College" now worship every Lord's day.

The first minister I remember as standing in the pulpit of that old church was the Rev. H. R. Hoisington, who left it to become a missionary in Ceylon. In those days the "American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions" was in the flush of its early morn, and nearly all the godly families of this region eagerly devoured, every month, the Missionary Herald. The letters of Gutzlaff in China, Spalding in Southern India, and Titus Coan in the Sandwich Islands made those pioneers of Christ's work as familiar acquaintances as our next-door neighbors. We did not dream then that a missionary life—after half a century—would involve the horror of massacre and martyrdom such as tempest-tossed China has just witnessed.

The days of my childhood in Aurora were the days of the glorious revivals in Central and Western New York. That trumpet-tongued herald of salvation, Charles G. Finney, was going from town to town carrying a torch of fire to kindle the communities to which he came. Some of Mr. Finney's methods and utterances may be open to criticism on the score of good taste, but he was clothed with a prodigious spiritual power, and he wrought a prodigious work. The city of Rochester, with its great crowded churches, is a memorial of what his faithful, pungent, soul-piercing ministry wrought there. He employed trenchant arguments; he addressed the men of brains and culture with the logic of Sinai and Calvary, and among the converts were some who became leaders in every enterprise of Christian beneficence. Above all, he proclaimed fearlessly the exceeding guilt and retributions of sin; he thrust in the gospel-plough beam-deep, and tore up besetting sins by the roots; deep convictions were followed by thorough conversions.

Would that there were more men of his Spirit-baptized power in our pulpits in these days! There would be more family altars, more crowded prayer meetings, more consistent Christian lives, and more consecration of time, money and influence to the Lord Jesus Christ.

The sweetest and tenderest memory linked with this lovely village is that of my devoted, prayerful and most holy-hearted mother. As my father—a man of brilliant talents—died when I was but four years old, my whole early training was by that Hannah-like woman who combined a strong intellect with a profound piety. She believed in the consecration of childhood. She believed in the power of prayer. When my paternal grandfather offered to her his large law library for my future use, she put aside the tempting offer and said, "He will never need law books; he is to be a preacher of the gospel." And when in after years I, for a time, seriously thought of the legal profession, her fervent, faith-inspired prayers were, with God's blessing, the silver cord that held me fast and drew me into the gospel ministry that for fifty-four years has been the joy and crown of my whole life. It was in a little revival prayer meeting in a village beside this lake that my decision for the pulpit was made (in 1843); but in the overruling providence of God the real decision was made when my sainted mother gave her only infant child to God.

I make no apology for giving these leaves of personal history to the readers of these columns. I narrate them to encourage maternal faith and to emphasize the potency of maternal training. They may stir some other mothers to emulate the spirit and follow the example of that noble Christ-loving woman whose memory still sweetens the atmosphere of my native village.—American Messenger.

WOMEN AS TEACHERS.

Women are the natural teachers of the race. A prominent educator says, "It is easy enough to find scholars among the men, but for teachers we must go to the women." The history of the kindergarten is an illustration. The kindergarten was evolved by a man, for man is the natural creator and originator, but it was the women, and only the women, who saw its spiritual meaning and recognized its educational value. For nearly a century women have applied the kindergarten principle and demonstrated its efficacy in child-training, and only within a few years have the masculine educators realized its full value and accepted it as the basis of all education, supplying principles that are to be carried through all the stages of growth and development.

The new translation of Psalm lxviii, 11, is an interesting illustration of the changed ideas concerning woman and her mission. In the Old Version it reads: "The Lord gave the word, great was the company of those that published it." In the Revised Version it is rendered as follows: "The Lord giveth the word; the women that publish it are a great host." The translators of King James' time could not believe that God intended to put woman forward so prominently, and therefore they calmly omitted the word. But woman's prominence in spiritual things belongs to her nature irrespective of human edicts or human opinions.—The Evangelist.

OLIVE-OIL FOR THE NERVES.

If you are neuralgic, anemic or nervous, try the "oil cure," and see what it will do for you. However, purchase only the pure olive-oil, which may be bought in the bulk at from two dollars to three dollars a gallon, and that, considering its nutritive value, is one of the cheapest of foods. Take one teaspoonful three times a day as a "dose" if you are in a hurry for results. Or if you can physically afford the leisure to cultivate an oil taste, begin by putting a very little on some lettuce-leaves, or any salad combination of which you are fond, adding enough good vinegar to almost entirely disguise the taste. Gradually increase the oil, and lessen the vinegar until you grow fond of the oil, and really enjoy dipping your bread into it, as you surely will in time.—Ella Morris Kretschmar, in the Woman's Home Companion.

SELF-SUPPORTING COLLEGE STUDENTS.

Most people picture the young man who earns his own expenses while at college as a long-faced prig who rooms in a garret, where he breaks the ice in his pitcher for water to wash with in Winter, and tells himself how noble he is to persevere in spite of the sneers and snubs of his more fortunate classmates. If that type of collegian ever really existed, he is now extinct. The modern, self-supporting student is not snubbed nor sneered at by anybody, and he smiles occasionally. This is because there are more college men earning their living to-day than ever before, and because they earn a better living. One quarter of the entire three hundred and one members of the last class graduated at Yale supported themselves partly or wholly; probably all of them ate three meals a day, and many of them were quite in the thick of college-life besides. This point is emphasized, because I know that every year some boys think of going to college and then give it up, largely—though they may not confess it—because they hate to think of being "queer" and "out of things." This is a natural feeling, but it is unnecessary. I recall no football team at my college (Princeton) in the last ten years which did not have at least one man working his way through, and invariably some of the most popular and influential men in every class are self-supporting.—Jesse Lynch Williams, in Ladies' Home Journal.

"I think it would be a good plan to send Willie up into the country for a month," suggested Willie's father. "He's never been on a farm, and it would be rather a novel experience for him." "No, you don't," interrupted Willie. "I've heard all about the country, and I'm not going anywhere where they have thrashing-machines. It's bad enough when it's done by hand."—Chicago Evening Post.

WHEN MISSIONARY BOXES ARE AN INSULT.

There have been missionary boxes sent to the heroes and heroines of the church, fighting her battles in the van, that have done more harm than good, in hurt, pride and damaged self-respect. To a lady and a gentleman—I use the terms advisedly—were sent clothing, old shoes, old hats, old collars, cravats, gloves, fit only for the rag-bag. Ashamed to send them anywhere else, the donors sent them to the unknown missionaries, and as everything that came to the church to be sent was jammed in without care or discrimination, the arrival of the box partook of the nature of an insult to these heroic, gently bred people. Fortunately this state of affairs is not often found; it ought never to be. —"A Minister's Wife," in the Ladies' Home Journal.

THE SWEET IDIOCY OF GIRLS.

I once employed a girl of seventeen who wrote as pretty shorthand notes as I ever saw, and could read them to me all right. She was rapid, too. But, at the city grammar school where she was graduated, she had learned little of grammar and scarcely anything of spelling. The letters she transcribed from notes were fearfully and wonderfully made. They could not be sent out. I asked her the second morning to go and get the mail. She said, "I brought it up yesterday." I gave her, to pack and send to a friend, some magnificent Jack roses with stems two feet long. Before I had time to stop her, she had cut off all those stems so as to pack the roses easier. I said not a word, but I thought much. I did my best to get her to learn spelling and English grammar, but utterly without success. She could not see the use of either.—Cynthia Westover Alden, in Success.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

The still form of a little boy lay in a coffin surrounded by mourning friends. A mason came into the room and asked to look at the lovely face. "You wonder that I care so much," he said as the tears rolled down his cheeks, "but your boy was a messenger of God to me. One time I was coming down by a long ladder from a very high roof and found your little boy close behind me when I reached the ground. He looked up in my face with a childish wonder and asked frankly, 'Weren't you afraid of falling when you were up so high?' and before I had time to answer he said: 'Ah, I know why you were not afraid—you had said your prayers this morning before you went to work.' I had not prayed, but I never forgot to pray from that day to this, and by God's blessing I never will."—Exchange.

As a train was moving out of a Scotch station a man in one of the compartments noticed that the porter, in whose charge he had given his luggage, had not put it into the van, and so shouted at him and said: "Hi! you old fool! What do you mean by not putting my luggage in the van?" To which the porter replied: "Eh, man! yer luggage is ne'er such a fool as yerself! Yer i' the wrang train!"—Exchange.

Consistent with its policy to constantly improve its service, the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad is now relaying its track between New Orleans and Slidell, a distance of twenty-nine miles, with new steel rails, weighing seventy-five pounds to the yard.

The entire line has been ballasted in the most approved manner from end to end, and, notwithstanding the increased price of steel, two thirds of the entire mileage has been relaid with 75-pound new steel rails, and the balance of the line will be relaid as rapidly as the material can be procured.

These improvements are not only an indication of the prosperous condition of the property, but an assurance of safety and comfort to travelers.

The entire Queen and Crescent system, of which the New Orleans and Northeastern forms a part, is now a thoroughly up-to-date system of railroads running the very best equipment in the most modern style.

"UNTIL THE DAY BREAK."

BY CHRISTIAN BURKE.

A human soul went forth into the night,
Shutting behind it Death's mysterious door,
And shaking off with strange, resistless might
The dust that once it wore.
So swift its flight, so suddenly it sped—
As when by skillful hand a bow is bent,
The arrow flies—those watching round the bed
Marked not the way it went.

Heavy with grief, their aching, tear-dimmed eyes
Saw but the shadow fall, and knew not when
Or in what fair or unfamiliar guise
It left the world of men.
It broke from Sickness, that with iron hands
Had bound it fast for many a grievous day,
And Love itself with its restraining hands
Might not its course delay.

Space could not hold it back with fettering bars,
Time lost its power, and ceased at last to be;
It swept beyond the boundary of the stars,
And touched Eternity.
Out from the house of mourning faintly lit
It passed upon its journey all alone;
So far not even Thought could follow it
Into those realms unknown.

Through the clear silence of the moonless dark,
Leaving no footprint on the road it trod,
Straight as an arrow cleaving to its mark
The soul went home to God.
"Alas!" they cried, "he never saw the morn,
But fell asleep outwearied with the strife;"
Nay, rather, he arose and met the Dawn
Of Everlasting Life.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

BROWN—H. H. BROWN was born in Florida, March 15, 1839, and died Nov. 4, 1900.

Bro. Brown was a man of lofty character, and will be greatly missed, not only by the bereaved ones, but also by the church of which he was a member, and by the community at large.

Bro. Brown was a Confederate soldier, and had an honorable record of four years' service. He was also a member of the Masonic lodge, and as such he was a true Mason. His hand was ever open toward the unfortunate. For the past twenty years he had been a member of the M. E. Church, South, and during that time has occupied various official positions. As a steward, he was ever faithful to duty, working from the beginning to the close of the Conference year with a Christian zeal that marks the lives of all the saints of God. As a Sunday-school superintendent, he labored in season and out of season to establish the Master's kingdom in the hearts of young and old. Many times on the way to the house of God did he gather little ones up and take them along with him to Sunday-school, and quite frequently he visited the families of the neighborhood in the interest of the children and the Sunday-school. As a parent, he was kind and indulgent; as a husband, he was faithful and true; as a citizen, he was honorable and upright; as a child of God, he was humble and sincere. Truly a man of God has entered into that place of rest and glory prepared for those who shall be 'faithful unto death."

May the God of all grace support and comfort the sorrowing widow! May his peace and love sustain and soothe the afflicted sister! May the children of our deceased brother remain steadfast in the faith of their now sainted father, and may the sweetest benedictions of the Most High be and abide with all of the bereaved ones, both now and forever! Is the prayer of HIS FORMER PASTOR.

ROUSE—Mrs. SUSANNA ROUSE was born April 16, 1832, and died Nov. 11, 1900, aged sixty-eight years seven months and five days.

Sister Rouse died in peace, her faith bright. She suffered greatly during the last days of her illness, but bore it with true Christian resignation.

Sister Rouse joined the M. E. Church, South, in the year 1849, under the ministry of Rev. Wm. Monk, and continued a faithful member until death. The home of her husband was always open to the pastor of her church; nor did she consider it a burden to minister to the wants when visiting their home. The writer was her pastor during the past year, and bade her farewell for the last time only about two hours before her death. We commend Bro. Rouse and the sorrowing children to Him who is our refuge in time of trouble. We believe that if faithful to Christ here, we shall meet Sister Rouse in the home of the soul.

H. B. VANDENBURG.

WILLIAMS—On Christmas morning, A. D. 1900, the angels came for LOYD ASBURY, son and only child of Bro. and Sister P. E. Williams, of Lumberton, Miss. He was born Sept. 15, 1893, and was seven years three months and ten days old at the time of his death. This was indeed a sad Christmas to the loving parents of this bright, precious boy, and yet it was in answer to the purpose for which Christ came, and in response to the cause for which angels and men shouted together—the most joyous occasion of earth; angels shouting over Christ born into the world and over the child saved in heaven. The angels of the two occasions may have been the same.

Loyd was a remarkable little boy. He had a bright and inquiring—we might say philosophic—mind, wanting to know cause and effect, and along this line he asked numerous questions. With this cast of mind he might have developed, had he been spared, into a philosopher; but he never tired of asking questions about Jesus. On this subject he was more interested than any other; hence his philosophy was that of the plan of salvation. Is not this subject great enough, grand enough for heaven? May he not study it there? God knows best, and will employ his inquiring mind in his own way. Sorrowing hearts, loving parents, look up; your darling child is not dead, but has a higher life, a grander mission there. B. S. RAYNER.

BAKER—Capt. J. T. BAKER was born Dec. 25 1813, and died Dec. 11, 1900.

Bro. Baker was married to Mrs. V. J. Watson (nee Marsalis), Dec. 5, 1869, and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1874. He was for twenty-six years a faithful steward in his church, and for nineteen years superintendent of the Sunday-school.

Bro. Baker was one of the leading laymen of this district, being often elected as a delegate to the Annual Conference. He will be greatly missed by his church and the community; but where he will be missed the most is in the home, where his godly influence was shed upon his loved ones, and his love and devotion reflected in all he did.

Bro. Baker leaves a lovable family of wife, three daughters, five sons and a step-daughter, all of whom are trying to follow in the footsteps of a tender husband and loving father. His home was the preacher's home. The writer has been privileged time and again, during his four years' service as presiding elder, to rest in that sunny home. Well may the Almighty Father fill his place in the church, send consolation and comfort to the family, and finally bring them all together for that rest into which Bro. Baker has entered. Thank God for grace to love his memory.

B. T. CREWS.

FOSTER—At the solicitation of my dear friends, J. M. and E. M. Foster, I write with pleasure this obituary of their son, B. P. FOSTER, who was born in Madison county, Miss., Dec. 14, 1857, and was married to Miss Eugene Childs in 1879, and died of hematuria near Huntington, Bolivar county, Miss., Nov. 15, 1900, leaving a wife and two children (a son and daughter). In his last illness he was aware of his condition, and made a full surrender and consecration of himself to God, and sent for a Methodist minister, who received him into the M. E. Church, South, by form of discipline. He was perfectly conscious and deliberate to the last breath, giving directions about his temporal affairs for the benefit of his wife and children. When his aged father and mother arrived, a few hours before his death, he greeted them, rejoicing in a consciousness of a present and full salvation. At the old Prichard Cemetery in Madison county, where we deposited his remains with appropriate ceremonies, his brother (Dr. Foster), who was with him during his illness, said to me it was the most beautiful death he had ever witnessed. What a heritage of blessed assurance he has left to his family! May the benedictions of Heaven rest upon the bereaved ones! F. M. WILLIAMS.

There is no true and constant gentleness without humility; while we are so fond of ourselves, we are easily offended with others. The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes, Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to January, 1902. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

DEFIANCE NO. 4.

The Defiance Machine is the perfection of simplicity, durability, speed, strength and ease of operation.

Construction. It is constructed of the best material in use, every bearing, without an exception, being of steel or case-hardened.

The Mechanical Devices of this machine are a combination of tried mechanical principles. In detail it differs materially from other machines. Its simplicity is at once apparent, and its great durability is admitted by the best mechanical experts.

The Arm is large and roomy, 8½ inches in the clear.

No Vibration. This machine does not vibrate. Its motion is easy and quiet.

Lock Stitch. It is a lock-stitch shuttle machine.

Speedy, Light, Quiet. It is as speedy, light and quiet-running as any shuttle machine manufactured.

Double Feed—Positive Four-Motion. The double feed possesses advantages over all others. Its vary shape and form obviates all the disadvantages arising from double feeds as they have heretofore been constructed, and combines in this machine all the advantages of both the single and double feed, doing away with the objections to either of them.

The operation of the feed mechanism is positive, giving an accurate four-motion movement to the feed without the use of springs.

The Needle Bar. This machine has a self-lubricating needle-bar, which is always kept clean, well-oiled, and the oil can not drop on the work and soil it.

The Needle is absolutely self-setting. No screwdriver is required in setting, a winged thumb nut being used instead.

The machine is self-threading. Put in the bobbin, draw the thread towards you, through the slot and, it is done.

The Loose Pulley for winding the bobbins without running the machine is so constructed as to admit of an instantaneous stoppage and starting of the machine without stopping the treadle movement—a valuable improvement peculiar to this machine.

Automatic Bobbin Winder. The bobbin winder operates automatically, winding the thread on the bobbin regularly and as evenly as the thread on a spool. Can be operated without running the machine.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braidar (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter.

Additional Accessories. This cut shows our new and popular style, the No. 7½ Defiance Drop Cabinet, perfectly protecting the machine from dust, and making a convenient and ornamental stand. When machine is ready for use the head is in same position as on ordinary style; when through using, it requires only the turning over of the leaf of table, and the sewing machine head drops into the case or cabinet between the drawers, completely out of sight, forming a handsome table with highly polished top.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

BY REV. J. W. CUNNINGHAM.

MR. EDITOR: I have received your letter asking me to write something for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and without ten minutes' delay I undertake to do so. First, let me congratulate you on reaching the position you now occupy as editor of the aforesaid ADVOCATE in the Crescent City. In St. Louis we have recently come out of the nineteenth century into the twentieth. I suppose you have had a like experience in the Sunny South. I write this supposition because I read a pastoral letter from a St. Louis preacher, who said of the transit from the old to the new century, "We never before had such an experience, and, we may confidently add, it will never occur to us again." That was a safe calculation. More so than predicting the value of the cotton, rice or sugar crop of Louisiana in the first year of the new century.

Speaking of centuries reminds me that the first impression of the beginning and end of centuries on the Western Methodist mind was made in October, 1839, when the Missouri Conference, then embracing all of the State of Missouri, resolved to celebrate the completion of the first century of Wesleyan Methodism. The twenty-fifth of that month was agreed upon as the time for commencing the Centennial service. George C. Light was the pastor of the two Methodist Churches in St. Louis, with an assistant who gave special attention to the second congregation, which was composed of Africans. The celebrated John N. Maffitt, an Irish revivalist, made the first appeal for money for a "Centenary Church." He gave a five-hundred-dollar subscription. Soon after, when on one of the great Mississippi river steamboats of the times destined for New Orleans, he preached, told of the Methodist Centenary movement in St. Louis, and asked his audience to give him money to pay his five-hundred-dollar contribution. The money was paid and carried back to St. Louis on the return trip of the boat. The church was built, and in it in 1850 H. B. Bascom was ordained Bishop of the M. E. Church, South. Where the First Methodist Church stood is now the Boatman's Bank, and in its upper stories is a vast hardware establishment. Where the first Centenary Church was is a large and tall building, with store on first floor and many offices in the several stories above. The second Centenary Church was dedicated by Bishop Keener in 1871, eleven squares further out from the river than the first edifice. In it the General Conference was held in 1890. Of all the preachers who served the first Methodist congregation on Fourth street during a period extending from 1821 to 1854, only one is living—R. A. Young, of Nashville, Tenn. Only three who were pastors of the first Centenary organization from 1842 to 1870 are living, who served in the early fifties. They are W. H. Lewis, N. G. Berryman, and W. M. Prottsman. All are in Missouri, and the last two are nearly blind. The second named is in his ninety-first year. He and Andrew Hunter, of Arkansas, are the last survivors of the General Conference of 1844, out of which grew the movement in Southern Conferences for the M. E. Church, South. I had been a Methodist only three months when that General Conference met. I am about fifteen years younger than the venerable Berryman, yet I claim to be older as a Southern Methodist than either Berryman or Hunter. If the reader doubts my claim to seniority in Southern Methodism, let him read the following statement, which I recently furnished the St. Louis Globe-Democrat:

"I was born at Leitchfield, Ky., June 12 1824, and lived in every quarter of the nineteenth century. I entered the Kentucky Conference of the M. E. Church in September, 1844, and have been a Methodist preacher in each of the last three-quarters of that century. It is known to many that I have claimed to be the oldest Southern Methodist living. In support of that claim the following is written on this first day of the twentieth century.

"In May and part of June, 1844, a General Conference of the M. E. Church was held in the city of New York. It was composed of clerical delegates from all the Conferences in the United States and the Republic of Texas. One result of that convocation was a convention in Louisville, Ky., in May, 1845, of delegates from Southern Conferences, including Kentucky and Missouri. On the eighteenth day a plan of organization of the M. E. Church, South, was adopted, and Bishop Andrew 'adhered' to the said Southern Methodist organization. On the first Sunday in June following, in a M. E Church in Augusta, Ky., where was the then oldest Methodist college in the world, whose first president, Martin Ruter, was the first Methodist doctor of divinity in the world, the trustees made a written demand of me in the presence of a large assembly to declare my adherence 'to the M. E. Church, or to the M. E. Church, South.'

"After reading to the assembly the letter of the trustees, I said, 'I adhere to the M. E. Church, South.' I then asked each trustee, 'Can I occupy your pulpit?' Each responded, 'You can not.' So I departed from among them. While I was in that house the adhering membership of the M. E. Church, South, was increased 100 per cent. When I went in it consisted of Bishop Andrew. When I went out it consisted of Bishop Andrew and one junior preacher, not quite twenty-one years old. Bishop Andrew was recognized as an adherent to the M. E. Church, South, by a convention of M. E. preachers, neither of whom could get into the Bishop's new church till the meeting of his Conference, the first of which could not be held till September, and others later. I was recognized as an adherent to the M. E. Church, South, by a Board of M. E. trustees. The difference was that the Bishop got the right hand of fellowship from preachers that did not belong to the church into which they welcomed him, while I got no hand of fellowship greeting. From my point of view I belong to the true Southern Methodist Episcopal succession. I got in by a process like that by which Bishop Andrew got in. I was only fourteen days his junior in the new church, and since his death I have been the oldest Southern Methodist in the world."

A SUGGESTION.

BY PROF. J. M. SULLIVAN.

It has been the history of private donations to institutions of learning that they have been made usually in honor of some person whose life has been directly or indirectly connected with the great work of education. Even now many who are making their offerings under the influence of the Twentieth Century Movement of our church are directing their gifts to specified objects for which they feel more or less special interest.

Would not the endowment of a college chair in honor of our greatly beloved Bishop John C. Keener be a most appropriate expression for some Southern Methodists to make of their appreciation of what he has done for the cause of Christian education? It was through Bishop Keener's effort that Centenary College of Louisiana was saved to Methodism near the middle of the century just gone, and she has ever been the object of his love and prayer. For many years he has served as president of her Board of Trust, which position he occupies to-day, and since encroaching age and impaired health have necessitated his retirement from active labors, he has traveled further to visit Centenary College than for any other object—even at the cost of much physical effort. I, therefore, suggest that a movement be inaugurated to endow some chair in Centenary College, to be known as the J. C. Keener Chair of ——, and especially that Bishop Keener be permitted to see the establishment of this endowment in honor of his long and fruitful service to Christian education.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

REPORT ON THE SPIRITUAL INTERESTS OF THE CHURCH.

All the splendid machinery of the Methodist Church is for the one purpose of spreading scriptural holiness throughout the world. Judging from the reports of our preachers, we believe they have in a large measure been true to their high calling. We observe that a large number of our charges have been blessed with good revivals. There has been a marked increase in the contributions for missions and other enterprises of the church; also that our people attend upon the ministry of the Word and the ordinances of the church with more regularity.

We have cause for rejoicing because of the triumphs of the Holy Spirit through our ministry and membership; nevertheless, the rapid material development of our State, and the growing desire to become rich, call for a deeper consecration for holier living, and a more perfect dependence upon the work of the Spirit, if we meet the larger responsibilities God is placing upon us. The great dangers that confront us are that we will seek to grow rich in worldly goods, and substitute the form of godliness for the power thereof. We may raise much money, build elegant churches, endow our colleges, and have large congregations, and yet fail to give our people a knowledge of spiritual things. We earnestly recommend that the preachers urge our people to erect family altars, and keep the holy fires burning in their homes.

Again, that we pray the Holy Spirit to usher in the new century with a fresh baptism of power from above upon every home in our Conference.

Respectfully submitted.

R. H. B. GLADNEY,
Chairman of the Committee.

By an unaccountable misplacement of the above most excellent report, it fails to appear in the printed Minutes of the Conference. We exceedingly regret this omission, and sincerely ask pardon of all interested.

OUR COMMON LIFE.

Our common life! We grow so weary of it, and wonder why it need be thus. Why is there so little beauty in it? Why are the paths which we must tread so rough and so uneven? Why need the tones which fall upon our ears be so often loud and rasping? And thus the grumble goes, and with each repetition of the sigh we grow more weary with our lot, and long more longingly for something better, or rather different from what we have.

Perhaps but very few of us are always thoroughly content with what we have. I think there are moments in the lives of most of us when we feel that the mercies of life are not equally divided; that others have more of the sunlight and we more of the shadows. We look into those other lives, and we see a beauty which we can not reflect, and we hear a music in which we can take no part, and again we murmur, "Why the difference?"

Perhaps in all of Europe there is no place where the chime of bells is so noted for such perfect sweetness as in the old cathedral at Munster. Travelers go far out of their way to listen to the matchless music; and man and women who have grown gray within the shadow of the church still hold their breath in reverent gladness when listening to the chimes. The story tells of one who so loved the music that he grew to envy the musician (?). If listening afar could give such rapture, what must it be to him who produced it? In his humility he never dreamed that he could create such music, but he could climb up into the tower, and, being right in the heart of the wonderful music, he could saturate his life and flood his soul with the perfect harmony. And so he commenced to climb, and mounted high up into the air, where the city seemed a toy in his sight. But the nearer that he came, lo! the less of music did he hear, until at last so terrible was the clamor that sense could scarce endure it. In a narrow and confined space sat a bent and wearied man, with no consciousness either of beauty or of music. With hammer in hand, he sat among the bells, and, intent upon the page before him, he would strike heavily "Bell 1" or "Bell 20," as the order might be. He hated the clanging noise; it is easy to fancy that he felt his life to be wasted; that he was lonely in his dull monotony and isolation, and that he was wearily impatient to escape from his surroundings. How could he dream that others were listening eagerly for that which was so hateful to him? Why was this? You and I, standing afar off, and in spirit, listening to the music of the chimes, can easily understand. He was too near to comprehend the music in his life. That which was beautiful to others was only toil to him.

Perhaps this may be a faint picture of your life. Oh, weary brother; oh, anxious, loving sister! Your life seems without purpose because you are too near it. Others, looking on, may catch the strains of music which sing of patience or hope or faith or love. Watching and listening to you, they grow stronger to endure their own poor, common life, and though you never know it, they thank God that you have lived and taught to them the lesson of life. You "live again in lives made better by your presence," and this, to noble minds, is the most blessed "life to come."

Do not both art and nature everywhere teach the lesson that we must stand afar off to catch the real beauty or design? It is only the very common, worthless picture whose meaning we can catch by standing near it. And even the very small student of art quickly discovers that such meaning as we may glean is intensely surface. But to stand before a picture! One not initiated, hearing much of its beauty, will always go close to it, and, seeing only what seems piles and daubs of paint, will question the sincerity of an admiring world. But, standing afar off, "the daub" becomes wonderful design and perfect finish, and then we begin to understand.

We look out upon the mountains, smiling in their sun-kissed beauty, glorious in their snow-capped grandeur. As we watch them in the softened, mellow glow of sunset, their gold and purple tints blend into perfect harmony and woo us to draw nearer. We do draw near, but find the purple beauty is only the seeming; that the sun-kissed mountains are rugged and hard to climb, and that the snow-capped grandeur is freezingly cold. We are too near the mountain. We need the magic charm of distance to make the picture fair.

I think it is possible for us to use our common life, with all its disappointed hopes, with all its seemingly cruel obstructions, and make it beautiful—perhaps all the more beautiful—because of its hindrances and blighted dreams. I remember J. G. Holland describing a dainty rill which meandered along by a country pathway. It ran on and on, singing softly to the passers-by, and had nothing to mar it in its journey toward the sea. Suddenly a huge boulder came tearing down the mountain-side, and planted itself directly in the path of the tiny streamlet. If the streamlet had had your nature or mine, it would have murmured or despaired. It would have sighed: "My life was small enough at its best; my opportunities for usefulness were so meager they were scarcely worth the name, but I could give a little joy by singing to the passers-by. Now I am only an unsightly deformity." Such might have been the streamlet's murmur if it had been a blood-washed saint; but, being only a stupid little rill, it never dreamed of questioning the wisdom of its Maker. It could not flow on in its old, familiar channel. What, then, can it do? Very quietly the rill makes a little detour, goes around the rock, nourishes vines that cover the uncouth intruder all over with verdure, and, out of its misfortune, erects for itself a temple of beauty, a wayside shrine at which all pilgrims of the future will pause to worship.

So, if we would, might the hindrances which mar us in our common life become transformed into stepping-stones of usefulness, or little mounds of beauty, which others, "seeing, shall take heart again." What racks it even if our life is common? Still has the world much need of the common work which only common lives can do.

Once, in the long ago, there lived a Man amid the common walks of life. Common duties filled his time and common people were his friends. So poor and common was his daily life that it would have been very easy for him to have shirked responsibility because everywhere he met with cruel opposition. But though "he went about doing good," and though "the common people heard him gladly," yet at last did common malice triumph, and upon a common cross he died the death of a common malefactor. Yet, because all the while he lived he always did his best—no more than you and I can do—for nineteen hundred years a light has been shining, and not one has ever lost his way who has followed where it led.

God take my common life, with all its common purposes, and make it a common source of cheer or helpfulness to other lives which may be more common than my own. Amen, and amen.—Anna D. Bradley, in Christian Standard.

THE PREACHER IN THE REVIVAL.

In the promotion of revivals the preacher and the gospel are indispensable. Nothing can break the spell of sin, quicken the dead soul, and cause it to glow and stir with spiritual life, but the omnipotent Word of God. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all who believe. The preacher is God's ordained instrument in the conduct of a genuine revival. He is to inspire, direct, instruct, and lead the militant host to victory. His relation to the work is one of great responsibility. He needs heavenly wisdom, undaunted courage, invincible faith, and Christly patience. He can either help or hinder. His first duty is to keep out of the way. He must not be an obstructionist, but a constructionist. We have known many revivals to be thwarted and defeated by a well-meaning preacher unconsciously standing in the way of the Holy Ghost. The liberty of the Spirit must not be infringed in a revival. The preacher is humanly responsible for the conduct of the meeting, but much grace and wisdom are needed lest he should assume unwarranted prerogatives, and the Holy Spirit be grieved. He is a fortunate conductor who knows just when and where to put on the brakes. No serious mistake can obtain while the leadership of the Holy Spirit is recognised and followed. Self-conceit and self-opinionation must find no place in the successful leader of the revival. God will not divide the honors with men. The preacher must be clothed with humility, and dominated with a passion to save souls and glorify God. "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake." "He who would be greatest among you, let him be the servant of all." The preacher must be emptied of self and filled with the Holy Spirit, who would touch the secret springs of power and win souls to Christ.

The preacher in the revival should not talk too much. Many revivals have been talked to death by the preacher. We have known preachers who were constantly warning the members not to talk too long, who themselves seemed never to know when to talk or when to stop. The successful commander is not the one who does all the fighting, nor all the talking, but has acquired the happy art of directing and developing the talents of the church. He is to generate and utilize all the interest possible for the good of every service. It is unfortunate when the preacher becomes a talking-machine, and monopolizes the time in long sermons and miscellaneous remarks, as if nothing was complete until he has his say. In this case quality is greatly to be desired above quantity. Words are not to be counted, but weighed. The preacher should never forget that there is no substitute for the Holy Ghost. He may beat the air and bruise his wings, and in his misguided zeal become desperate, but all is as sounding brass or tinkling cymbal without the Holy Ghost. The gift of tongues has its place, but the crowning gift is the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Native ability and refined culture are elements of power when employed under the sway of the Holy Ghost. The art of soul-saving is a Divine art, and can not be learned in the schools, nor can it be imitated. It must be the genuine thing or nothing. No human device nor mechanical regime will avail anything. To your knees, O men of God! Tarry until you are filled with the Holy Ghost, and the revival needed will be on.—Rev. J. W. Hill, Sr., in Western Christian Advocate.

HE GOETH BEFORE.

"He goeth before us!" Is it infancy? He went before us there, in being himself the Babe of Bethlehem. Is it youth? He "goeth before us" in the nurturing home of Nazareth, sanctifying early toil and filial obedience. Is it hours of weariness and faintness and poverty? He 'goeth before us" an exhausted traveler to the well of Jacob, "weary with his journey!" Is it temptation we have to struggle with? He "goeth before us" to the wilderness of Judea, and to the awful depth of the groves of Gethsemane, to grapple with the hour and power of darkness! Is it loss of friends? He "goeth before us" to the grave of Bethany to weep there? Is it death (the last enemy) we dread? He "goeth before us" wrapped in the cerements of the tomb, descending into the region of Hades, uncrowning the king of terrors, trampling his diadem in the dust! Is it entrance into heaven? He "goeth before us" there. Having overcome the sharpness of death, he has opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers. He shows us the path of life leading into his own blessed presence, where there is fullness of joy, and to his right hand, where there are pleasures for evermore.—Dr. J. R Macduff.

A spiritual nature can but be frank and honest, because its foundation-stones are laid in the truth. It is in us as human beings instinctively to recognise and hate insincerity. Nobody is in the end deceived by expression which is merely outward and perfunctory. Our inner life is transparent; it can not conceal itself.—Lucy Larcom.

ALONG THE BORDERS.

BY REV. WM. L. P. PARKER.

(Written at midnight 1900-1901.)

Alone, yet not alone. I sit and watch.
The ticking of my clock the only sound.
'Tis verge of midnight now the moment near
When Time shall pause, then take his start again.
And seem to start anew. How still the room!
For nine and twenty years I've had a home
Till now. But that is past. The dying Year,
The Century pulse fading out, move on Salute their great successors at the margin
And solemnly shake hands across the line.
I hear the footsteps coming, coming
The Old and New their hats outwave
The past and future, interflowing,
Shake hands across the line.

The Year has borne vast armies to their graves.
The Century, ruthless with a million swords,
Has sunk his myriads, leveling granite tombs,
And hearing mourner and the mourned away.
The Century now, in hand with his last son,
The youngest of his offspring at the door,
In dwarfing into moments, weird, death-struck,
Another Hundred Years will soon begin
Their stately round. Midway the night they meet,
And silently shake hands across the line.
Remembered pleasures, rare, whole-hearted,
And hopes expectant here combine
While coming days and days departed
Shake hands across the line.

I stand to night on unexpected shores
'Twas not my thought to live and see the great Old Century die. Nor had I seemed to care.
Its more than half, its later vaster half,
Its grand achievements, mighty histories,
Its gracious travail and resplendent births.
All this I saw and shared, and had enough
Of toil and care, and stood prepared to go.
My work seemed done. Companions had gone on.
I, too, was shaking hands across the line.
Through rifts I see the light supernal
Illume the path and goal divine.
While mortal seems and seems eternal
Shake hands across the line.

Great Century, thou hast emptied homes like earthquakes.
Full many a reed-tree bruised has fallen in.
This last stern Year of thine has struck my own
And quenched its light and razed it to the ground.
The candle has gone out, the windows closed.
I sit alone—I watch apart to-night.
But, lo, beyond these stars another home
Looms up. This Hundred Years', this dying Year,
Was added many a fair effulgent gem.
And souls are shaking hands across the line.
Above the aching voids terrestrial
The Many Mansions dazzling shine;
The earthly home and home celestial
Shake hands across the line.

Solemn sound—the midnight hour is striking!
Amid its stats, the Year itself lies dead.
The Century bears its record up to God.
Another Hundred Years begin their march,
Which ere their close will bear us all away.
Eternity seems close at hand. I sit
Alone, yet not alone. The dead come back
And talk of earth and of the Great Beyond.
Sweet voices fill the midnight, full of love,
And loyal hearts shake hands across the line.
The past with future interlocos,
Rich memories merge with hopes benign;
Warm grasps and old familiar faces
Shake hands across the line.

Farewell, Old Year! Great Century, farewell!
I turn me to the few remaining days
And to the endless ages. Who is this?
She comes all radiant with the olden grace.
The same and more, and speaks as in the past
For God: To him belong the Years as vassals.
Each does God's work and bring his saints straight through.
I wait upon the brink, a narrow stream.
Come on; walk steadily; 'tis all prepared,
And faithful hearts shake hands across the line.
God rules both worlds, both worlds connected—
One throne, one sceptre, one design:
And love on earth and love perfected
Shake hands across the line.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY MOVEMENT—ITS CONTINUATION.

BY J. D. HAMMOND, SECRETARY OF EDUCATION.

The latest reports show that up to Dec. 31 our total Century Thank-offering amounted to $1,363 761.45. No reports have as yet reached us from the watch-night services. The last report sent in was a single subscription of $2 000 from the Montana Conference. The Conference Secretary, in closing his report, expressed the hope that the movement would be continued. There have been many similar expressions. The eighteen Annual Conferences attended by myself were a unit in their purpose to continue for at least another year. The same is true, so far as I have been able to learn, of the remaining Conferences. Of course, the movement will be continued. It is not necessary for the General Board of Education to take action on this question. The General Conference did this both directly and by implication.

1. It directed "That a canvass be begun throughout the Connection not later than Jan. 1, 1899, under the direction of the General Board of Education, to raise $1,500,000 for the support of the educational work of the church;" and "That the effort shall be to raise the amount in cash and notes by Jan 1, 1901, but the canvass is to be continued until the $1,500,000 is raised." (See General Conference Journal.)

2. It implied, though it did not explicitly state, that the $1,500 000 was to be a minimum fund, and to be raised on the basis of $1 per member. We adopted the general plan of the Wesleyan Methodists, with whom the whole movement originated. Their basal principle was "one person one guinea;" ours was announced at the outset as "one person one dollar." This was universally accepted and has been acted on throughout the canvass. Having thus committed ourselves, our work will not be complete until our underlying principle shall have been realized. So far as we know, there is no disposition anywhere to recede from it. On the contrary, those who have helped to bring the movement to its present state are more than ever anxious for it to go on to perfection.

If the reasons for carrying it on until the $1,500 000 shall have been raised are urgent, those for carrying it on until every member shall have contributed are still more so. It is far more important that loyalty to our institutions of learning be brought about in our whole membership than that any amount of mere money be secured. The effort to get a contribution from every member does not contemplate any constraint except that of an enlightened conscience. There can be no doubt that, by the use of proper and sufficient means, each member of our great church can be prevailed on to respond. The gift finds its chief value in the fact that it constitutes a vital bond between the giver and the institution. The personal element thus enlisted will prove to be of far more value, in the long run, than the money element.

While the movement has already been of great service to the church, it has just begun to do what it was designed to do. It grew out of a proposition to endow the Theological Department of Vanderbilt University. After twenty-five years of faithful service that department is still unendowed and forced to do its work with inadequate resources. Being the only institution in the whole church for the theological training of young ministers, and being in every sense connectional, it has a claim such as no other institution has upon the liberality of the whole church. In the judgment of the General Conference the best way to get this claim before the church was to connect it with the Twentieth Century Movement, and provide that twenty per cent. of each dollar be applied to the endowment of the Department. But the General Conference did not foresee that in each Annual Conference almost every gift would be specially directed and kept within its own bounds. And yet each has been the case. So far only $3,176.53 has been turned over to the General Board under the twenty per cent. rule. This state of things had been anticipated, and in view of it Mr. Samuel Cupples, of St. Louis, generously proposed, in June last, to give $50,000 toward the endowment of the department if the church would, within two years from the time of his offer, raise $100,000 for the same purpose. One of our most urgent duties at this time is to raise the sum necessary to meet Mr. Cupples's proposition, and the additional amount necessary to complete the endowment of $300,000. No pastor should feel that he has done his duty during the present Conference year until he has made a special presentation of this claim and given his people an opportunity to contribute to it.

Another reason for continuing the movement is that, notwithstanding the special direction of funds to Annual Conference institutions, the amount so far pledged, even if every dollar should be paid, will not suffice to put these institutions in a condition to meet the demands that will be made upon them in the new century. Leaving out Vanderbilt University, we have twenty institutions, eight of which are now classified as colleges, and twelve of which promise in the near future to meet our college requirements. The total fund, when all collected, if divided equally amongst these, would give $75,000 to each. By the time the demands in each case for buildings and equipment were met there would be probably nothing left for endowment. In other words, we have as yet done almost nothing toward cheapening education and providing a better grade of instruction. Repairs, the payment of debts, buildings, libraries and laboratories are essential, and we must provide for them before we can fairly enter on the work of endowment. No college of the twentieth century will hold its place without adequate endowment. If the twenty institutions of our church are to take a permanent place amongst the respectable colleges of the nation, and deserve the confidence not only of the church, but also of the outside world, to which we are debtors, they must be endowed. An adequate endowment, even for a small college, must run up into the hundreds of thousands: it ought not to be less than half a million. Our church is able to fully endow each one of its accredited colleges. We have put our hands to the plow, and if we look back, we are not fit for the kingdom.

During the past two years of agitation we have done well, but we have only made a beginning. When we consider the ease, even the joy, with which we have done what we have done, we are encouraged to go on. The church has not yet felt the strain of the movement. She has just begun to realize her strength. Fewer, perhaps, than a tenth of our membership have been reached, and yet this tenth have pledged almost the total amount asked. If one-tenth of our working force can do this, what may not the other nine-tenths accomplish when thoroughly aroused? In other words, if one-tenth can in two years give $1,500,000, the remaining nine-tenths can in two more years, with so good an example before them, give nine times as much. They will not do so if left to themselves; but if a thorough-going campaign be carried on with a view to inducing them to do so, who shall say that they will not? Such a result would put us in the lead of the churches of Christendom in the matter of Christian education. Our Conferences are organized anew for the campaign, and there is nothing in the way of a most successful year for endowment but our indifference. May the great Head of the church inspire us, and lead us to victory!

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

Well, I am off of a district now, and you may be sure I am glad of it. I do not love the work of a presiding elder. I do not like to be away from home so much, nor away from books, papers, magazines, and reviews; nor away from my table, paper, pen and ink. I do not love to be among strangers, nor before new audiences. I do not love responsibilities, and I never seek after them, and will not try to shun nor shirk them when put upon me. Most of all, I dread advising in the matter of making the appointments. This is a great trial to me. It gives me the headache and the heartache. I had rather take ten appointments than to advise in making one. It does not hurt me at all to go where I am sent, but I do not love to say or to suggest where my brother ought to go. When I do, and he is all upset over his appointment, my soul is sick and sorrowful nigh unto death. I would not be a Bishop for all the honor and all the pay that comes to any one of them in a lifetime. I am profoundly sorry for Bishops and presiding elders. They are in trying corners. I love them, honor them and pray for them, but I do not want to carry the burdens of responsibility put upon them by the church. I have been sent by the Bishop forty-three times, and not one single tinge of chagrin or of disappointment has ever come into my mind or heart, and not one word of complaint has ever fallen from my lips. I have pleaded with the Bishops not to make me presiding elder, not because the work was not good enough for me, but because I was not great enough for the work. I have never yet had a charge, circuit, station or district that was not better than I deserved. The hardest charges I have filled—those where I did the most work and got the least pay—have invariably been the charges where the most souls were born to God. I do not know how to account for this, but it is a fact. It may be that I depended more on God and less on my salary. This quickening of my own faith may have led me to seek the help of the Holy Spirit. This is the first and greatest need of every preacher. My first charge had fifteen churches, or preaching-places, every month. I got $125—large pay for a young man. My second charge had twelve churches that paid me ninety dollars, which, considering the character of the preaching done, was good wages. My third charge had twenty-eight preaching-places every thirty days, and it paid me $47, but there was no money in the country then, no gold, no silver, no Confederate, no greenbacks, nothing but "shin-plasters." That was a year of power and of great blessing. It was a little hard on the young preacher and his brand-new wife, who had been reared in the lap of luxury. We, rather she, "boarded around among the scholars," a week or two at a place. The people were good to us everywhere we went. My next charge had twenty preaching-places, and I served it only six months when I volunteered and went to the army. For this six months I got $25, and twenty of that proved to be counterfeit. However, we had no board to pay, and there was little clothing in the country to sell if we had had money to buy. I still stand to it, Mr. Editor, I have never had any but good appointments in my life. They all have had churches on them, and Christian homes to live and visit in, and all of them have had sinners living in them, and plenty of people to preach to. I have always been sent where I had a chance to do what I was called of God to do. My present charge is among the most delightful I ever had—a good parsonage, fine church, competent support, splendid people, delightful associations, manly. Christian men on the Official Board, and an unusually large number of deeply pious helpers among the members.

One thing I do not like. Here in this university town they have a way of calling all preachers "Doctor." I am not worthy of so honorable a title, and I do not like to be called Doctor. When a preacher is addressed as Doctor a great many people come to think he is somewhat; but when they hear him preach, and find that he is a very small man, small preacher, they have a sort of contempt for him and for the title. It cripples a preacher to be called Doctor, unless he is a Doctor in fact. As Porter, or as "Gilderoy," I can go along and do pretty well. Nobody expects much, and no one is disappointed. If they begin to call me Dr. Porter, I am badly hurt with a large class. Too much tail will keep the kite from going up. Then, too, I doubt if titles of this kind are according to the simplicity of the gospel and the plain teaching of God's Holy Word. No degrees have ever been conferred upon me, and none ever will be with my consent, and I am not entitled to this entitlement. All honor to the noble men who are entitled to it, and upon whom it has been worthily conferred. The distinction implied by it and the honor conveyed with it will be lost if every small man that comes along is addressed as Doctor by everybody. This is coming to be an evil under the sun in some parts of our common country. I hear much talk about male and female colleges, as if colleges had sex. I have never yet been able to distinguish the sex of colleges. I hope this abomination of speaking of colleges as if they were male or female, of the masculine or feminine gender, will soon pass away forever.

Dear Sisters of the W. F. M. Society in the Seashore District:

Allow me to call attention to the near approach of March, the close of our missionary year, and to the fact that much remains to be done.

This quarter should be devoted especially to the Conference Pledge and Trueheart Day-school collections; also to the "Conference Fund" of 15 cents per member. It is important it should be paid this quarter.

Our "Conference Pledge" for this year is $300. This is to send out new missionaries and to increase the general fund. Mite-box and life-membership money can be used on the Conference Pledge. If every society in our Conference would make even one life-member, how it would swell our collections! I wish the mite-boxes were used more generally in our district. I can furnish any society with them on application.

You know the Trueheart Day-School in Mexico is our "Conference Special." We should not allow it to suffer.

Our Twentieth Century Thank-offerings will be continued till March 1, thus giving any "whose hearts God has touched" an opportunity of contributing.

I wish now to ask any pastor whose eye may fall upon this to call the special attention of his congregation to the great Missionary Conference of our church, to be held in the city of New Orleans, beginning Wednesday night, April 24, 1901, and continuing till Tuesday night, the thirtieth. The W. F. M. S. will be entitled to one hundred delegates. This great gathering of Christians will, it is hoped, "create an epoch in our missionary work." They will be called together "to plan for the evangelization of the world." Could there be a grander purpose?

And, now, dear sisters, let us try to do our full duty this last quarter of the year, and may God move upon the hearts of many "careless daughters," who may read these lines, to join with us in this, the grandest work that could engage our energies!

Sincerely. MRS. J. S. PARKER.

The Christian Life.

THE SUPREME DISCOVERY OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

The nineteenth century made one discovery which outvalues every other, which was indeed the most valuable discovery that had been made in nineteen centuries—and that was the discovery of the real humanity of Jesus Christ. The eighteenth century did not know him as we do. His Deity had been carefully defined and was a potent fact. He was the object of worship of the entire Christian world. His birthday was duly celebrated. His death-day was the occasion of the Christian year. His session on the right hand of God was proclaimed by millions of voices every day. The doctrine of his person was discussed in every theological school; yes, and the humanity as well as the divinity of Christ was vigorously defended.

And yet he was the unknown Christ, because he was considered as apart from human life. No one thought it worth while to write the story of his life; no one thought it worth while to show his interest in our daily affairs. The sermons about him, however brilliant, failed to touch upon his nearness to us. If you asked a preacher of the eighteenth century whether he believed that Christ was tempted in all points like as we are, he would say, "Of course." If you asked him if Christ was a real man like one of us, he would say, "Of course." But if you asked him what was the practical effect of such belief, he would wonder at your question; because he was thinking how best he could treat in a series of sermons the divinity of Christ, and not at all how he could show the way Christ touched human life at every point.

Not such is the language of the first year of the twentieth century in regard to Christ. The halo of supernal glory is around his head; the confidence of an assured victory steadies his tread; while bended knee, the upturned face, glistening eyes and joyful voice bid him welcome. He comes to rule the world; to rule all worlds; to be the king of kings and lord of lords. But he comes in the garment without seam woven by human hands, with a body which we can touch, with wound-prints which we can see. We recognize in him one who is bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh. In other words, the approaching conqueror is the Man Christ Jesus.

This is the greatest discovery of the nineteenth century. Compared with it, what are all our boasted material advantages? The things which are seen are temporal. The things which affect only the body pass away. A civilization which is based upon mere material prowess rests upon a foundation of sand, and the rising tide of popular discontent can sweep it away. Melancholy would be the outlook for man if he had no Savior from the very evils which his civilization produces. Now, this Savior has always been in the world as its conserving force: but not until our own day has man awakened to the fact that the work of this deliverer is not limited to what are called spiritual things.

The effect of such study has been astonishing. When all classes unite in admiration for one man they come closely together. This is the reason why at times of great excitement, as when a people turn out to welcome some national hero, they realize for once their essential unity as one people. This has been precisely the effect of the study now given to the life of Christ. Our doctrine as to his person is not the bond, it is our enthusiasm for the earthly life, and especially because we now realize that that life was not lived once for all in Palestine: that that voice was not heard only upon the shores of Galilee; that Jerusalem was not the only city which had him for an inhabitant, but that his life was for all the world, and for every age and men; that every life is better for contact with that life: that every good deed is better done if done in his name; that the sacrifices which he calls forth are greater and more fruitful than those called forth by any other cause. And that never man spake like that man; that of all the world's teachers he taught the sublimest lessons, and better yet, that he has the power to impart unto his pupils the ability to carry into daily practice the rules he lays down, and to make their lives an imitation of his own.

That the Man Christ Jesus is to be a greater force than ever is the declaration upon which we put our confidence for the twentieth century. That man is to be inspired by him as never before to do deeds of kindness and love just as he did is the reason why we know that when the twentieth century closes, it will see a great spiritual transformation. It may even see a world without wars, without navies, without death-dealing weapons, without frightful crimes, without gross injustice, without studied cruelty, without the horrid catalogue of daily woes which the morning paper lays before us day by day. He alone can effect this change, and he can do it. What we want is not better clothes and more money and more luxury, but better men, if we would have well-governed cities and cleaner lives; and the only way in which better men are made is by changing the heart. Let us pray, then, that all lives will come under the power of Jesus Christ, whose blessed work it is to change the hearts of men to likeness to his own.

—The Evangelist.

ATMOSPHERE OF GOODNESS.

Many of our readers have stood in the room in Dresden where the picture known as the Sistine Madonna is placed; and the beautiful picture has made the room a sanctuary. There are no signs posted requesting silence. None are necessary. The picture is enough to bring all loud tones to whispers, and all rough ways are softened to gentleness when people enter the room. Men and women look, and think deeply, and then go out. The picture has created its own atmosphere.

It is so pure, so beautiful, and so holy, that every soul that comes where it is must be hushed and ennobled by the picture. It is a sign of the deeper principle by virtue of which the soul creates its own atmosphere. It is so easy to be noble when we are in the presence of some people and so easy to be base when we are with others. This is because character makes an atmosphere of its own—we are sensitive to the tonic of strength and purity, and we respond to the depression of an atmosphere contaminated by moral poison.

And so there is a test of character which is very severe and radical. It is simply this: Does your presence and influence make it easier for other men to be noble when they are with you? Is the atmosphere of your spirit bracing or depressing to the people who come in contact with you? The atmosphere of character is made spontaneously. It is nothing that we can give being to by striving to have it thus. The nature of goodness is to create a world of goodness in which it dwells. We are responsible for being of such a character that our world will make others better. Character creates its own atmosphere. We are responsible for character, which is far more than reputation.—Zion's Herald.

Every one has his weak points; every one has his faults. We may make the worst of these; we may fix our attention constantly upon them. But we may also make the best of one another. We may forgive even as we wish to be forgiven. We may put ourselves in the place of others, and ask what we should wish to be done to us, and thought of us, were we in their place. By loving whatever is lovable in those around us, love will flow back from them to us, and life will become a pleasure instead of a pain; and earth will become more like heaven; and we shall become not unworthy followers of Christ, our Leader.—Arthur Penrhyn Stanley.

CREATION ACCORDING TO GENESIS.

BY REV. H S JOHNS.

Several years ago I wrote and published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE an article on "Creation by Evolution," being an attempt to harmonize the actual facts of geology with the story as given by Moses. The principal object in that article was to show the existence of the sun, from the start, combatting the old notion that the sun was not created till the fourth day. At that time it was made to appear.

During these years (about six years) I have not changed my views in the least, but further observation and study has confirmed the thoughts as therein set forth. In the Genesis account of creation the word "create" is strikingly absent from the account of the work of the fourth day. This remarkable omission, together with the fact so well established by the science of astronomy that the sun is the center of this solar system, and without the sun not only this earth, but all the planets would become wanderers in space, naturally leads one to investigate along new lines.

Geology is in some respects a new science. It lacks a great deal of being complete, but what has been discovered only confirms the Genesis account. In Gen. i, 1, we have the statement that, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." It is next said, "The earth was without form and void," etc. Geology has confirmed this, for down below the strata of eocene, rock, coal, etc., is found the azoic, or archaen rocks, which testify to the commencement of the work of creation as outlined in the first chapter of Genesis. Resting upon this azoic foundation we find the primordial resting uncomfortably. At this point in time the earth was subjected to most violent and sudden changes. No doubt this was when the Creator put forth his hand to prepare the earth for man. What followed is well known. We see the Genesis account confirmed in several particulars:

1. Geology has, according to various methods of studying it, from five to ten grand divisions, then subdivisions; but all geologists agree that these divisions are not yet fixed, and hence geology is not an exact science. It follows, then, that the six days of the Bible account still overturned. I believe, however, by having read different text-books, that the science will finally settle down into about six periods of time, representing the different days of creation.

2. The Genesis account expressly says man was created last. On the same day also was created the beasts of the field, etc. The last thing that geology brings forth is man, just as he is in structure to-day, every tooth, bone, etc. He is placed as the last work of God, in Genesis and confirmed by geology, with no progenitor except God! According to geology, man suddenly appears upon the scene; according to Genesis, God is his maker! Could any better testimony be desired? Thus geology shows the beginning and ending according to Genesis.

With "evolution broken at the neck," to use Bishop Keener's words, in that "spontaneous generation" is proven false, and Genesis and geology in accord. With Newton's exclamation, "The undevout astronomer is mad!" it seems that science and religion are joined in holy wedlock; and God is exalted and glorified! But, says one, man is an evolution! I ask, from what? The oldest bones and skeletons found show the same man as he exists to-day. It is perfectly silly to hear the exploded notions of the past brought forward with an effort to prove man as having "ascended" or "descended" from some inferior animal. I suggest to such persons to get the latest text-books of recognized geologists. But one reason will be given which will suffice to clear the minds of persons unfamiliar with the subject. If mankind descended from the ape, then the ape should have, by the law of nature, subsided. But he is still here just as in the beginning. Man has not changed a single iota, from the beginning; so it follows that they are separate, and have no connection in any way with each other.

I can not close this short article without reaffirming my belief in the six literal days of creation. Why should it be thought impossible that this earth should be created in six days? Persons who will pause to think of the difference between the Creator working and the Creator in charge after creation, can readily see what he can accomplish when he is in action. It is said the Creator worked in those six days. In one night, when the fury of the elements was turned loose, the fair city of Galveston was wrecked, $20,000,000 worth of property swept away, and 8,000 souls called to account! When the Lord God Almighty stood upon the deck of our earth-ship, and commanded, the titanic forces of the elements became his servants, and everywhere the work went on, to be completed in six days.

God's power is glimpsed afterwards in the Flood, destruction of Sodom, etc., and in Revelations we see what will come to pass in the last days. God is supreme, and when he shall tread the earth in anger on that last and final day men shall call on rocks to hide themselves, for the great day of his wrath has come!

COME NEAR.

There are some things which will do little good far off. A man might stand outside a house on a bitter night, and, looking through the window, see very plainly a glowing fire in the generous fireplace, without being any warmer for it. To thaw his chilled fingers, he must come in and come near.

A fountain of water may be sprung, clear and cool, at arm's length, but what good will it do if a thirsty passer-by does not come near enough to take a drink? Then, too, no matter how wholesome and invitING any food may be, the hungry boy will not have the good of it if he does not take and eat it.

So there are other things, more important than fire or food or drink, which can not be used at a distance. It will do no good to read of the "water of life" in the Bible, if one does not take it. Jesus calls, "Come unto me." It is not easy to keep up a conversation with a friend at a distance; and especially if one is in trouble, it is impossible to tell one's griefs in a loud tone at a distance.

So, let all come near, come very close to the Savior, so that his words can be heard in the heart, and his help may be felt each moment.—Happy Hours.

Gather off your beech trees, in the budding Spring days, a little brown shell, in which lies tender green leafage, and if you will carefully strip it, you will find, packed in a compass that might almost go through the eye of a needle, the whole of that which afterward in the sunshine is to spread and grow as the yellow-green foliage which delights and freshens the eye. So in Christ, to be unfolded through slow generations, in accordance with human experience and wants, is all that men can know or need know concerning God and themselves and the relations of both—their duties, their hopes, their fears, and their love.—Alexander Maclaren.

FERN SPRINGS, MISS.

We have been returned to the Winstonville charge to serve the second year. We have been kindly and universally received, and we are looking to the Lord to help us in doing a good year's work. I will be prepared to help any of the brethren in their meetings this year any time that they need me, provided it does not conflict with the plan of my own charge. I love revival work, and shall do all I can to unite with pastor and people to build up believers and convert sinners wherever I go to assist in meetings.

May the Lord bless us this year in doing a great work! J. H. BASS.

Backache.

So many women suffer from it. It mars alike their hours of work and pleasure. Backache is generally a symptom of derangement of the delicate womanly organs. It is useless therefore to apply plasters and similar local treatments. A cure can only be effected when the cause of the ache is removed. The use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will cure the debilitating drains, the inflammation, ulceration and displacement which cause backache, sideache, headache and many other aches and pains. "Favorite Prescription" contains no alcohol and is absolutely free from opium, cocaine and other narcotics. It agrees with the most delicate persons.

"I took your medicine six months and I feel now like a new person," writes Miss Annie Stephens, of Bellville, Wood Co., W. Va. "Have no backache, no headache, no pain anywhere. I took seven bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and seven bottles of his 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I think there is no medicine like Dr. Pierce's. I can't speak highly enough of your medicine for it has done me so much good. I don't feel tired as I used to, nor sick. I feel well and think there is no medicine equal to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription."

SALUTATORY.

In taking charge of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE I salute its friends and patrons in the name of the Lord Jesus, whom I serve. I enter upon the work fully realizing the responsibility that is upon me. I have no ambition except to advance the cause of the Master and to build up our beloved Methodism. Inspired by these motives, I promise to do the best I can. I pray for the help of the Lord and the co-operation of the brethren within the bounds of the patronizing Conferences, without which all my work will be in vain.

I ask all to remember me in their prayers, and to unite with me in earnest efforts to make an acceptable and useful paper.

Your servant in Christ Jesus,
JNO. W. BOSWELL.

New Orleans, Jan. 18, 1901.

THE OUTLOOK.

Judged by the heartiness with which the brethren of the patronizing Conferences determined to stand by the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, we can but feel that the outlook is encouraging. The North Mississippi was first to act. At that Conference the question whether to establish a paper for Mississippi, or continue the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE as the official organ of the Conference, was freely and fully discussed. After a lengthy debate the vote was largely in favor of the latter proposition. Another vote fixed the period for "the ensuing four years." After the vote, many who heartily favored a new paper fell into line and promised co-operation.

The Mississippi Conference, fully as intent on a Mississippi Methodist as its neighbor on the north, not only gave the newly-elected editor a cordial endorsement, but voted that the establishment of another paper was impracticable. This settled the matter, so far as the ADVOCATE is concerned, for the present, and gives it the right of way, with the promise on the part of the Conferences to work for its wider circulation. This we believe the brethren will do.

In the Louisiana Conference there has been no disturbing question. Here now, as it has ever been, there is but one sentiment—to stand by the old ADVOCATE. The editor was much pleased and encouraged by his reception and endorsement at the session in Baton Rouge. Sentiment is all right, and it has been freely expressed.

It now remains for the brethren to go to work and redeem their promises. We confidently rely upon them. Surely, with such unanimity of expression each brother will feel himself bound to do his best for the paper, whether he voted to continue it as the Conference organ or not. If pledges are carried out, the good of the paper for the future is assured. The pledges of Methodist preachers are good.

"KNOW THEM WHICH LABOR AMONG YOU."

The pastor is too often accepted simply as a preacher and administrator of church ordinances. As one set to rule in the church, he is not known. That he is God's messenger, sent of the Holy Spirit and charged with duties of the highest importance to the church—duties which he only can perform—does not seem to enter the minds of hundreds of church members. For this state of things the preacher himself is sometimes to blame. He encourages these false notions. He asserts no authority, and actually, by his manner of living, he degrades himself to the level of a man of society. He has an official title, but he gives to it no weight. His name carries no influence as a minister of the gospel.

Preachers often gain the confidence and love of the people, and succeed in bringing many into the church without instructing them in the nature and design of the church and ministry, and the mutual obligations of pastor and people. The result is warm attachment to the preacher without any love for the church. The preacher is loved for his own sake, not as a representative of Christ and his church. Built on such a foundation, no church can stand.

St. Paul gave some instructions on this subject. To the Corinthians, among whom there had arisen strife over men, he was very plain, even going so far as to forbid them to "glory in men." He was tenderer in expression, but no less emphatic in speaking to the Thessalonians. What he said to them may with propriety be said to the churches now: "Know them which labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake." This is simply an earnest exhortation to the churches to ackuowledge (I. Cor. xvi, 18) their pastors as Christ's ambassadors, called and set apart for the work of the ministry, and sent into the field by the Holy Spirit. The preacher does not go to the people of his own accord, nor as a hireling, but of necessity. Like Paul, he may affirm his commission, but declare, "though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me, yea, woe is me, if I preach not the gospel." God's dependence is on such men—men who feel divinely called, and who do nothing but preach the gospel.

The Methodist ministry is peculiar. Our preachers not only profess to be called of God, but they give themselves entirely to the church, to go and labor wherever in the godly judgment of their superior officers it is thought best for them to go. In doing this they surrender nothing; instead, they have honor heaped upon them, and they work for the glory of God. If any one of the thousands of itinerants in our ranks is prompted to the work by a secular motive, all we can say is: He has strange notions of what constitutes a money-making business, or an easy way of living. We say this because, as a matter of fact, uot half of our preachers are paid anything like what they could make in some other calling. Were it not for the love of Christ which constraineth them, they would be engaged in secular work.

The pastor is "over the church" by divine appointment. This means that he is set to "rule," not to make laws, nor to "lord it over God's heritage," but to see that the rules and regulations of the church are observed. His obligation in this respect is of the most serious character. He promises to do this "before God and the congregation." Ruling, however, in the literal sense of the word, is but a small part of the pastor's business. He is charged to "feed the flock of Christ," to watch over his people as a shepherd watches his sheep. He must know his people, visit from house to house, go to their offices, stores, shops, factories, fields, anywhere, and at any time or cost. After knowing them, he must adapt his ministry to "their several necessities" by words of comfort, exhortation, warning, reproof, or rebuke. All this he must do, "that the Word of God and the ministry be not blamed." The pastor's duties are many and varied. His head and heart and hands are full.

'Tis not a cause of small import
The pastor's care demands;
But what might fill an angel's heart,
And filled a Savior's hands.

But all duties are not on one side. The church is required to recognize the pastor in his capacity as such, and to be advised by him. This is what is meant by the injunction, "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves." This the church ought to do readily and gladly, because "they watch for souls as they that must give account."

The Thessalonians were exhorted to esteem their pastors "very highly"—literally, to put upon them a very high estimate. They were to do this "in love," not for the sake of the men who fill the office, but "for their work's sake." They are Christ's chosen representatives, ministers by whom men are converted and brought into the church, and for these reasons are entitled to be heard, respected, and obeyed. Under no circumstances is the pastor to be ignored and set aside, as though he had no authority, and was unworthy of confidence or love. To withhold the pastor's due, and then expect him to succeed in his work, is hardness and unreasonableness beyond the Egyptian task-masters, who required the Israelites to make brick without straw.

Scriptural obedience to pastors involves no hardship, nor requires the surrender of manhood. No rights are invaded by the pastor, no privileges are abridged, no interference with temporal interests of parishioners is sought or allowed. The faithful man of God repays the confiding soul with an oversight in spiritual things, and an earnest solicitude that assures of sympathy, kindly advice, and friendly help at all times.

Mutual recognition of the relation and duties of pastor and people will induce more thorough co-operation in all the work of the church, and result in great good to the cause of the Master.

A CASE FOR PITY.

Up North occasionally a few of the "truly loyal" decline to associate in public with "ex-rebels," and down South a few of the old Confederates refuse to hold fraternal intercourse with the Yankees. The most striking case of the kind is reported as having occurred at Lincoln, Neb., on the evening of the 3rd of January, at a public reception. General Fitzhugh Lee, now of the regular army, and commander of the Department of Missouri, was the guest of honor. A member of the retiring governor's staff, General Victor Vifquan, was also a guest. This gentleman, it is said, caused a "little stir" at the reception by declining to appear in public with General Lee because the latter had once been a Confederate soldier. This, too, notwithstanding he had served as a lieutenant-colonel under General Lee during the war with Spain.

The war between the States closed more than thirty-five years ago, and it seems to us too late for citizens, either North or South, to indulge, much less to give expression to, their prejudices in an ugly fashion. And really we do not think a man emphasizes his patriotism in a commanding way by declining friendly relations with an honorable foe. Indeed, compared with the man who takes his former enemy by the hand, or marches by his side in celebration of peace, we should say his patriotism is depreciated.

Personally, we are Southern in our sentiments and feelings, in every fiber of our being, and fully content to stay and work on our own side of the line, but we desire to cultivate fraternal feelings with all good people, especially with the brave and magnanimous men of the North, though they may have been our strongest foes during the war. The braver they were during the conflict, and the harder they fought, the better their friendship in time of peace. The epaulets of a Federal general may have been big enough to cover his shoulders, but if at the end of more than a third of a century he declines to appear in public with an honored and noble son of the South, because that son fought under the "Stars and Bars," we are obliged to think that he is puffed up, not with patriotism, but with sectional hate, else is suffering with weakness of the brain.

THE ORDER OF SERVICE.

There is a disposition in many quarters to violate our order of public worship as laid down in the book of discipline. The choir is frequently charged with the infraction—at least, it is said that the choir in some places assumes the direction of the service. This, of course, means that the preacher-in-charge allows the choir to violate the plainly written law. But our observation is that the violence done to the law is not always to be charged to the choir. The preachers are often guilty. They announce hymns, and read the lessons at the wrong time. This makes it necessary to pray when something else is prescribed. A strange preacher conducting service after his own order is sure to confuse a congregation accustomed to Methodist usage. We have known preachers to omit the closing prayer altogether, and some have gone so far as to ask the congregation to "stand and be dismissed with a short prayer." The law requires our preachers and people to kneel in prayer, and the preacher to dismiss the people with the benediction.

Every preacher is bound by solemn promise to "keep our rules, not mend them." This he must do, "not for wrath, but for conscience sake." He has no more right to violate our order of worship by substituting one of his own than he has to violate one of our General Rules. And what he is bound to do himself, he is also bound to see that others do who are under his control. If the choir "assumes the direction of the service," do not blame the choir. The blame rests on the preacher. He is the responsible person.

DEATH OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

The reign of good Queen Victoria of England came to an end on Jan. 22, at 6:45 P. M. (London time). Her death was a shock to the civilized world, notwithstanding several days previous to the event the seriousness of her condition was generally known. No sovereign that ever reigned on the English throne commanded the respect, and won and retained the love of the people, as did Victoria. She came to the throne when less than twenty years of age, and from the very first to the present time—a period of more than sixty years—she has literally been the idol of the English nation. Through all these years she labored for the moral and temporal welfare of her subjects. She maintained the prestige of England, and lived to see her dominion extend until every hour of the twenty-four the sun shone on her possessions. Much of England's greatness on land and sea is due the dead Queen.

Her death is doubtless due in part to her extreme age, but it is no secret that she was opposed to the present war in Africa, and that her views and wishes were overridden by her Ministers of State. The slaughter of her soldiers, their oft-entrapment by the Boers, and the recent reverses sustained in the war, have, it is affirmed, borne heavily on her mind and heart, and caused a break-down of her physical powers. This hastened her death. The world is in mourning.

In anticipation of the Queen's death, thoughtful men have been much concerned for the future of England. The heir to the throne is so different in his moral character from his mother, so reckless in his way of living, having identified himself with the sporting men of the kingdom, and never having evinced anything like a strong and active mind, or any great love for the people at large, that the hour of the Queen's demise has been looked forward to with dread. For the reins of government to go into weak and wicked hands would be nothing less than a calamity. But the God of nations still rules, and it is the hope and prayer of God's people everywhere that the new ruler, Edward VII., may follow in the footsteps of his illustrious mother, and add more and more to the greatness and glory of England.

The idea that denominationalism is a hindrance to the progress of the gospel is not true. Those who so declare are possessed of a sentimentalism that they mistake for Christian liberality. All such people are unsafe guides in religious matters. Our observation is, that when Christian work is pushed by men who adhere closely to denominational lines, the church is strengthened and enlarged much more than when work is done on so-called liberal principles. The best and most successful revivals are conducted in our houses of worship, not in tents and tabernacles dedicated to nothing, or to a fad which is about equal to nothing. Great tabernacle meetings generate excitement, sometimes great sensations, but revivals conducted in the churches by the pastors and their co-laborers, not only produce excitement, but they result in adding the saved to the family of God. We are not yet ready to surrender our denominational life.

Whenever editors of the secular press undertake to connect the missionaries in China with the Boxer outrages, no discrimination whatever is made, but with singular unanimity they accuse all alike, leaving their ill-informed readers to believe that the missionaries, without exception, are equally guilty. The latest accusation we have noticed is by the Detroit Free Press, which, after affirming that the missionaries interrupted the process of development in China, declares that "they have not yet grasped the distinction between preaching Christ crucified, and trying to take a master hand in things temporal." If this is true, why did not the Free Press point out "the too forward" and meddling missionaries, and relieve the innocent ones of suspicion? We should like to know whether the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, forgot their business and undertook to assist in the management of the government.

In a symposium on the subject of hazing, printed in one of our daily papers, three classes of men expressed themselves—ministers, lawyers, and a class denominated by the editor "the great unwashed." Two of the preachers favored the practice, the lawyers were divided, but "the great unwashed," almost to a man, violently opposed it. The expression of opinion thus publicly given was an eye-opener. It revealed that so-called civilized men are not entirely free from the characteristic instincts of the "natural brute beast," and that there is a settled purpose in the unrenewed heart to obtain revenge when occasion offers. We did not suppose, until we heard from these gentlemen, that any man in the land favored the shameful thing. We now know better, and we are sorry to learn that any preacher is willing to place himself on the side of hazers. Since reading the symposium, it is easier for us to see how men can favor modern football.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. G. Evans, writing from Grand Cane, La., under date of Jan. 7, says: "I have now been at my new post two Sundays, and have had a very auspicious opening."

Rev. T. J. Upton, of Amite City, La, has commenced his second year at the above charge under the most flattering circumstances. Bro. Upton is in high favor with his people.

Bishop Key is now holding the Mexican Conferences, which began at El Paso. These are the last Conferences of the round except the Baltimore, which will convene early in April.

The Central Methodist, of Jan. 16, says: "Dr. S. S. Keener is acting as editor and publisher pro tem. of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. He seems to understand the business." We fully agree with our brother of the Central.

The address of Mrs. J. F. Evans, ADVOCATE correspondent for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference, is changed from Enpora, Miss., to Vaiden, Miss. Those who desire to communicate with her will please take notice.

Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Jr., of the St. Louis Conference, read "an interesting and earnest paper" before the St. Louis Preachers' Meeting on Monday, the fourteenth of January, on "Church Entertainments as a Means of Raising Money." His paper was heartily endorsed by the meeting.

Dr. A. H. Mitchell, of the Alabama Conference, is now ninety-three years of age, and though unable to be much in public, he writes occasionally, and takes great interest in the affairs of Church and State. He is happy, and fully believes that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

We had the pleasure last week of meeting Mr. W. C. Everett, manager of our Branch Publishing House at Dallas, Texas. He scored a great victory when he secured for the Publishing House the contract for furnishing the books of the Dallas Public Library, a new institution, the gift of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, of Pittsburg, Penn.

Rev. J. B. Mitchell, one of our Millsaps College boys, is doing a fine work at Guthrie, Okla. He has the esteem and confidence of all the people. At the opening of the Territorial Legislature he was elected chaplain of the Upper House (the Council.) We rejoice in the success of our brother. May he be abundantly useful in his new field!

The many friends of Rev. W. D. Matthews, once a member of the North Mississippi Conference, will be glad to learn of his well-doing in the Indian Mission Conference. He is stationed at Norman, the university town of the Territory, "pleasantly located and well cared for," as he informs us in a letter of Jan. 11. His church is the strongest we have in the Territory.

A note from Rev. G. W. Bachman, published last week, informed us of the serious illness of Mrs. S. M. Thames at Minter City, Miss. Another note by Rev. R. A. Burroughs tells us that she is suffering with typhoid fever, and that "everything that skilled nursing and medical treatment possible is being done for her." Let the church remember her and her husband in prayer.

THE PIANOS AND ORGANS Represented in our exclusive agencies embrace all the requirements of a perfect high-grade instrument. We make terms to suit, and guarantee our goods.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The accounts for subscriptions, advertisements, etc., due Dr. W. C. Black, former editor and publisher of this paper, are still in the office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. It is important both to Dr. Black and the present publisher that these accounts be settled as soon as possible. We hope every brother who knows himself to be indebted to the paper will not delay a day. Some of these accounts are long past due. The money is needed. Brethren, one and all, please respond. NEW ORLEANS NOTES.

The good women of the Home Mission Societies of New Orleans are engaged this week in a union meeting for prayer. Every day will be thus spent except Saturday. We trust their prayers following the sermons preached on the subject last Sunday by our pastors in the city, will result in great good.

The pastors in the city, together with the various committees appointed, are actively engaged preparing for the great Missionary Conference to be held in New Orleans in April. Everything will be in readiness for the reception and entertainment of the delegates. It will be the largest gathering of the kind ever held in the South.

The Preachers' Meeting was well attended Monday morning. The question for discussion was: How to Make the District Conference More Profitable. The question was well discussed in short, but plain and forcible talks by all the preachers except one or two, the principal speech having been made by Rev. F. N. Parker, who had been previously appointed to lead. The discussion was altogether with reference to the New Orleans District Conference, which, by common consent, has not heretofore accomplished for the church what it ought, because of the limited attendance of the laymen. To get them interested is the work before the preachers. The question for consideration at the next meeting is: What Can We Do to Bring about a General Revival in the City? The subject will be presented in all our pulpits in the city next Sunday.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATIONS.

Our intermediate examinations will begin Thursday, Jan. 31, and continue until Saturday, Feb. 9. The regular work of the second term of the current session will begin Monday, Feb. 11.

This will be a favorable time for new students to enter. Catalogues and other information will be furnished, to persons interested, on application.

W. B. MURRAH, Pres.

A recent visitor to Jackson, La., stated that Centenary College is in excellent condition, and the faculty in high favor with the students. The members of the Union Literary Society will shortly renovate their hall. Mr. I. W. Cooper, son of Rev. I. W. Cooper, is at the head of the movement.

TO LOUISIANA READERS.

DEAR BRETHREN: At last all the copy for the Minutes is in the hands of the printer, and a large part of it has been "set up." The printer guarantees us a first-class job in every respect. We have this year made several changes in the get-up of the Minutes, which, I hope, will be acceptable to the brethren. These changes run the cost of the "Annual" up to about $300, of which $153.38 is paid by the Conference; the balance had to be covered by advertisements. To insure the collection for Minutes in full, I would suggest that the brethren collect for next year's issue from those who read this year's. The cost will be on the book for their convenience.

We will lose no time now in getting the Minutes in the hands of the brethren. The printer promises to do the work as fast as possible. WM. G. EVANS.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

The January number of The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine has been received. The leading articles are all good; their subjects are: The Naval Apprentice System, The Terrible Apaches; Trinity College of North Carolina; The Story of Home, Sweet Home; James Thomson's Bicentenary, and The Popular Illustrated History of Methodism. The present instalment of The History of Methodism is of special interest, as it treats of The Period of Unrest and Secession. The Methodist Magazine Pub. Co., St. Louis, Mo.

The Delineator is replete with all the latest array of taking costumes, patterns and suits for the ladies. All one to the masculine mind, until perfectly fitted upon some beautiful woman; then all or any pattern is just the thing. There is a well-selected number of short stories; an article on the Education of the Indian Girl; a review of the newest books. The "Ann Arbor" story and Flagging the Cannon Ball are both very thrilling. A Resume of Noble Benefactions of Women, and a review of Charlotte Bronte's late Romance, are some of the striking articles in a superb magazine.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews, for January, is fully up to the standard of this excellent periodical. In addition to the regular departments of general news and current events, there are leading articles upon the following subjects: Sir John Tenniel's Fifty Years on "Punch;" a Sketch of Mark Twain, A Trust to Protect Nature's Beauty, President Gilman at Johns Hopkins, Cushman Kellogg Davis, The Career of Henry Villard, Foreign Missions in the Twentieth Century, The Electors and the Coming Election, Friars, Filipinos and Land, The New Australian Commonwealth. To us one of the most excellent articles is that by Edmund F. Merriam on Foreign Missions in the Twentieth Century. The Review of Reviews Co., 13 Astor Place, New York.

Dr. DuBose has gotten out a handbook for the Leagues called Helps for Devotional Meetings. It has been long needed by the young people in leading their prayer meetings. While it gives a very good outline on the topics, it is not exhaustive and leaves room for the search of the earnest student. Just enough to lead off the thought and give the right trend to the talk upon these topics. He is quite strong in his points, not taking any far-fetched view of the topics, but the clear and common-sense treatment of every subject which leads direct to the main lines of conversion and service for Christ. This hand-book should be in the hands of every leader of our various chapters. Its cost is the small sum of ten cents. It is of first importance that all our League first vice-presidents send on and obtain one of these hand-books.

St. Nicholas, for January, is full of stories of thrilling adventure that would hold the eye of any boy or girl that should venture to open its pages and take only a cursory glance within. Historical stories, those of the deep sea secrets which are brought to light by that most dangerous business of the divers. All those canny facts of ship wrecks are here brought to light. Then the inevitable continued story always to be expected, of that lost boy who walks until he has worn himself out, drops to sleep and dreams of home, then wakes to his lost condition. Then the tale with the old negro mammy in it. Why do children take to this oft-told tale? It is always fresh and full of enjoyment. The yachting story is here, with the frigate dancing over the sea. Finally, without which no boy or girl's magazine would be complete, is that department of animals of various degrees of ferocity and intelligence. It is a splendid magazine for the young—all clean, chaste in every particular, and no yellow-back episodes in it.

The Scribner's, for January, opens with a beautifully illustrated Article on Modern Athens, by George Horton. This is followed by a short story, A Day Together—Mary Tappan Wright; then A Prayer of Old Age, a poem of fair merit by Robert Bridges. This is followed up by No Sinecure, which details the adventures of an amateur cracksman, by Then follows an article upon Russia of To-Day, which introduces The Caucasus, with illustrations which excel those of Modern Athens. The Comparison of Armies in China is critically written, giving a full and no doubt just statement of each nation represented in China. Japs first, Russian second in equipment, but Americans always gave a good account of themselves. Auguste Rodin is introduced by W. C. Brownell in his fine work as finished sculptor. The Fight against Advertising Disfigurement, that wantonness of making everything pay from a front fence to a rock on a mountain side in advertising, is treated strongly by Arthur Reed Kimball. The last story, The Plague Ship, closes a very fine number worthy to begin the century.

Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is an excellent remedy for children. For croup, whooping-cough and measle-cough it has no equal.

TO-DAY.

BY P. M'ARTHUR.

In the calendars of greatness
Are but nobly spent to-days;
For to-morrow brings no laure's,
And the waiting win no boys.
To the poet comes the vision,
To the painter comes the dream;
But only in the present
Can he shape the golden theme.

The statesman never falters
With the time to do at hand,
And the warrior never slumbers
When the trumpets rouse the land;
The sailor spreads his canvas
When the wind blows out to sea,
And to-day is turned the furrow
For the harvest yet to be.

—The Outlook.

HELPFUL LIVES.

When we have given our money to help the poor and spoken our most encouraging words to help the weak, we have not yet exhausted all our resources. A true Christian may help others as much by his life as by his words and gifts. Nay, the principal contribution which anyone can make to the life of the world is not his word or deed, but himself.

It is a vain thing to try to set a good example without a good heart. A life which is merely acted is not genuine, and the counterfeit will soon be detected. Artificial lives are like the artificial flowers which one sees in the market. They are beautiful to the eye, but shed no fragrance on the air. The bees never hover about them. A good life proceeding from a good heart creates a spiritual atmosphere which greatly affects everyone who comes within its range.

It is said that the physical atmosphere exerts a powerful effect on the bodies and minds of men. The physician knows that his patients will be more comfortable to day because the sky is clear and the atmosphere is charged with ozone. The teacher knows that his scholars will be more restless, less studious, and more dull to-day, because the atmosphere is murky and heavy. The police in Paris and London know that there will be a larger number of suicides in those great cities to day because the atmosphere is heavy with fogs and vapors.

So it is with the spiritual atmosphere. Children who are brought up in an atmosphere which is free from the fogs of skepticism, doubt, selfishness, and vice, and charged with the ozone of love and truth, will grow to be stronger and better men and women than others. It is said that Thackeray's mother was a model of gentleness and tenderness, and that the great author owed more to her in the formation of his character and the determination of the tone of his literary productions than to all other factors. The tenderness which he received from his mother he lavished on his wife and daughters, and poured out through his pen into those charming books which have been read with so much pleasure by thousands. How much his mother helped him to help the world! How much Mrs. Susanna Wesley helped her sons to bless the world by her spirit! She helped her son John to preach the gospel, and her son Charles to sing the truth into the hearts of men.

Some children grow up in a mercenary atmosphere, some in a literary atmosphere, some in an atmosphere of pride and vanity, some in an atmosphere of sin and vice. There is little hope for them. Let parents create an atmosphere in the home by pure lives which will save their children from evil. The church can create an atmosphere in the community where it is located which will exert a powerful influence over the lives of the people. It can not be done by good preaching alone, or by good singing, or by generous giving, or by regular attendance on the means of grace. These are all good, but not good enough. The chief power of a church is in the lives of its members. Here is the hiding of its power.

The life which is not useful is a wasted life. All the money one can accumulate, all the honor he can achieve, all the knowledge he can acquire can never redeem a selfish life. It is a lost life in spite of all.—Exchange.

PERSONAL RESULTS OF MY BIBLE STUDY.

For fourteen years I have written Sunday-school lessons for the Sunday-School Times without missing a single week. They have been written from all continents, on both ends of the world.

What are the results of such study?

1. An ever-deepening impression of the immeasurable richness of the Word of God. As literature, the Bible is rich in felicitous and intense expression. It has more of the essence of poetry than any other book. It has enriched our language incredibly. It ennobles the humblest reader till his horizons reach to infinity and roof domes over all the stars. The world bears evidence of wisdom, power and adaptation to our education and needs past our finding out, much more past our creation. The more we study and his use the world, the richer in wisdom, power and adaptation it becomes. It is so with the Word. The world and the Word are both evidently from the same source. The world's sparrows, lilies, clouds, seekers of hid treasures, sowers of grain, relations of sons and fathers, husbands and wives, are admirable, though feeble expressions of those spiritual relations portrayed in the Word. It is no wonder that Paul prays that the eyes of the understanding of his Ephesian converts be enlightened, or that the Psalmist prays "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." Human faculties, without vivifying grace, are not sufficient for these things of the infinite mind.

2. The best ideas and ideals for the human race are in the Word of God. No human poet ever dreamed, no philosopher ever evolved from the depth of his consciousness, no optimist ever imagined the things God has prepared for them that love him. He begins with a rectification of the man's nature, the addition of faculties by a new birth: goes on by the constant illumination and leading into all truth by the present activity of the Holy Spirit and the stimulus of truth newly discovered by every student. The ideal is the spirit of a just man made perfect in a perfect state. It is no wonder that under such conditions one comes into experiences that are, as Paul says, "impossible to word" in the poor speech of men: that we are told that, by taking the necessary preliminary steps of being strengthened by the Spirit in the inner man, we may thoroughly comprehend the length and breadth and depth and height of the love of God that passeth knowledge, and be filled in every faculty with all the fullness of God. To these unspeakable heights the Bible leads up by a thousand steps.—Bishop H. W. Warren, D. D., L.L.D., in S. S. Times.

A Scotch woman used to lay aside a penny a day for missions. A visitor, incidentally learning that the poor woman had been for many days without meat, gave her a sixpence to buy some. But she said, "I have long done very well on my porridge, so I will give the sixpence also to God." This fact was narrated at a missionary breakfast, and the host and his guests were profoundly impressed. The host said: "I have never denied myself so much as a chop for God." A very large sum (£2,200) was immediately subscribed as a result of that touching incident. Ought it not to make a similar impression upon our hearts? What have we every denied ourselves for the advancement of Christ's kingdom? Has it ever cost us the necessities of life to show our love for our Savior?—Good News.

An English country correspondent suggests a practical way of serving the temperance cause. For years this lady has made it her custom to offer to traders, postmen, telegraph boys and others calling at her house some temperance drink—tea, coffee or lemonade, according to the season—and has often been told that it was more acceptable than beer. She thinks that probably from mere want of thought, teetotalers are liable to get the reputation of meanness in this matter, as workmen who are offered beer elsewhere tell her they seldom receive any substitute for it from temperance folk. Judging by her experience, the little trouble involved is abundantly repaid in thanks, and may often, especially in thirsty weather, keep men from turning into saloons.—Northwestern Advocate.

SUGGESTIONS FOR BIBLE STUDY.

Pascal said: "Other books must be known in order to be loved; but the Bible must be loved in order to be known."

The Bible indeed should be studied, should be dug into, as one digs for hidden treasure; but it must be lived in order that it may be understood. In an address to the students at one of our colleges a distinguished man urged them to have as their motto in after life, "One hour a day to study and literature." One hour a day given to the study of the Bible will, in the course of a few years, enable anyone to have a knowledge of it, and enable him to speak aptly and wisely concerning it. Give one-half an hour; give a quarter of an hour; give ten minutes every day to the reading of God's book, and by next rally Sunday you will have read the entire Bible. How many will begin at once?

What is necessary to make a teacher efficient in teaching the Bible?

He must know God as his Father; Christ as his Savior and Judge; the Holy Ghost as his Comforter and Guide. He must know himself, his weaknesses and opportunities. He must know those whom he is called to teach. He must know the book.

One of the first requirements of a teacher is that he should have a thorough knowledge of the subject he is to teach. As Sunday-school teachers, we teach the Bible—the Word of God. We can not teach what we do not know ourselves; if we are to teach the Bible, we must know it. How many of us know it? How many have a fair knowledge of its contents? How many of us even know the names of the books of the Bible in their order? How many could give the leading events of Old Testament history? How many could write a sketch of the life of Christ? And when we come to the more important things of doctrine, how very, very little indeed we know. O, how much depends on our careful and faithful study of the Bible with Christ as our Teacher! And what stronger motive could we give for it than that it is his word we teach—his own work we are doing?—Marie E. Stair, in St. Mark's Quarterly.

Consistent with its policy to constantly improve its service, the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad is now relaying its track between New Orleans and Slidell, a distance of twenty-nine miles, with new steel rails, weighing seventy-five pounds to the yard.

The entire line has been ballasted in the most approved manner from end to end, and, notwithstanding the increased price of steel, two-thirds of the entire mileage has been relaid with 75-pound new steel rails, and the balance of the line will be relaid as rapidly as the material can be procured.

These improvements are not only an indication of the prosperous condition of the property, but an assurance of safety and comfort to travelers.

The entire Queen and Crescent system, of which the New Orleans and Northeastern forms a part, is now a thoroughly up-to-date system of railroads running the very best equipment in the most modern style.

HOW TO SWEETEN LIFE'S TRIALS.

Open all the doors to the religion of Christ. It will make this world a paradise. It will sweeten the every-day trials of life, the little perplexities and annoyances, little sorrows and trials, little disappointments and mistakes. Life is largely filled with little matters. We should not wait for great occasions, important missions, gigantic labors, bitter persecutions, mighty oppositions. These will come to but few. But little difficulties, petty troubles, will come to us all; and these are the things which wear away life. Religion will sweeten these.

Nature ever helps the tiny objects. A small flower blossoms at my feet. The clouds gather swiftly in the sky to water it; infinite chemistry works at its root to nourish it; the mighty power of gravitation and other equally unconquerable forces hold it and guard it; the sun rises and shines to paint beauty upon its cheek; the winds are marshaled to fan it; the stars are lighted up in the sky to cheer it by night; everything is made to contribute to the comfort of this tiny flower. God's providence looks after little things. The religion of Christ is suited to tired women and peevish children. It is suited to the office, the cradle, the sewing-machine, the headache, the heartache, the nursery, the school-room, the lonely attic, the evening rambles. It should sweeten all the moments, thoughts and feelings, the voice, the conversation, the toils and afflictions of life, the temper, and the heart.—Rev. J. N. Fradenburgh, D. D.

THE SECRET OF WINSOMENESS.

What is it in Jesus that so draws men, that wins their allegiance away from every other master, that makes them ready to leave all for his sake, and to follow him through peril and sacrifice even to death? Is it his wonderful teaching? "No man ever spake like this man." Is it his power as revealed in his miracles? Is it his sinlessness? The most malignant scrutiny could find no fault in him. Is it the perfect beauty of his character? None, nor all of these, will account for the wonderful attraction of Jesus. Love is the secret. He came into the world to reveal the love of God; he was the love of God in human flesh. His life was all love. In most wonderful ways during all his life did he reveal love. Men saw it in his face, and felt it in his touch, and heard it in his voice. This was the great fact which his disciples felt in his life. His friendship was unlike any friendship they had ever seen before or even dreamed of. It was this that drew them to him, and made them love him so deeply, so tenderly. Nothing but love will kindle love. Power will not do it. Holiness will not do it. Gifts will not do it; men will take your gifts and then repay you with hatred. But love begets love; heart responds to heart. Jesus loved.—Delan.

We must check the angry word before it rises to our lips. St. Alphonsus Lignori says that the infallible rule for preventing angry speech is to keep absolutely silent until our anger has quite subsided. Babbling, tattling talk does even more mischief than the speech of hasty temper, and we must especially guard ourselves from this ugly, foolish habit of thoughtless chatter. All of the wise-heads seem to have given some time and thought to the correction of the tongue. Here is another old maxim:

"If wisdom's ways you'd truly seek,
Five things observe with care—
Of whom you speak, to whom you speak,
And how, and when, and where."

But there are many who will tell us how, and when, and where to speak. What we learn for ourselves is the art of silence—the most inoffensive of all arts. Silence induces thought, speech scatters it. Gay preserved a wise motto in easily-remembered rhyme:

"My tongue within my lips I rein,
For who talks much must talk in vain."

OBITUARIES.

BROWN—Bro. ROBERT BROWN is no more; a good man gone home. He was born and partly reared in Attala county, Miss. He came to Amite county when quite young. His parents were Baptist, and were good Christian people. He served awhile in the Confederate Army, and made a good soldier. He married a Mrs. Turner (nee Adams) in November, 1872. His wife's father was one of the founders of Old Adams Camp Ground, located in Lincoln county.

About 1875 Bro. Brown was converted and joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Bros. Wood and Tarver, two local preachers, who preached in "out-of-the-way" places, and, doubtless, did much good. His membership was transferred to Adams Church. I was his pastor five years: 1878 79 80 81-82. I soon learned to love Bro. and Sister Brown very dearly. They were among my many staunch friends.

Bro. Brown died in the faith last March. He had been a regular subscriber to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for twenty years. His precious wife, who was truly devoted to him, now lives in McComb City, where Bro. Brown died. May the God of love and mercy watch over her, and guide her safely to her home on high! H. P. LEWIS.

ROUSE—JOHN BOONE, son of J. O. Rouse, was born in April, 1887, and died Sept. 27, 1900, aged thirteen years and five months.

Little Johnnie had been an invalid the greater portion of his life here. Though he was thirteen years of age, yet such was the nature of his affliction he did not appear to be but a mere child—pale, emaciated, and almost helpless; yet the very care that was necessary to minister to his daily wants made his absence to be felt more keenly by those who cared for him, when he took his departure for the glory land. He remained with the dear ones at home as long as it was possible for him to do so, no doubt; and the little body, growing weary with pain, could no longer hold the spirit, and it was borne to the realms of eternal light by angelic messengers. Father and sorrowing relatives of the dear little boy, we bid you look for him in the mansions above in the city of gold. Live close to Jesus here, and after awhile you shall be permitted to see him again. H. B. VANDENBURG.

ELLIS—GLADYS BOYD ELLIS, infant child of T. Q. and Kate Ellis, was born Dec. 7, 1899, and died Sept. 15, 1900.

Few children so tender in age are more lovable or attractive than was little Gladys. Being delicate in body, with its unusual marks or indications of intelligence and lovable disposition, she was at once the object of the tenderest care, watchfulness and love in the home and by the near neighbors. Though her days were few, the little one knew what it was to suffer, and but for our Christ, and what he did and has said of the little ones, such visitations would be more difficult to bear; but since he has said, "Suffer them to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," faith takes hold upon the full promises of the gospel; patiently waiting for the further, fuller and complete unfoldings of a Divine Father's plans concerning us. May Heaven's blessings be upon the bereaved home! R. A. ELLIS.

TUCKER—On the night of Sept. 30, 1900, the home of Rev. and Mrs. E. A. Tucker was made sad by the entrance of the death angel, who bore away the spirit of their infant son, CARL AUGUSTUS. His short life began July 13, 1900. Though his stay here was short, he remained long enough to become the cherished treasure of a devoted father and mother. God sent this child to that home for a purpose. What that purpose was we know not, but may we not with unquestioning faith believe that his life-mission was accomplished? We commend this view to those whose hearts are sad. May God sanctify the life and death of this sweet babe to the good of those who loved him! "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." XXX.

Life is feeling. In some cases it is nearly all feeling. The emotional nature is put into the foreground. Thought and volition are relegated to the rear. A heart in habitual stagnation knows but little of life. A state of coldness is antipodal to the original design. We live when our feelings flow out freely. Vitality displays itself in the gush of emotion. We live in proportion to the throbbing of the heart. Love metes and measures the true existence. The soul which never quivers with excitement and which never answers an inspiring appeal is, to all intents and purposes, dead. The thrilling of the sensibility is one of the forms of a spiritual life.—Texas Advocate.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

Stop thinking of the body; keep it clean and comfortably and becomingly clothed, and then forget the thing in the line which you should endeavor to express through it—man made in the image of God. Your body should be no more to you than your nose, through which you should endeavor to express the idea home.—Selected.

FOR OVER FIFTY YEARS

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

A brittle thing is our earthly happiness—brittle as some thin vase of Venetian glass; and yet neither anxiety, nor sorrow, nor the dart of death, which is mightier than the oak-cleaving thunderbolt, can shatter one thing even so brittle as the earthly happiness of our poor little homes, if we place that happiness under the care of God. But though neither anguish nor death can break it with all their violence, sin can break it at a touch; and selfishness can shatter it, just as there are acids which will shiver the Venetian glass. Sin and selfishness—God's balm does not heal in this world the revenges which they consult.—Canon Farrar.

The "Combination" Bible.

A SUPERB EDITION

of the Holy Scriptures, showing at a glance at the foot of the pages all changes made by the revisers.

New Type. All Proper Names Self-Pronouncing. The Most Valuable Collateral Matter.

There is a steady and increasing demand for first-class Bibles. Everybody is anxious to obtain a copy of the best edition of the Holy Scriptures. Old editions are constantly being replaced by Bibles that are in every way more attractive, and there is practically no limit to the demand.

OUR "COMBINATION" FEATURE.

Hitherto the King James and Revised Versions have been printed in parallel columns, but this makes comparisons of texts tedious and unsatisfactory, and makes the book very unwieldy. We have overcome this difficulty by "combining" the two Versions on the same page, showing at a glance in foot-notes all the Changes, Additions and Omissions made by the Revisers.

THE OLD VERSION PRINTED IN FULL.

The King James Version is the basis, and this Version is read straight along from the text, while the Revised Version is read from the text in combination with the foot-notes. Our "Combination" Feature has met with universal approval and is strongly endorsed by leading Divines and Biblical Scholars.

It is only by a comparison of the two Versions that the greatest benefit can be obtained from reading the Holy Scriptures, and this comparison every reader can easily make by our simple arrangement for showing the changes made by the revisers. This is the greatest triumph of Bible Publishing the World has ever known.

OUR OFFER.

To those unprogressive people who do not read and pay for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE we sell this Bible at the publisher's retail price—$4.25. To our subscribers we sell it at the very low rate of $2. The only condition attached to this offer is that the subscriber must pay his subscription one full year in advance, viz.: to January, 1902. We will send it postpaid to any person who will send us three new cash subscribers at the regular rate. For six new cash subscribers at the regular rate we will send two "Combination" Bibles, postpaid.

For fifty cents additional we will send a Bible with index.

For twenty-five cents additional we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside.

P. S.—We can give no commission on renewals in connection with the above offer.

New Machine Offer.

DEFIANCE NO. 4.

The Defiance Machine is the perfection of simplicity, durability, speed, strength and ease of operation.

Construction. It is constructed of the best material in use, every bearing, without an exception, being of steel or case-hardened.

The Mechanical Devices of this machine are a combination of tried mechanical principles. In detail it differs materially from other machines. Its simplicity is at once apparent, and its great durability is admitted by the best mechanical experts.

The Arm is large and roomy, 8x5¼ inches in the clear.

No Vibration. This machine does not vibrate. Its motion is easy and quiet.

Lock Stitch. It is a lock-stitch shuttle machine.

Speedy, Light, Quiet. It is as speedy, light and quiet-running as any shuttle machine manufactured.

Double Feed—Positive Four-Motion. The double feed possesses advantages over all others. Its very shape and form obviates all the disadvantages arising from double feeds as they have heretofore been constructed, and combines in this machine all the advantages of both the single and double feed, doing away with the objections to either of them.

The operation of the feed mechanism is positive, giving an accurate four-motion movement to the feed without the use of springs.

The Needle Bar. This machine has a self-lubricating needle-bar, which is always kept clean, well-oiled, and the oil can not drop on the work and soil it.

The Needle is absolutely self-setting. No screwdriver is required in setting, a winged thumb nut being used instead.

The machine is self-threading. Put in the bobbin, draw the thread towards you, through the slot and, it is done.

The Loose Pulley for winding the bobbins without running the machine is so constructed as to admit of an instantaneous stoppage and starting of the machine without stopping the treadle movement—a valuable improvement peculiar to this machine.

Automatic Bobbin Winder. The bobbin winder operates automatically, winding the thread on the bobbin regularly and as evenly as the thread on a spool. Can be operated without running the machine.

Extra Attachments, in velvet-lined case, sent free with each machine: 1 Tucker, 1 Ruffler with shirring plate, 1 Hemmer set (4 widths) and Binder, 1 Braider, (Foot and Slide), 1 Thread Cutter, 1 Feller (one piece), 10 Needles, 6 Bobbins, 1 Wrench, 1 Screwdriver, Oil Can filled with oil, Cloth Gauge and Thumb-screw, and a Book of Instructions. The Book of Instructions is profusely illustrated and answers the purpose of a competent teacher.

DEFIANCE NO. 7½.

This cut shows our new and popular style, the No. 7½ Defiance Drop Cabinet, perfectly protecting the machine from dust, and making a convenient and ornamental stand. When machine is ready for use the head is in same position as on ordinary style; when through using, it requires only the turning over of the leaf of table, and the sewing machine head drops into the case or cabinet between the drawers, completely out of sight, forming a handsome table with highly polished top.

No. 3 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of one drawer at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $32. Our price, $18.

No. 4 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $34. Our price, $19.

No. 5 Machine, drop leaf table, bent cover, case of three drawers at each end and center drawer, making seven drawers in all. Dealer's price, $36. Our price, $20.

No. 7½ Machine, Drop head cabinet, case of two drawers at each end and center drawer. Dealer's price, $38. Our price, $23.

All the woodwork is of the best quality, either Light Antique or Golden Oak Finish. For Walnut Woodwork add $2 to above list prices.

The chief difference between Numbers 3, 4, and 5 is in the furniture—i. e., in the number of drawers. If you do not want to pay for the extra drawers, you need not do so. We sell these machines under a ten years' guarantee, by which we mean that if any part gives out by reason of any defect therein, the manufacturer will replace the same free of charge. Moreover, we allow the purchaser to test the machine ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

OUR OFFER.

We will send any one of the above-described machines at the prices named and also send the ADVOCATE free for six months. The only condition attached to this offer is that subscribers who are in arrears must first pay up all arrearages to date. It would be well to avail yourself of this offer at once, as we can not promise that it will last very long. Notice that you take no risk whatever. We pay all the freight.

P. S.—The machine will be shipped direct from the factor in the North.

THE TRUE PHILOSOPHY OF LIFE.

BY REV. ELTON WILSON.

Every rational creature has a philosophy of life. It is his deepest view of the things that be. The thought of the wisest is incomplete and fragmentary. Only the novice and fool ever fully solve the deep and awful mysteries of life. Think we must; there is no escape. This is right; God calls us to the highest thought. And in our reasonings we should exhibit the deep reverence of Kepler, who, in the midst of his discoveries, said, "O God, I think thy thoughts after thee!"

True philosophy is simply rethinking the thoughts of God. The key-note of the deepest philosophy in all literature is found in the simple, short lines of the poet, Browning:

"The acknowledgment of God in Christ
Accepted by thy reason solves for thee
All questions in the earth and out of it."

Man stands in need of a working explanation of life, and reason will not be satisfied without it. All humanity have yearned and sought for it. The innumerable systems of religion and philosophy are but monuments of the earnest questionings of the human spirit. Dull and dark is the mind, cold and stolid the heart, that has not felt this questioning. It is the common experience of every thoughtful soul through all the ages. It came to the Egyptian as he toiled on the pyramids, to the Roman amid the grandeur of the Eternal City, to the Greek as he walked the floors of the Acropolis, to the Hindoo as he worshiped by the Ganges, and to the Jew as he stood by the ever-memorable, storm-beaten shores of Galilee. Like the tide of life, this yearning has overleaped the ages, and swept down upon every continent, and has broken upon every shore, and enkindled every soul. And through the long, weary night of the centuries earth's unnumbered millions have groped up the hill of time, struggling to clear up a pathway that might lead to the throne of God.

But when we scan the whole field of human thought, we find the wreckage and the debris of decayed and fallen systems of religion and philosophy that have perished in the onward movements of the world. They are but crumbling monuments reared over the tomb of buried epochs; and they tell the sad story of human failure and defeat. Each dead system is eloquent with the voice of the ages. The Pantheism of Buddha of twenty-five hundred years ago is the same horrible theory of Spinoza and Hegel in modern times. As a theory of life, its tenets are revolting. The disgusting materialism of Lucretius and of the Epicureans is the same as the modern materialism of Darwin, Huxley, and Spencer. The positivism of Comte and Mills is a stupendous failure. There is no comfort in agnosticism, and the moralism of the Kantian school is but little better, and the pessimism of Schopenhauer is but the voice of despair. The profoundest rationalism of to-day has felt the absolute failure of all the schools of human philosophy. We are told that in Germany to-day "the rationalistic lecture-rooms are empty and the evangelical crowded." It is also stated "that every prominent German university, except Heidelberg, is now under predominant evangelical influences." A sense of defeat and failure has taken hold upon the deepest rationalistic thought of the age. The limitations of the human personality have never before been so clearly recognized.

These decaying systems seem but a school-master to lead humanity to a true recognition of its limitations—limitations that can not be crossed. The deepest problems of the universe—God and man—all concern the human spirit; but man can not explain them. God must disclose them to man. A satisfactory and workable explanation of life has never been given by man. God has given an explanation in Jesus Christ. As Pascal has said, "Jesus Christ is the center of all, and the goal to which all tends." He is the eternal, personal Life that antedates the universe; the personal Creator, Preserver, and Redeemer; the personal bond, binding creation and redemption together in the unity of one rational purpose. "For by him were all things created that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible." Christ is the center and the circumference of all the divine acts, and there are no worlds, nor systems of worlds, nor intelligences, who are outside the universal sweep of the influence of God in Christ, who stretches the arms of his matchless protection over all eternity and over all worlds. This personality, whose love and power is illimitable in its sweep, meets the needs of sinful and despairing humanity. We can only interpret life through personal self-consciousness, and the higher must interpret the lower. So Jesus Christ, with the united consciousness of the human and divine, has interpreted all life. Life is not explained by theories, nor syllogisms, nor any other forms of intellectual effort, but by personal demonstration. Jesus has explained life by living it to a complete solution. It is more glorious to live since Jesus lived. He has conquered all the foes of the soul, and illumined life's pathway with the quenchless light of his presence. The true solution can not be found by the path of intellectualism, nor emotionalism, nor moralism, but by the surrender of the whole personality, intellect, emotion and will to the Christ of God. And through the Christ-vision the light that illumines all mystery will flash from the throne of God into our souls, clearing up the hazy mists forever. And with the poet we can say:

"My knowledge of that life is small—
The eye of faith is dim;
But 'tis enough to know: Christ knows all,
And I shall be with him."

"COME YE YOURSELVES APART AND REST."

BY REV. L. A. FLOWERS.

Perhaps no other words of Jesus so clearly show his love for, and sympathy with, the apostles as these. They had returned from their mission and made their report. Doubtless, they were elated with their success, as one of the evangelists says they "returned with joy." Anxiety for their Master's safety mingled sadness with their triumph. They knew of the tragic death of John the Baptist and of the open antagonism of the Jews. Jesus' own countrymen had scorned him, and, jealous of his superiority over his brethren, said, "Is not this the carpenter?" Because of their unbelief, he could do no mighty works among them. What he did during the apostles' absence we can not know, but we may know he was not idle. Perhaps all the power he possessed was, for the time being, given to the apostles, and he could only teach while awaiting their return. Wearied in mind and body, a quiet season with his followers meant much to him as well as to them. He would lead them "apart into a desert place," where, alone with nature and nature's God, they were to gather strength and endurance for the coming crisis. They were to "come apart" alike from the scene of their triumph and his humiliation. We may not know what emotion characterized their anticipations. Impulsive Peter may have thought that the kingdom was to immediately appear, and that he himself would be chief minister; incredulous Thomas may have hoped for stabilishing faith; John's great heart of love may have rejoiced just to be alone with Jesus, while Judas Iscariot may have only viewed it as an opportunity to save a penny.

But the multitude thwarted the design of the compassionate One, who immediately substituted a lesson in patience and loving-kindness instead. After satisfying the physical hunger of the multitude and sending them to their homes, he sent the disciples away by ship, and went alone into the mountain to pray. What a disappointment this must have been to the disciples, and how soothing a quiet hour with Jesus would have been! And how often in this day and time are our spirits refreshed by going apart into the silent place, where we may spend a while with Jesus! The strength born of the conflict needs the constant stimulus of battle, but the silent place and quiet hour alone supplies strength and endurance for those who can only serve, in that they "stand and wait." And there shall come a time when, to each of us, to the battle-scarred warrior as well as to those whose lot has been to "stand still and see the salvation of the Lord," to each of us the gentle voice of Jesus shall say, "Come apart," and enjoy the rest that remaineth for the people of God. "And his rest shall be glorious."

"WE ARE ALL HAPPY, AND HARD AT WORK."

The following letter from Mrs. J. B. Fearn has been received at the Mission Rooms, and though not intended for publication, it contains so much of interest concerning the situation in China that we take the liberty of giving it to the church. Mrs. Fearn writes from Soochow under date of Dec. 12, 1900:

You can not imagine our joy at being once more back at work. The people are all so friendly and so glad to see us that we are delighted, and it makes us long for the good time that is coming when all of our workers will be back. We are called "foreign devil" just as naturally as if nothing had ever happened. There is an entire absence of that peculiar silence that was so suggestive of trouble during those weeks when misfortunes came in battalions, and no one knew what awful tragedy the day would bring forth. At that time no such friendly term as "foreign devil" was heard, and no man dared speak of or to the foreigner, lest he hear the sentence, "Off with his head." Now it is all different; friendly looks, friendly words, and warm greetings meet us on every side. We constantly hear the exclamation, "They have come, they have come; now it is all right!" Friends from the wealthy and official classes have called, and not only that, but have invited us most cordially to their homes. On the streets we see only smiling faces, and it is a surprise that so many recognize and welcome us home again. Only this morning a woman in a chair, attended by innumerable soldiers and attendants, came into the Woman's Hospital and asked for the foreign doctor. She is from one of the richest families in the city, and was delighted, she said, when she heard that we had returned.

I am trying to help Miss Atkinson with the schools, and this morning, as I walked over to Zang Tsung Hong and back, I was struck with the friendliness which was shown me everywhere. Another thing that has struck me—most disagreeably, though—is the awful look of desolation about our deserted homes. You know Chinese roofs will leak unless unceasingly attended to, and things will mould, and frost will kill all the beautiful flowers, and everything will assume a most dilapidated appearance when the occupants are away, and now all this is constantly with us. During the day it is not so bad, as we are too busy to notice the loneliness; but, as night comes on, I would give anything to see lights in the other windows. I hope we will not long be the only foreigners in the city. Mr. Pilley is our faithful companion. He shared with us the threatened riots in Zang Zok, and has come to share our loneliness, but even he deserts us for a few days at a time when he goes into the country on his itinerating trips.

Last week Bishop and Mrs. Wilson, Dr. Parker, Mr. Andersen and Mr. Nance spent two days and a night with us. Possibly you can imagine how much we enjoyed it, and how we wished they might have stayed longer. They came up to look over the university grounds. The wall has made quite a difference in the appearance of things about here, and we are anxious to see the workers on it. What a splendid thing the university promises to be! We are anxious to hear how you are getting along with the subscriptions.

Two of our fellow-passengers on the "Coptic" came up last week to spend a day or two with us. We went with them to the Great Pagoda and to the Execution Ground; we stood on the spot where they told us seventy men were executed last Summer, and on the spot where they told us all the foreigners were to have been beheaded but for the friendliness of the officials. I couldn't help having little shivers, and must confess that I was glad to leave that grissome spot for one more cheerful—the Yoen Miao Kwoon. You know what crowds flock there—merchants with their wares, buyers and sellers, and always an excitement. It took only a very few minutes to surround Mrs. Keil and myself with the usual inquisitive, friendly throng. The numbers grew, and though all was pleasant, my courage began to fail. I couldn't see over the heads of the crowd, but Mrs. Keil was tall, and possessed that advantage over me. The gentlemen were slow in coming, and often I asked, "Do you see them?" and finally, when she said, "Yes, thank goodness," we were two relieved women. We had collected such a crowd that we thought under the circumstances we had better get out of it as quickly as possible, especially as my chair-bearers had unfortunately knocked down and broken an old man's traveling restaurant, and this same old man was pursuing me with threats, and entreaties to give him two dollars; and as I hadn't a cent with me, and he was deaf to my promises to make it all right if he would only be quiet, we thought discretion the better part of valor, and after a hasty glance at the scrolls, we left.

Dr. Fearn has been appointed customs physician in D. Park's place, and that in itself keeps him busy. Then there are out calls nearly every day, sometimes two or three, and callers and clinic patients, and work to do in getting settled, until, altogether, he is a busy man. The hospital is rapidly filling up, and the clinics do not show any dropping off; so we hope that all is well, and act accordingly. Mr. Pilley makes his regular trips to Zang Zok, Quinsan, and Poliang, and comes home jubilant over the unstinted friendship and cordiality of the people. We are all happy and hard at work.

Soldiers are stationed in the hospital, and Baffington College has been turned into barracks. I didn't know that we were so thoroughly protected until a few days ago, and must confess that I stand more in fear of our protectors than I have feared what I thought our unprotected state. However, soldiers or no soldiers, we feel absolutely safe, and are longing for the return of the other missionaries for the fellowship of it.

Mission Rooms, Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 21, 1901.

A PREACHER'S EXPERIENCE.

At our last Annual Conference the Bishop, no doubt, decided to exercise the only Camel (Campbell) the Mississippi Conference possessed, and accordingly I was sent diagonally almost across the Conference.

When I returned to my parsonage home of last year, naturally the first question my wife asked me was, "Where do we go another year?" I told her, "To Tranquil circuit," and she immediately replied, "Tranquil, Tranquil; where is Tranquil?"

Some of the Conference brethren know where "Tranquil" is, and that the postoffice address of the P. C. is "Free Run." Very suggestive names indeed, but not very suggestive of one another.

On the second day of January we bid old Americus circuit good-bye, and drove twenty-two miles, through mud and rain, to Moss Point, our most convenient railroad station. We got along very nicely until we reached Gulf Port, where we changed cars for Jackson, but as soon as we left this place our troubles began. On account of a defective engine we made slow time for about thirty-five miles, and then the engine failed completely. We waited, perhaps, an hour, until another engine came to our rescue. The next ten or twelve miles we ran at a fair rate of speed, when all at once the engine and tender left the track and plunged into the ditch. The engineer, brave fellow, set the air-brake and "died at his post." The baggage car was derailed and badly damaged, the "smoker" partially derailed, and though the rear coach remained on the track, several of the occupants were severely jolted. As for myself, I had been sitting on the arm of the seat, and was just in the act of rising when the crash came. I felt two distinct concussions. The first set me to spinning like a top; the second turned me several "summersaults," and down the aisle I went at about twenty miles an hour, kicking all the seats as I passed them; sometimes in the air, and sometimes bouncing along on the floor in a way not at all in keeping with ministerial dignity. My race was quickly run, however. The car door stopped my head, and the glass front of the "tool case" would have stopped my feet if I hadn't hit it quite so hard. As it was, I left a big hole in the glass. In a few minutes I had revived enough to consider whether or not the railroad company would charge me for breaking the glass, but after satisfying myself in the negative, I thought: "Well, there's 'Free Run;' wonder what 'Tranquil' is like?"

Inasmuch as this is my first move as an itinerant preacher, and I am still in the land of the living, I flatter myself that I have made an auspicious beginning in the itinerancy.

In due season we reached the parsonage at Tranquil. A number of elect ladies met us here and extended us a real Christian welcome, and, departing, left behind them a goodly supply of flour, meat, coffee, sugar, butter, potatoes, canned goods, lard, and other things too numerous to mention.

At our appointments, so far, the people have honored us with their presence and undivided attention. Truly, "the lines have fallen unto me in pleasant places." May the Lord grant us power to measure up to our responsibilities!

Brethren, pray for us, for although "the harvest truly is great," yet "the laborers are few."

J. W. CAMPBELL, P. C.

THE CIRCLE OF PIETY.

I was recently in North Mississippi, where I met a young preacher who told me of an organization among some of the preachers of his section that struck me as being a most helpful and ingeniously gotten-up arrangement. It is called the Circus Pietatis—Circle of Piety. It is composed exclusively of ministers, and is limited to six members—one for each work-day of the week. Each member of the circle is allotted a day (Sunday excepted), during which he is expected to write a letter on some helpful subject, and forward it to the member whose day comes next. For instance: A will write a letter on Monday, and forward it to B, who will read it, write a letter himself on Tuesday, and forward both his own and A's letter to C, who writes and forwards the letters on Wednesday, et ceteras, till the circle is completed, and the letter of each member finally gets back to the one who wrote it, every member of the group having read it in its circuit. All the members of the circle offer special prayer each day for the member to whom that day is allotted. The following are some of the rules that govern the organization:

1. The purpose of this circle shall be to promote the piety and to deepen the spirituality of its members.

2. Let there be no arguments for mere argument's sake.

3. Let us strive diligently to ascertain the pure truth—more diligently for the best methods of enforcing the truth, and most diligently to crystalize this truth into holy, daily living.

4. Let there be no slothfulness or indifference manifested in this work. Let us do what we have undertaken to do, and do it to the very best of our ability.

One of the letters recently written by a member of this circle ran as follows:

"The Christian ministry is the highest office that God can bestow on a created intelligence. It is the greatest office because it deals directly with the greatest problems that the universe has ever had, or ever will have, to solve—the problems of sin and redemption. Passing as too insignificant for notice the most dazzling honors that man can hold out to man, we maintain that the sitting upon heavenly thrones, and the wearing of heavenly crowns, and the wielding of heavenly scepters, and even the singing of Jehovah's praises around the Majesty on high, pales into insignificance when compared to the dignity, importance, and intrinsic greatness of the office of a divinely commissioned ministry. Abraham Lincoln was eminently truthful when he said to a minister of the gospel seeking of him governmental employment: 'My friend, go on preaching the gospel. No office within my gift is half so important or honorable as that to which God has already appointed you.'"

God has committed into our hands the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Woe to us if, instead of unlocking the doors of this kingdom to our fellows, we close and bar the entrance against them. God has set us as lights upon the rocky, storm-swept beach of life. Woe to us if our lights go out, or grow too dim for service. God has placed us as watchmen upon the walls of his beloved church. Woe to us if we revel or slumber while the enemy approaches our gates.

"Like priests like people," is a truth that hurls upon us astounding responsibilities. The stupendous fact that upon our daily walk, upon each prayer-meeting talk, upon each Sunday-school lesson taught, upon each pulpit effort made, may depend the destiny of a spirit as deathless as the immortal Jehovah, causes us to cry out: "Who is equal to these things? What manner of people ought we to be?" and leads us to utter, even in desperation, the prayer of one of old, "O Lord, if thou go not up with us, carry us not up hence."

PHILOS ANDROS.

"The most effective achievements of the pulpit are," says Dr. Cuyler, "reached when the preacher has received the fullest baptism of love, and when all thought of self is swallowed up in the glory that surrounds the cross of Calvary. A blood-earnest preacher may atone for the lack of great talents or great scholarship, or the graces of elocution, by the momentum of his intense convictions of truth, and his intense yearning for the salvation of souls."—Exchange.

Glances at the World.

VICE IN NEW YORK.

The good citizens of New York are now engaged in an earnest crusade against vice. They have perfected organization, and will work with a view to control the next municipal election. They have a hard task before them. Public meetings have been held, and others are announced. They will be held in churches, synagogues, school houses, society rooms, etc. At a recent meeting Mr. Wheeler H. Peckham, who occupies a commanding position, spoke some strong words. He said in part:

"What has happened in this city to make men think? We have a great city. Through it runs the proud Fifth avenue, lined on either side with palaces and splendor. And if from that point one will stretch out one's hand on either side, only at arm's length, almost, it would rest on the most horrible and degrading human misery. This is due to a great extent to bad city government for years past. . . . There are many of the wealthiest and strongest men marching, columns strong, to pay tribute to those in power, either to get possession of things to which they have no right, or else to escape blackmail from underlings." He said it is an easy matter for great corporate interests to pay large sums to the "boss" in order to get permission to extort far larger sums from the public. He said relief need never be expected as long as these same corporations are allowed to carry on their business as they please.

The speaker said he had opposed the ruling powers in this city for thirty-five years, and that there is no more stealing now than there was thirty-five years ago, except that a larger city gives a larger chance to the thieves, and they have learned their vocation more thoroughly and work in more subtle manner.

THE ARMY BILL.

It is not probable that the trifling differences between House and Senate on the army bill, which has now gone to conference, will be the cause of any long-continued wrangling between the two committees. As passed by the Senate the bill authorizes a possible maximum force of 3814 commissioned officers and 101,836 enlisted men; while the minimum strength of the proposed army is to be 3814 commissioned officers and 54,056 enlisted men. This force is to consist of twelve general officers, the same staff departments as in the present organization, fifteen regiments of cavalry, twelve regiments of artillery, thirty regiments of infantry, three battalions of engineers, the present provisional Porto Rican regiment, and organizations of native Filipinos to an enlisted strength not exceeding 12,000 men. The difference in the strength of the army as fixed by the House and by the Senate is so small that there will be no trouble in coming to an agreement. The Senate bill, it will be observed, places the army's strength at 105,650 for a maximum; and as the figure fixed by the House was only between 3000 and 4000 less, an agreement to "split the difference," if either committee prove stiff necked, will solve the problem.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

TOO MUCH TALK.

The Detroit Free Press does not seem to have much faith in the reform movements of the day: they too frequently result in failure. The Press speaks its mind thus:

"The various reform and anti-vice crusades that are being carried on in different parts of the country have resulted thus far in a maximum of talk and a minimum of improvement. In certain respects the American citizen is a most shiftless creature politically. He talks a great deal about his rights and his liberties, but he will undergo an astonishing amount of inconvenience before he will take steps to protect those rights and liberties. In municipal affairs he is refreshingly indifferent to his civic duties. Occasionally he turns one set of rascals out for the sake of putting another set in, but this is largely in the way of making a more even distribution of the loot. He has no illusions as to the eventual outcome of it all, and knows that ultimately the new government will be as bad as its predecessor."

LIFE OF VICTORIA.

The death of Queen Victoria, a brief notice of which appeared in our last issue, calls afresh to the public mind the career of this wonderful woman; a model, not only as a ruler, but as wife and mother.

Alexandrina Victoria, daughter of Edward, Duke of Kent, and the Princess of Leiningen, was born in Kensington Palace, May 24, 1819. Her father died in 1820, when the little princess was less than a year old. On the death of William IV., without issue, this girl succeeded to the throne of Great Britain. Fortunately, her mother was a woman of the highest excellence, and trained her daughter in a way to fit her for any station to which she might be called. How well she did her work is fully attested in the after-life of the good Queen. Had the mother followed her impulses after the death of her husband, she would have returned to Germany, her home-land, to bring up her daughter. But her brother Leopold was wiser than she in the ways of the world. He advised her that the children of George III. were not of lasting stock, and that the little princess might well be prepared by a life in England to become the Queen of the land. The widowed mother could not speak a word of English. Should her daughter be called to the throne from Leiningen without a trace of England in her bringing up, there would indeed be a prospect of unhappiness for her in her relations with her people. Prince Leopold himself superintended the education and the bringing up of the little princess. He was far-sighted enough, too, to have a hand in the education of the boy, Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg, to whom he intended that his ward should be married. The little girl's mother had a hard time of it. She was poor—as princesses are poor—and all but her brother were against her. But the girl received a sound education. She was trained to know the value of money to a degree that has not always been pleasing to her court. She was kept clear of the scandals which were in the air about her uncles and aunts and cousins. When she came to maturity there were no traces of the unhappy faults of the Guelph line in her character.

On the death of George IV. others began to see what Prince Leopold had seen long before. It was recognized that Victoria was close to the throne. William IV., who followed George IV., was without children, and was so old that there was no hope that he would be blessed with issue. The princess was the heir to the next son, Edward. She had not been told how close she was to the throne. It was part of her mother's and her uncle's plan that her training should not be complicated by hopes and dreams which might never be fulfilled. But on the death of George IV., when she was twelve years old, her governess slipped a genealogical table of the Guelph line between the leaves of one of her school books. The girl learned from a short study of the table that she was the next in succession. She looked up and met the eyes of the governess.

"I am nearer the throne than I thought," she said to the teacher. She paused. Her eyes filled with tears, and she said: "I will be good. I will be good."

Victoria was seventeen years old when Prince Leopold determined that it was time for her to meet the young Prince Albert whom he had selected to be her consort. With his father, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, the prince was invited to visit Kensington. Each of the young people had been much talked to about the other. They fell in with Leopold's desires very easily and naturally. Prince Albert was an attractive young man.

William IV. died on June 20, 1837, at 2 o'clock in the morning. At 5 o'clock, Victoria, called from her bed-room and attired in a wrapper thrown over her night robe, was told that she had succeeded to the throne.

A year later, June 28, 1838, the Queen was crowned at Westminster Abbey.

"The guns," says Miss Martineau, "told when the Queen set forth: and there was unusual animation. The Goldsticks flitted about: there was tuning in the orchestra; and the foreign ambassadors and their suites arrived in quick succession. Prince Esterhazy, crossing a bar of sunshine, was the most prodigious rainbow of all. He was covered with diamonds and pearls, and as he dangled his hat it cast a dazzling radiance all round. . . . At 11:30 o'clock the guns told that the Queen had arrived: but as there was much to be done in the robing-room, there was a long pause before she appeared. A burst from the orchestra marked her appearance at the door, and the anthem, 'I Was Glad,' rang through the Abbey. Everybody rose. . . . The 'God Save the Queen' of the organ swelled gloriously forth after the recognition. The acclamation when the crown was put on her head was very animated: and in the midst of it, in an instant of time, the peeresses were all coroneted. . . . The homage was as pretty a sight as any—trains of peers touching her crown and then kissing her hand."

The first conspicuous episode in the progress of the new order of things was the marriage of the Queen and Prince Albert Edward. The story of their true and happy love is one such as is seldom found in the records of royal unions. Prince Albert Edward of Saxe-Coburg visited England for the second time in October, 1839, and entered upon his suit for the hand of Queen Victoria. There could be no doubt of his success. Of all the eligible young men there was none so worthy as he. Within a week of his arrival he was accepted. It was necessary that the first word must come from the Queen. He was summoned to her private reception room. He found her alone. Mrs. Oliphant has suggested that the Queen's first glance must have been all the advance necessary for her to make. Her letter to King Leopold, her uncle, tells of her own happiness.

"These last few days have passed like a dream," she says, "and I am so much bewildered by it all that I hardly know how to write. But—I do feel very happy."

The story of the communication of the news to the Privy Council as it is written in the Queen's journal is another bit of evidence, were any needed, of the simplicity and sweetness of the emotion which the Queen was privileged to share as queens seldom are, with the humblest maid in all her dominions.

"Precisely at 2 o'clock," she wrote in the journal, "I went in. The room was full, but I hardly knew who was there. Lord Melbourne I saw looking kindly at me with tears in his eyes, but he was not near me. I then read my short declaration. I felt that my hands shook, but I did not make one mistake. I felt most happy and thankful when it was over. Lord Lansdowne then rose, and in the name of the Privy Council asked that 'this most gracious and most welcome communication might be printed.' I then left the room, the whole thing not taking above two or three minutes. The Duke of Cambridge came into the small library where I was standing and wished me joy."

The Queen was married on Feb 12, 1840. She was then nearly twenty-one years old. Prince Albert was three months older than she. By this marriage there were nine children.

Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, born Nov. 9, 1841; married March 10, 1863, to Her Royal Highness Alexandra-Caroline-Maria-Charlotte-Louisa-Julia, Princess of Denmark.

Prince Alfred-Ernest-Albert, late Duke of Edinburgh, and reigning Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, born Aug. 6, 1844; married Jan. 23, 1874, to Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie-Alexandrona, daughter of Alexander II. of Russia: died July 30, 1900, at Coburg.

Prince Arthur-William-Patrick-Albert, Duke of Connaught and of Strathearn, born May 1, 1850: married March 13, 1879, Her Royal Highness Princess Louise-Marguerite-Alexandra-Victoria-Agnes of Prussia.

Prince Leopold-George-Duncan-Albert, Duke of Albany, born April 7, 1853: married April 27, 1882, Her Serene Highness Princess Helene-Frederica-Augusta, daughter of the Prince of Waldeck and Pyrmont. He died March 28, 1884, at Cannes, France.

Princess Victoria-Adelaide-Maria-Louisa, the Princess Royal, born Nov. 21, 1840: married Jan. 25, 1858, Frederick III. of Germany.

Princess Alice-Maud-Mary, born April 25, 1843: married July 1, 1862, the Grand Duke of Hesse: died Dec. 14, 1865.

Princess Helena-Augusta-Victoria, born May 25, 1846: married July 5, 1866, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein.

Princess Louise-Caroline-Alberta, born March 18, 1848: married March 21, 1871, the Marquis of Lorne.

Princess Beatrice-Mary-Victoria-Fedore, born April 14, 1857; married July 23, 1885, Prince Henry-Maurice of Battenberg.

All of these children married, and some of their children have married, and there are now grandchildren and great-grandchildren of the Queen to the number of more than eighty. The most distinguished grandchild is William, the Emperor of Germany, the son of the Princess Royal.

Aside from their public life, there was a domestic side to their life which might well be the envy of many who had not to live so conspicuously. Under these happy circumstances it could not but be added happiness should come to the Queen and her husband with the birth of their children. Victoria had strong and sensible ideas about the training of children. She set down some of them in her journal.

"The greatest maxim of all," she writes, "is that the children should be brought up as simply and in as domestic a way as possible: that (not interfering with their lessons) they should be as much as possible with their parents, and learn to place their greatest confidence in them in all things.

"I am quite clear that she should be taught to have great reverence for God and for religion, but that she should have the feeling of devotion and love which our Heavenly Father encourages his earthly children to have for him, and not one of fear and trembling; and that the thoughts of death and an after life should not be presented in an alarming and forbidding view, and that she should be made to know, as yet, no difference of creeds."

In the gardens of her palace at Osborne, the one private dwelling-place of the several splendid royal houses and the one under her complete control, there is a play garden set apart for the royal family. Here one may see the trees planted for each member of the family, the playhouses with the many toys still preserved there, the miniature forts and other evidence of childish hands. There one may hear stories of how the children romped and played, of how their father and mother joined with them. And it must be that the Queen, wandering here in her widow's weeds, with her heart saddened by the great sorrow and by other lesser, but stinging sorrows, must have wept many a time for the departed joys of that life she has so simply told of in her journal.

The Prince Consort died suddenly on Dec. 19, 1861, at the age of forty-two years. He had never been thought strong, but no one had dreamed that he was not able to resist so mild an attack of illness as that which caused his death. The Duchess of Kent, the Queen's mother, had died but a few months before. This sorrow the Queen had met with fortitude, which was strengthened by the sympathy of the Prince Consort. There was no consolation for the loss of her husband. There was no happiness for the Queen from that day comparable to the serene pleasure in life that had been hers for the twenty-one years of their life together. There came over her face then a settled melancholy which was never lifted from it. She then and there laid down as many of her social burdens as was possible, to be taken up by the Prince of Wales, who was married within the year.

For five years after the death of Albert Edward the Queen did not appear in public at all. She came to the view of her subjects for the first time after her husband's death when she opened Parliament, with all the ancient pomp and ceremony of the occasion, in 1866. For forty years she had withdrawn almost altogether from public activity. She had appeared only on such ceremonies as the opening of Parliament, the marriages of her children and grandchildren, and the laying of the corner-stones of philanthropic institutions. There were occasional trips to the Continent. Sometimes the Queen traveled incognito as the Duchess of Kent, and sometimes she went with royal state as a queen. The uneventful course of her life was varied by two great ceremonial occasions—the two jubilee celebrations of the length and prosperity of her reign.

Few pageants in British history equaled in dignity and splendor the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of her accession to the throne. The great day of that jubilee was June 21. It was observed as a national holiday. The scenes in the streets, and the wonderful brilliancy of the concourse of kings and princes from all over the world who gathered to do honor to the Queen, were such as to impress not only the witnesses, but the whole world to which descriptions of the events were transmitted.

The second jubilee, that of the sixtieth year of her reign, surpassed the first in magnificence. The celebration was made the occasion for a demonstration of the might of the British Empire. The most was made of the presence of representatives of the distant colonies of the empire, and there was the utmost effort to impress the world and the colonies with the reliance which the nation placed on their co-operation. The pageant was thus the more impressive, and the tribute to the Queen the more significant of the might of the people of whom she was the hereditary representative.

The jubilee and the demonstration of the sentiment of the British people toward the Queen rather changed her attitude toward public ceremonials. Feeling the affectionate desire of her people to demonstrate their love for her, she gave them increasing opportunities of so doing. She felt it safe to relax apparently somewhat the arbitrary lines she had formed about the court circle.

It became known for the first time in 1897 that the Queen's health was becoming steadily worse. Her eyesight failed, and an operation on her eyes was resorted to in order to keep her from becoming altogether blind. It was asserted on excellent authority, though many formal and circumstantial denials were made, that the Queen was not able to see the splendor of the pageants of the second jubilee. Her eyesight had improved since then.

The events of the Queen's visit to Ireland last Spring are still fresh in the public memory. It was her first visit to Ireland since the death of Albert Edward.

The Queen's income from all sources, public and private, was something over £450,000 ($2,250,000) a year. The civil lists brought her £385,000 or thereabouts, most of which went to the maintaining of the public establishments of St. James Palace, Buckingham Palace, Windsor Castle and Holyrood House, Edinburgh. Her chief semi-public source of income was the revenues of the Duchy of Lancaster, which have been estimated at more than £40,000 a year. In 1852 an old miser, John Camden Neild, of Knutsford, Cheshire, died and left his fortune to the Queen as her own personal property. This fortune amounted to £500,000. The Queen provided for the old man's servants out of the bequest, and the rest of the money was invested for her by the Prince Consort, who was an able financier.

The Queen owned as her personal properties the estate of Osborne, on the Isle of Wight, where she died, and the smaller estate of Balmoral, in Aberdeenshire. An allowance of £30,000 was made to the Prince Consort when he married the Queen, but this ceased with his death. The Queen was not a rich woman, as has been supposed. Henry Labouchere, who was on a Parliamentary committee to inquire into the matter several years ago, is authority for the statement that the Queen had a remarkably small fortune. Small though it was, there is no doubt that the new King will have less than his mother from the State.

For this interesting sketch we are indebted to the New Orleans Times-Democrat.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

MY DEAR SISTERS: Our Conference year for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society is now drawing to a close; only about five weeks now remain before our final report will be sent in. We are very much behind with all of our pledges and special collections, as our attention has been directed almost entirely to the raising of the Twentieth Century Fund. Mrs. Fants' scholarship is the only special that has been paid so far, and unless we have a large increase in our collections this quarter, there will be a considerable falling off from last year.

I urge all the district secretaries, and through them the auxiliaries, to give this matter their immediate attention. We can not afford to begin the new century with a smaller offering than we have made in the past.

Yours in the work,

MRS. C. H. GIBBS, Cor. Sec.

Columbus, Miss., Jan. 10, 1901.

You have read your corresponding secretary's letter. How does it affect you, mind and heart? Do not Sister Gibbs' statements beget within all of us a burning desire to work speedily and diligently toward bringing up those arrearages? "Without me ye can do nothing," are our Savior's words, and equally potent are "with God all things are possible." Then with these two thoughts may we cling to Christ for strength and wisdom in this time of need, that God, through the agency or by the ministry of the Holy Spirit, may make possible to us the fulfilling of all our vows and pledges. In most things the weight of work falls upon a "faithful few." Let us prove that at least in the North Mississippi Conference W. F. M. Society the converse of this is true. All together, every member, strong and weak, bending every energy during this last quarter toward placing our society upon a higher plane. Every obligation met, dues, contingent, specials and pledges, beside all our Twentieth Century Offering. We much fear that this last can not appear as a thank-offering, acceptable to God, while these unpaid pledges stand against us. "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Sisters, let us take our Father at his word. Let us prove him in this matter, that much good may accrue to those for whom we labor, and that the promised blessing come into our own lives. The need is great; vast fields already white to harvest greet the eye. The Lord of the harvest bids his servants gather in the grain. Obeying him, we go or send to gather sheaves of immortal souls to lay at the Master's feet.

Are you all reading reports sent by our devoted missionaries? These stand as our substitutes in the forefront of the battle, sending accounts of their labors and successes, which are enough to make every fibre of our being vibrant with joy and admiration and gratitude. These reports you find in our Woman's Missionary Advocate, published at Nashville; Mrs. F. A. Butler, editor and agent. There is a large fund of information and entertainment in this admirable periodical, and I should love to quicken some scores of consciences to the importance of taking so valuable a magazine as a part of our regular study.

If I might thereby gain a goodly list of subscriptions, I would give my readers one whole article on the subject, made of notes and extracts from the W. M. Advocate, and feel that the time was profitably spent.

MRS. J. F. EVANS.

Owing to the number of challenges sent and the attempts to bring about duels recently in Havana, a new decree has been issued changing the law against duelling so as to make seconds, bearers of messages and any one participating equally guilty with the principals.

MRS. MARY YEAGER PRICE.

Mrs. Mary Yeager Price was born in Vigo county, Indiana, August 27, 1821; her parents removing to Louisiana, she united with the Methodist Church in 1838, under the ministry of Rev. William H. Turnley, the pastor at that time of Trinity circuit. Abont that time Rev. John Brock preached in Alexandria, and the foundations of Methodism were being laid in Central Louisiana. On June 11, 1840, she was married to Mr. Reese Price, and they took up their residence at Bayou Flaggon, near Pineville, where for sixty years they lived, only to be parted by death.

On November 8, 1900, at the ripe age of 79 years, Sister Price was called from labor to rest, surrounded by her 6 children, 31 grandchildren, and 33 great-grandchildren, besides her loving husband, Bro. Reese Price, who survives to mourn his loss. The children are: Mrs. A. A. Dean, Fairmount; Mrs. H. O. Wilcox, Pineville; L. C. Price, Holloway; W. N. Price, Fairmount; L. D. Price, Colfax; Z. T. Price, Evergreen—all of Central Louisiana.

In attempting to contribute a sketch of the life of this mother in Israel and sister in Christ, the writer feels his utter incompetence, but being intimately acquainted with the children of the deceased, this task becomes a labor of love. During these sixty-two years of service to the Master, there was a solidity of piety that has now become more precious to the children than thousands of gold and silver. Like Paul, she fought the good fight of faith, and laid hold of eternal life. During all this time her home was a shelter for the weary itinerant, and many there were who passed that way. Many have preceded her to the other shore, but some are here yet.

A few days ago the writer conversed with the Rev. Fred White, who enjoyed the acquaintance of Sister Price for many years, often stopping at her house while preaching and serving as presiding elder in the Alexandria district.

Most of the children are leaders in our Zion; to them we extend our sympathy, and beg to say to them: Toil on in the Master's vineyard, and lay up, as your beloved mother, much treasure in heaven.

CARTHAGE, MISS.

We start off with the new year at Carthage in fine spirits. The people have received us the third time on this circuit very cordially. Many expressions and tokens of appreciation have been received at the parsonage. The young people especially have manifested a great interest in the welfare of the preacher and his family. We are more encouraged this year to do duty than ever.

GLOSTER, MISS.

As our new pastor and wife were unable, when they recently came to us, to secure a suitable home or boarding-place, our former pastor, Rev. J. W. McLaurin, who is taking a year off to recover his health, being still in our midst, took upon himself the task of securing a parsonage for our church here. Although our people were heavily taxed last year in furnishing and beautifying their house of worship, and raising their Twentieth Century contribution, yet Bro. McLaurin has been pre-eminently successful, and we are now rejoicing in the pleasing fact that we not only have an elegant, well-furnished church, but also a comfortable and conveniently located home for our minister. This pastor's home only cost us $850, but is estimated to be worth $1,200. The sum total of our indebtedness is only $135, for which the Ladies' Aid has become responsible.

MANSFIELD, LA.

We have much to encourage us in our work at Mansfield. For the past two years every dollar assessed to this charge has been paid in full. Our congregation has increased until now it will compare favorably with that of any town in Louisiana the size of Mansfield. Our membership is increasing steadily; five persons united with us yesterday, making a total of twenty-nine since Conference. We expect a good year all round in every department of church work.

Mansfield Female College never had brighter prospects than now. Enlargement of buildings will soon be an absolute necessity if we are to accommodate its increasing patronage.

We extend you, Mr. Editor, a cordial invitation to visit us. I am sure that a visit to North Louisiana from you would greatly increase the circulation of the ADVOCATE. We have not seen much of the editors of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE in this section for several years past. Wishing you great success in your work, I am, Yours truly,

AT SARDIS, MISS.

Pursuant to call of Rev. W. S. Lagrone, P. E., some of the preachers, superintendents of Sunday-schools, and district stewards, met at Sardis, Miss., Jan. 16, 1901, the first remaining two days in profitable discussions, preaching the Word and social exchange; the latter staying part of one day, which time was principally spent in distributing the assessments in private session. It seems that a basis of distribution might be agreed upon whereby much time might be saved and any dissatisfaction avoided. I notice that our presiding elders get a little more than one-eighth of all the money paid to support of ministry, or a little more than one-seventh of what is paid to all the other preachers. Establish this basis, and assess a work that pays P. C. $700, $100 for P. E., which will make an equal distribution. Then determine whole amount of Conference collections assessed to the district, and whatever proportion it bears to P. E.'s salary, make an assessment on each charge corresponding to assessment for P. E. As, for instance, in Sardis district, for 1900, these assessments were about 2½ times the assessment for P. E.; hence each charge should be assessed an amount equal to 2½ times, ⅛ of amount paid P. C., or 5-16 of pastor's salary. Our people resent seeming discrimination with same feelings as if it were real. Our seasons of worship and hours of discussion were refreshing indeed. Bros. Graves, Lipscomb and Babb preached edifying sermons. After planning the preachers' reading circle, and resolving upon a most faithful year's work, we separated, feeling drawn closer to each other and to God. We think we have the best P. E. in the Conference, and some say he speaks in a very complimentary way of his men.

BEN P. JACO, Sec'y.

CROWLEY, LA.

My outlook at Crowley is fine. Four accessions since Conference; others to receive soon. The people have received me cordially, and are giving me a good hearing. Bro. Percy Knickerbocker was very popular both as pastor and preacher, and his successor will find it difficult to satisfy the expectations and demands of many of his parishioners; but the Spirit of the Lord and personal knowledge of the people will, I trust, pave the way for a successful year. I have already visited 175 of my membership of 393, and expect to do (D. V.) the hardest work of my life in the pastoral capacity.

One of my Official Board, Bro Z. M. Mayes, after long affliction, passed away to the church triumphant on Jan. 9.

I do not find the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE patronized here as it should be. Just as early as possible I shall try to increase its circulation.

Expect to observe Good Literature Day.

Will begin revival services about Feb. 22, if I can secure the aid of a good chorus leader filled with the Spirit of God. The pastor will do the preaching.

Our Epworth League is flourishing.

WATER VALLEY, MISS.

Rev. W. G. Harbin reports as follows from North Main Street, Water Valley, Miss.:

Eleven sermons; four prayer meetings; seventeen other meetings; seventy-eight pastoral visits. This covers our labors for five weeks. The results are apparent, but hard to describe. We see them on all sides. People who have been cold and careless becoming enthusiastic. Earnest efforts at better living are being made by poor weak ones. In this class a man who, when he found he could not resist the temptations of the "blind tigers," reported all he could find. They were fined; and now he can not find any more. This was heroic. Attendance on church services large; forty at prayer meeting, and regular services crowded. Sunday-school built up; all officers and teachers present every Sunday this year. We want to make a record right there, and have all officers and teachers present every Sunday this year.

North Main Street is awake. There is a field and a chance for it here. We have everything to hope and little to fear. Our foundation has been sealed with blood. The church was established in 1896. It has furnished a church home for 262 people. Eighty-eight have been saved through its instrumentality. Thirty have assumed vows; fifty-eight baptized; eleven have gone home to heaven from North Main Street. Every Sunday morning fifteen to eighty children and more have come to Sunday-school; the average attendance being fifty-three. Two Epworth Leagues hard at work, and doing noble service since 1897. Contributions average over $5.00 per capita in our four years of history. In addition a $4,500 property secured, and noble work done among the poor that would bring our per capita away up. A preacher sent here is fortunate. Around him stands a band of loyal, faithful, converted people, who will do anything they can and wish they could do more.

God is with us. We want to stay with him; we are expecting glorious things this year.

Some people dream of happiness as something they will come to by and by, at the end of a course of toil and struggle. But the true way to find happiness is as we go on in our work. Every day has its own cup of sweetness. In every sorrow is a blessing of comfort. In every burden is rolled up a gift of God. In all life Christ is with us if we are true to him.—Miller.

It Saved My Life.

Extreme cases of disease test the real value of a medicine. Many "tonic" and "stimulant" preparations, which have no real medicinal value, seem to brace up the users when they are feeling "played out." Any stimulant will do this whether bought at the liquor store or drug store. The true test of a medicine is when life itself is staked on its remedial power. In hundreds of such cases Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has been the means of saving life when even the "family doctor" had pronounced sentence of death.

"I had been a great sufferer for several years, and my family doctor said I would not be a living man in two years, but, thank God, I am still living," writes Mr. George W. Trustow, of Lipscomb, Augusta Co., Va. "Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is what saved my life. I had heart trouble so bad that I could not lie on my left side without a great deal of pain. I was nearly past work when I commenced your medicine, but I can do about as much work now as any man. I cannot say too much for the benefit I have received."

Many diseases, named for the organs affected, as "heart disease," "lung disease," "liver complaint," etc., are perfectly cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which cures through the stomach diseases which originate in the stomach.

TEACHERS' BUREAU.
The Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has, under paragraph 415 of our Discipline, established a TEACHERS' BUREAU. The purpose of this Bureau is the advancement of Christian Education. We propose to do our best to secure for the graduates of our institutions, and for other competent persons, positions in our schools and colleges; but we guarantee a position to nobody. Applicants for positions will be furnished, upon request, with our application form, which will explain itself. Since the making of money is not the purpose of our Bureau, we will make our nominations with the greatest possible care. Presidents of our schools and colleges, and Boards of Trustees seeking teachers, will do well to apply to us. The facilities of the Board for this work are unusual. We have a constituency, preachers and laymen, of one million and a half. We request the pastors throughout our Connection to advertise this Bureau, and to notify us of any vacancy in any school, secular or Christian, as soon as it occurs. By so doing they will greatly aid us in promoting Christian education. Address Rev. J. D. Hammond, Cor. Sec., Nashville, Tenn.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 31, 1901.

"Preachers' sons are the worst boys in the country." Such is a common saying. One bad boy in half a dozen preachers' families suffices to fix a reputation for badness among them all. A little observation will satisfy any unprejudiced person that the old saying is false. The percentage of good boys and girls, children of clergymen, will compare favorably with the children of men in other walks of life. One hundred years ago in England the children of clergymen were so remarkable on account of their morals and intellectual attainments that one of the wits of the day suggested the setting apart of all country rectories for married preachers, in order that the race of men might be improved. The children of preachers in the United States to-day will not suffer by comparison with their cousins across the water.

A preacher in one of our cities recently advertised as the theme of his Sunday discourse, "The Obloquy of Supineness." That is correct speech, to be sure, but he would have been more generally understood had he announced as his subject, "The Reproach of Lying on the Back," or, "The Shame of Laziness." Nothing suits some men so well as to obfusticate their hearers; to send them to the big dictionary, or bring them to church to learn the meaning of his words. We knew a preacher once who got into trouble by sending a sensational announcement to the daily paper. His notice read, "The Divine Accident; or, the Place of the Divine Departure." Some people wondered what sort of an accident had happened to the Lord. In preaching to common-sense hearers, preachers ought to use common-sense language.

Just why so many good people are complaining of the decline of religion we do not know, unless it is because the manifestation of the religious life is different from what they desire and what they themselves express. But what right has any man to make his desires or his feelings the standard by which to judge others? To do so is certainly to discount the opinions and the value of the religious life of hundreds of thousands of professed Christians. My neighbor does not agree with me in doctrine or church government. He does not accept my views in reference to the ordinances of the gospel. Shall I, therefore, deny that he is a religious man? Not while I see that he is zealous in doing good, and living an upright Christian life. Let us be done forever with this whine about the decline of religion, and give to all who profess to love the Lord Jesus the hand of fellowship, and bid him God-speed.

SPIRITUAL NURSING.

Every pastor, by virtue of his relation to the people of his charge, at times must act the part of a nurse. This means more than merely to feed the flock and guard it against the attacks of enemies. Sheep need feeding all the time, and the shepherd must all the time be on the lookout for wolves or prowling dogs. So the faithful pastor must feed his people, adapting the diet to the age, condition and needs of each; giving the sincere milk of the word, or the strong meat of the gospel. And, no matter how well he may feed the souls of his charge, he must constantly guard them, lest the enemy come upon them unawares.

But sheep are silly animals—not vicious and daring like goats, nor capricious. In an ungnarded moment a few will leave the flock and stray. In such a case Jesus tells us that a shepherd having "a hundred sheep will leave the ninety-and-nine, and go in search of the lost." He does not rest until he finds it. Sometimes a sheep gets sick. It can not stray, nor does it need food. Or it may get lame, and need more than food. It must have close attention; good and faithful nursing.

Christians are liable to leave the fold—not always purposely, or through any bad motive. They are tempted and led, and get out of sight of the fold before they realize it. The pastor must go after them and bring them back. As a father pitieth and welcomes the return of an erring child, so must a faithful pastor pity and rejoice over a returning member. Only a small per cent. of stray ones will be permanently lost if sought for and tenderly dealt with. The church can help the pastor in this important work. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye, which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

There is also a class of persons in many churches who, though not inclined to stray, are of such a peculiar disposition as to need special attention. Some are sensitive, and feel that they are overlooked or neglected. Some misconstrue language, and easily take offense. Some imagine themselves better than their brethren, and because the whole church does not measure up to their standard of piety, they "become judges of evil thoughts." They get censorious and sour, and virtually withdraw themselves from communion. A few take "pouting spells" occasionally, and nobody can tell why. How to deal with these classes successfully requires grace and tact. It will not do to say, "Such people are worthless," and give them no attention. They may be of but little material benefit to the church, but they have souls, and if properly cared for, might add much to the spiritual welfare of the society. Certainly, they themselves would enjoy its communion. And it is as much the duty of the pastor to add to the happiness of individual members as it is to get the members to add to the strength and happiness of the church as a whole. These peculiar ones need nursing—spiritual nursing; not meat, perhaps not milk, but to be taken carefully into the arms, as a mother takes a sick child, and bathes and sponges it, and brings it again to life and health by pressing it to her warm and loving heart; and, finally, to cheerfulness of spirit by caresses and tender words.

To take a great big man who ought himself to be a tower of strength, and a full-grown woman, and nurse them as children, is not always a pleasant task; yet it has to be done, or they die. We have known Christians who were nothing more than great big babies. Unless they had attention such as is bestowed on little children, they were fretful and spiteful to such an extent that it was impossible to get along in peace. Careful nursing kept them in good humor, and they were fairly useful.

A pastor does not fully realize his mission to the church, or his responsibility to God, if he thinks he can, without guilt, decline to help any member of his charge, no matter what the trouble may be. The greater the peculiarity of disposition, the harder he should study to adapt his ministry to individual cases. In the presence of the sensitive he should be careful, both in speech and manner. With the censorious he should never mention the shortcomings of his brethren, nor boast unduly of the spiritual attainments of his charge. With the morose and morbid he should be cheerful without levity. With the sour he should be full of the sweetness of the gospel. In the presence of all he should "give no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed." Under all circumstances, by prudence of speech and circumspection of life, he should approve himself as the minister of God.

MRS. NATION'S WAY.

Mrs. Carrie Nation, of Wichita, Kans., is an active and enthusiastic member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and believes in the rigid enforcement of the laws. Kansas is a prohibition State. The saloon is outlawed. But the statute in some places is a dead letter. It is, or has been in Wichita. Mrs. Nation appealed to the officers of the law to close the saloons, but they turned a deaf ear to her entreaties, and allowed the saloonists to carry on their illegal traffic. Mrs. Nation's "righteous soul was vexed from day to day," and at last her "patience ceased to be a virtue," and she resolved to be a law unto herself and put an end to the nefarious traffic in her own way. Accordingly, she procured an axe and proceeded to a prominent saloon, and in a shorter time than we are taking to tell the tale the whisky dealer found himself without any wares. Everything that held liquor, together with everything in reach that was made of glass, was smashed. This was Mrs. Nation's way.

Of course, the good woman was arrested and promptly jailed. As the case was bailable under the law, and the whisky sympathizers knowing that she would soon be released, procured an order to quarantine the jail on pretense of danger from smallpox, and she was compelled to remain in jail until the time prescribed by the Board of Health. When she could be no longer held she was released, and forthwith resumed the crusade, and with the assistance of two or three other crusaders succeeded in demolishing at least two other evil places before she was arrested, and again lodged in jail.

We fully sympathize with Mrs. Nation in her prohibition views. We would be glad to see every saloon in the land closed forever, and the wretched traffic in drink extirpated, but it should be done by law. It can never be done by unauthorized persons, who undertake by main strength to destroy property. As we see the matter, it is no justification to say that the Wichita saloonists were engaged in an unlawful business, and therefore unable to recover damages. Mrs. Nation's action may not be punishable under the statutes, but will not be sustained by public sentiment. On the contrary, it only serves to arouse pity, if not sympathy, for the liquor seller, even among a class who do not favor the liquor traffic. The American people are for what they call "fair play," and in their estimation it is not fair play for a woman, amply defended by her sex, to undertake the role of a destructionist. The cause of temperance and prohibition suffers harm at the hands of those who, with hammers and axes in their hands, illegally war against anything, even though that thing itself be illegal. Two wrongs never made a right. No man is authorized to do evil that good may come.

THE SAMENESS OF HUMAN NATURE.

"The relentless cruelty of the Inquisition, the savagery of the mediæval mob, has again been paralleled, and that, as usual, in one of our proudest States." So says Dr. Gilbert, of the Western Christian Advocate, in reference to the recent burning of a negro in Kansas. "As usual, in one of our proudest States!" Indeed! Then barbarism is not confined to the South, as some would have the world believe. Such outrages manifest the instincts of human nature; and that they occur in the proudest as well as the meanest States, goes far to show that human nature is the same everywhere, and when aroused is equal to anything that Satan can suggest. We confess to surprise, however, that after all the lecturing the South has received from the mouths and pens of Northern teachers, their own sort should show no better mastery of themselves under provocation. There was a time when we thought such a thing as lynching a human being, especially a negro, for any crime, by rope or fire, an impossibility in one of our Northern States. We know better now, and would not be surprised to read in the next issue of the daily paper of a lynching in Boston or Chicago. We feel sorry that our brethren up North have been so deceived in themselves.

CHANGE OF CHURCH RELATIONS.

The going of Rev. S. P. Cadman from the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Congregational has occasioned the use of a great deal of printer's ink. It was doubtless a great surprise, even to those who were personally well acquainted with the Doctor. He has, as far as the public are aware, manifested no symptoms of dissatisfaction with Methodist doctrine or discipline. Indeed, it was supposed that he was a thorough Methodist, and in full sympathy with Methodist polity. His life and actions in the past give force to this supposition. Why, then, did he leave the Methodist Church and go to another? We are unable to answer the question, further than to say, he had a call and answered it.

The fact that he had a call to a Congregational Church, and another at the same time to a Presbyterian Church, leads one of our editors to say: "This goes to show that the Christian world is much nearer together than it once was, and that laymen do not set much store by theological differences." Theological differences may be nothing to laymen, especially when they are seeking a pastor that will draw and fill the pews with paying attendants. But what about the preacher? Is he to be without convictions? Or if slack-twisted, is he fit to be the teacher and leader of the people? Certainly no man can go from the Methodist to the Presbyterian Church, or vice versa, without a radical change in belief, or playing the hypocrite. It may be easy enough to go to the Congregational without a change. We undertake not to say.

But we do say: the ease with which men change church relations, whether they change faith or not, bodes no good to the organized work. If he goes without changing his views, he virtually says: One church is as good as another, and it makes no difference where I am, so I am preaching. If he changes his views, he is liable to be charged with being "carried about by every wind of doctrine," and thus injure his usefulness and cause men to lose respect for the church. As we see the matter, the change from one church to another is a serious business, and no one, preacher or layman, ought to do such a thing unless bound to do so to maintain a good conscience. We have known men to change churches and publicly give their reasons. By every token they ought to have kept silence, for they left their acquaintances in doubt as to whether they were sincere in preaching either the old faith or the new. We knew a man once who "kicked out" of the Methodist traces because the Bishop at a certain Conference declined to appoint him presiding elder. He became a famous fighter of Methodism, and so continued for years. In his old age—no longer able to work—he applied for membership in the church of his first love. He desired to come back as a traveling preacher. His motive was suspected. There are no "loaves and fishes" for the worn-out preachers in the church to which he had given much of his life in opposing Methodism. His application was rejected. Had he been thoroughly sincere, he would have united with the church and taken the risk of being restored to his place in the itinerant ranks. We leave our readers to make further application of the subject.

MR. WU'S MISTAKE.

Minister Wu, the Chinese representative at Washington, is recognized by every one who knows anything about him as a man of extraordinary sense, but when he declared, as he did, a few weeks since, that the "most practical solution of the race problem" lies "in the direction of the amalgamation of the races, which may be speedily accomplished by intermarriage," he showed himself utterly ignorant of the views of the people, North and South, on social questions and distinctions. He looked at the matter from a purely practical standpoint, never for a moment, as we suppose, intending any reflection on our people. We see no reason why any one should take umbrage at the minister's expression. He would not have done it had he known the feelings of the white people generally, or the feelings of the better class of colored people, who are no more in favor of social equality than are their white neighbors. "Amalgamation by intermarriage" is abhorrent to both races. This Mr. Wu did not know, and should be excused.

PERSONAL.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, president of Centenary College, spent Sunday in the city, and preached in the morning for Pastor Clifford at Dryades Street Church. He gave us a brotherly call on Monday.

Rev. F. N. Parker, pastor of Carondelet Street, has been indisposed during the past week; so much so as to be unable to attend his mid-week prayer meeting. He recovered sufficiently to occupy his pulpit on the following Sunday.

Rev. J. A. Bowen had a "glorious reception" at Verona. He is working hard and succeeding. We thank him for his promise to stand by the ADVOCATE, and for a kind invitation to visit him. We hope to do so some time during the year.

The church suffered a great loss in the death of Bro. J. B. Randolph, who recently passed to his reward from his home in Prentiss county, Miss. We sympathize with the bereaved family, two of whom, Revs. J. A. Randolph, and J. B. Randolph, Jr., are members of the North Mississippi Conference. The good man died in peace, for he was ready. A suitable memoir will follow in due time.

The Evening Journal, of Shreveport, is high in praise of Dr. Jno. T. Sawyer, who occupied the pulpit of the First Church on the morning of Jan. 20. The sermon "received no unstinted praise and commendation" from those who heard it.

A private note from Rev. B. P. Jaco, Hernando, Miss., informs us that for three days he was threatened with pleurisy, but under skillful treatment and good nursing the symptoms disappeared, and he is now well on the way to recovery.

We had a pleasant call on the 22nd from Rev. F. G. Hocutt, of Covington, La. We knew Bro. Hocutt back in the early seventies. We find him to-day showing the marks of time, but the same earnest and modest Christian brother, and an active laborer in the Master's cause.

All our city pastors arranged on Sunday last for services with special reference to a revival. It was our pleasure to worship with the Parker Memorial congregation, to whom Rev. C. D. Atkinson preached an earnest and impressive sermon in keeping with the resolution of the preachers' meeting.

Rev. C. McDonald, of Tryus, Miss., has been suffering from a spell of catarrhal fever, in consequence of which he failed to meet one or two engagements. He has met much kindness at the hands of his friends, both Methodist and Baptist, and received substantial evidences of their liberality. We trust our brother will soon be able to repay them in good, gospel preaching.

A note from our friend and brother, J. D. Barbee, Jr., of Greenville, Miss, cheers us much. It was refreshing indeed. We thank him. He speaks in high terms of Bro. Myers, the pastor, who, he says, "has already impressed himself most favorably on the people, and large congregations hear him. He is going to build a handsome church, which is much needed." May great success crown his labors!

Rev. R. H. Revels, D. D., once a member of the United States Senate from Mississippi (during reconstruction days), but for many years past a member of the Upper Mississippi Conference (colored), Methodist Episcopal Church, died last week at Aberdeen during the session of the Conference. He has been for a long time a quiet, peace-loving, and active minister in his church, and stood high among his brethren. At the time of his death he was presiding elder of the Holly Springs district.

The golden wedding of Col. Walter Guston Kearney and Mrs. Susannah Owens Kearney will be celebrated on the afternoon of Feb. 5, from two until five o'clock, at their home, Flora, Miss. We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation. It would afford us pleasure to be present, but the privilege will be denied us. We send good wishes and prayers for the continuation of health and life's blessings. We are also authorized to announce that "all the preachers of the Mississippi, North Mississippi, and Louisiana Conferences are cordially invited to attend."

We were agreeably surprised to receive, on Monday last, a visit from the venerable senior Bishop, John C. Keener. He does not often venture down-town, but on this occasion he came to welcome the new editor. Our readers need not be told that his visit and his welcome were greatly appreciated. We feel almost overwhelmed with fear when we think of occupying the office once so ably filled by the Bishop. But—well, "there were giants in those days." The Bishop is, in reasonably good health, but dares not exert himself to any great extent. He is much interested in the approaching Missionary Conference.

The venerable and much-loved Dr. B. M. Palmer, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of this city, passed his eighty-third year on Friday, the 25th of January. The event was celebrated by a grand reception tendered by the members of the church, to which the public was invited. A large number of people were present and gave hearty expression to their feelings. Dr. Palmer is not only the best-known preacher of the city, but the best loved. No man occupies such a large place in the affections of the people as Dr. Palmer. He is still in fair health and able to look after the interests of his flock, though much of the labor is committed to the hands of an assistant. May the good Doctor enjoy many more birthday anniversaries!

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The accounts for subscriptions, advertisements, etc., due Dr. W. C. Black, former editor and publisher of this paper, are still in the office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. It is important both to Dr. Black and the present publisher that these accounts be settled as soon as possible. We hope every brother who knows himself to be indebted to the paper will not delay a day. Some of these accounts are long past due. The money is needed. Brethren, one and all, please respond. NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: In looking over the Minutes of the last session of our Conference, I find some mistakes. For instance: The Holly Springs district was assessed for presiding elder one-seventh of the amount paid for the support of the ministry. The Minutes show that he did not receive one-seventh by forty or fifty dollars; some charges falling as far short as nineteen dollars.

This should not be. Our presiding elder has been wronged by false calculations or carelessness, for we can not think that he would show partiality, or fail to require a just account of every charge.

Again: I must say, in justice to the Mt. Pleasant charge, that it was assessed and paid four hundred and three dollars for the preacher, and sixty-seven dollars for presiding elder, instead of having paid forty-eight dollars and forty cents to the P. E., and three hundred and forty-nine to the P. C., as the Minutes show.

To obviate like errors in the future, I will suggest that we require every pastor to hand in his statistical reports by the close of the second session of the Conference. Then we should have an hour set apart in which to read and approve this part of our Conference business.

I think this, or something better, should be done to secure correct statistics. J. A. POE.

CHORAL SOCIETY.

Representatives from the various Methodist Churches of this city have recently effected an organization to be known as the "Methodist Choral Society." Its primary purpose is to arrange for the singing during the great Missionary Conference, and it is hoped that it will remain as a permanent organization for the improvement of the singing in our churches in New Orleans. At the first meeting, held Thursday night, Jan. 17, the following officers were elected: President, Rev. Thomas B. Clifford; secretary and treasurer, Morris B. DePass; librarian, Mr. J. E. Randolph; musical director, Prof. T. O. Adams; organists, Misses Ella Todd and Susie Lyons. Thirty-six names have been enrolled, and others are expected from week to week.

Until further notice the weekly practice will be conducted at Rayne Memorial Church every Thursday night at 7:45 o'clock.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To the Pastors of the Louisiana Conference:

Our Conference is assessed for foreign missions $9,100, and for domestic missions $3,400, making a total of $12,500. The statistical secretary reports that there was raised last year on this amount $8,083.97, or about $250 less than two-thirds. In the last Annual Report of the Board of Missions the Lonisiana Conference was rated for foreign missions as No. 20 in the list of Conferences, having raised 66 per cent. of assessment, and for domestic missions as No. 32, having raised 60 per cent. of assessment. More was raised last year for missions than the previous year, notwithstanding the fact that the Twentieth Century Thank-offering had right of way, and so we may reasonably expect a much larger increase during 1901. It would be the correct thing for our preachers and people to resolve to wipe out the deficit of last year—only about $4,500—and make full returns this year: and, having so resolved, to "perform the doing of it." Why should any church in our bounds be hampered by the assessment? Why not go beyond it and give, if need be, to the hurting point? Loving our Lord supremely, and so, like our Lord, seeking to save the "every man" for whom "he tasted death," close calculations—just so much and no more—are clearly out of place in the matter of giving for missions. In this thing the abounding grace is eminently proper. There are a number of charges that always pay their assessment for this good cause, and they would certainly receive a great blessing in paying as much again, or, at least, a generous percentage in advance of last year. This first year of the new century is a good time for those who do not usually reach that point to pay their assessment in full. We have been greatly honored in that our General Conference of Missions is to convene in our chief city, and we should feel thereby obligated to do our utmost for missions, and thus show that their coming among us is appreciated by us. Looking at it in every possible light, it does seem that we ought to be fired as never before with a proper and noble ambition to raise every dime of the $12,500, and so set the gait for ourselves, and those coming after us, to pay the missionary assessment, whatever it may be, each year right along throughout all the hundred years. Brethren, let us do just that.

MAGAZINES.

But one American girl has ever married a King, and she, a New England woman, now a widow, is living in a royal palace in the country of her adoption, almost lost sight of by her American sisters and friends. The romance of this fascinating, gifted American girl, who won the hand and heart of a King—one of the prettiest of love stories—will be one of the features of the March Ladies' Home Journal.

The St. Nicholas, for February, is as full of interest as any of its predecessors, and that is saying a great deal. This monthly stands at the head of periodicals for young folks. Among the interesting articles we name the following: Careers of Danger and Daring; Johnny's Mistake; A Frigate's Namesake, A Serial; Lost in the Fog: a Tale of Adventure; The Lucky Penny, a True Story; Nature and Science for Young Folks. The St. Nicholas League, a special department, furnishes much interesting and profitable reading. The magazine is profusely illustrated. Subscription price, $3 per year. Address The Century Co., Union Square, New York.

Theodosia Burr's remarkable life story is capitally told by an admiring writer in the February Ladies' Home Journal. Such extremes of joy and sorrow as were the lot of The Beautiful Daughter of Aaron Burr come to few women. The story of the famous hymn, Nearer, My God, to Thee, and a close view of its brilliant author, are united in A Woman to Whom Fame Came After Death. How we get and keep the correct time is explained in The Clock by Which We Set All Our Watches; and The Buffaloes of Goodnight Ranch is a record of the only herd of North American bison owned by a woman. Lovers of Cranford—and they are legion—will be delighted with the dramatic version in the February Journal. Through Edward Bok representative men and women journalists emphatically settle the oft-disputed question, Is the Newspaper Office the Place for a Girl? There seems to be but one opinion among those who should know most on the subject. The Problem of the Boy, Why One Man Succeeds and His Brother Fails, and The Trying Time Between Mother and Daughter, are all thoughtful articles. Architecture, the fashions, culinary matters, and all themes interesting women are amply treated. By The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia. One dollar a year; ten cents a copy.

So many thousands have read and raved over the Van Bibber stories, that it seems safe to predict a multitude of readers for the leading article in Ainslee's for February, Richard Harding Davis, by Allen Sangree. The study is advertised as authoritative, and is agreeably free from the gush of hero-worship. A rich variety of photographs illustrates the text, the best one of which is a portrait painted by Mrs. Davis, now reproduced for the first time. Yale, the Most Democratic of Our Colleges, by Frederick Tilney, is a readable account of the conditions of life at this famous university. The illustrations are numerous and handsome. Delaware's Blue Laws, by Theodore Dreiser, contains interviews with notable people of the State that indicate the attitude of the public toward the whipping-post and pillory. Unique photographs accompany this article. Menier and His Island, by Henry Harrison Lewis, is the romantic story of a millionaire's purchase of Anticosti, an island one hundred and thirty-five miles long and forty miles wide, for one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. Besides, the reader learns that Anticosti is the greatest lobster fishery in this hemisphere, and that it is rich enough in spruce forests to supply the United States with paper pulp. Spotters, by Samuel H. Adams, possesses much interest of a curious nature; and The Department of Agriculture, by Arthur Henry, reveals Uncle Sam's methods to help his farmers, fruit growers and other producers. There are other good features too numerous to mention. Street & Smith, Publishers, New York.

Life is too short, the road to success too long to try to learn by experience.

The Grenada Business College will give you in three months' time, with diligent toil, what it will take you a life time to accomplish by actual experience. This was verified by a former pupil who attended our school three months. This pupil was the son of a fine business man who afterwards informed us that his son had gained as much information under our instruction in three months as he himself (the business man) had learned by actual experience in twenty-five years.

Life is worth living if we place forth our very best energies with the proper instructors, who will lead us in the right direction.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE MINUTES.

In accordance with the plan authorized by the Conference at its last meeting, the printed Minutes have been distributed to the several charges according to the best of my knowledge and ability. To those preachers living convenient to express offices they have been sent by express, prepaid; to others by mail. After diligent enquiry, if any fail to receive their package, let them notify me immediately.

Several hundred more copies have been sent out this year than formerly, which has entailed a few dollars expense extra of funds in hand. I have one hundred copies extra, which at 6¼ cents per copy will meet this deficit. I shall be glad to send them postpaid at this rate to those who may wish them.

We have done the best we could as to time, quantity and quality, and modestly ask that the veil of charity be cast over all errors and defects.

These records should be read, pondered and preserved. We commend our advertisers all as worthy of patronage in their various pursuits, and hope their claims will be considered when anything in their lines is wanted.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. THOS. H. DORSEY, Arcola, Miss. EDITOR.

Dear Brother Dorsey:

Your postal, which came a few days ago, only hastens me in doing what I have for some time wanted to do—to let you know something of the workings of our League.

Our roll needs revising, but think I am safe in stating that our membership consists of about forty, with an average attendance at our devotional meetings of from twenty-five to thirty. The spirit of these meetings is good, and we are constantly made to rejoice by seeing a continued spiritual growth. At the time of our organization it was difficult to provide leaders, but, owing to the consecration and patient efforts of our president, Mrs. Montgomery, and our pastor, Bro. Thomas, we were gradually, and almost unconsciously, led out of self. Now, there are but few who decline, when asked, to conduct one of the religious services; so it is not difficult for the members to see wherein they have been blessed. For months past I have noticed, both from public and private expressions, a growing desire to reach out after others—to become, in deed and in truth, soul winners!

Another good evidence of the spiritual growth of our League is the ready response in giving. As special offerings the past year we gave fifty dollars to the Soochow University, and sixty dollars to one of the Cuban schools—besides numerous smaller amounts, as occasions arose. Our monthly collections amount to from twelve to fifteen dollars.

A good and telling work is being done in our Charity and Help Department. In our house-to-house visiting we try not only to meet temporal wants, but "Charity and Help" has to us a deeper significance! One work which we have just completed in this line was a systematic canvass of the town in search of children who ought to attend Sunday-school. We are already seeing gratifying results.

Our Literary Department has never been the success that we still hope to have it attain. We have purchased several sets of the Reading Course, and hope for better results.

While no one department is all that we desire, yet we feel that God is with us, and during this new year we shall "attempt great things for God: expect great things from God."

Yours "All for Christ,"
MISS DUDLEY JONES.

Send the editor a report of your semi-annual elections.

Begin to prepare for your District Conference. After all, this is the one where the real work is done.

Reduced rates will be given on the railroads. Delightful entertainment will be furnished by Jackson League. There's no reason why we should not have a large attendance.

Let every League in the State elect delegates and alternates immediately and forward their names to Miss Carrie Schwing, Jackson, La. This latter is a matter of courtesy to our hosts that should not be neglected.

The Executive Committee has decided on May 9-12 as the date for the State League Conference at Jackson, La. Now, let all who can possibly attend mark that date on their calendars. There's no finer place in the State for the Conference than old Jackson. A more delightful town and more hospitable people are not in existence.

A Leaguer writes: "It is disappointing to find nothing in the League column." We have not learned to manufacture news, and we have no way of gathering it save from Leaguers who are enough interested to send it. The Leaguers do not want platitudes and long-winded articles such as fill some League columns—they can get those things from other sources. They do not want general League news, for that is found in the Era, and it is to be supposed that all intelligent Leaguers subscribe to that. Local League news is what is wanted; and if the Leaguers want it, they must send it to the editor.

Ruston League elected new officers in January as follows: A. A. Cann, Jr., president, and Lelia Stevens, secretary and treasurer. The Arcadia District League Conference will be held at Ruston in June.

Seeds that Surely Grow.

The cost of seeds compared with the value of the crop is so small that a few cents saved by buying second rate seeds will amount to many dollars lost when the harvest is gathered. Farmers have found out by many costly failures what a risky thing it is to buy seeds without being pretty sure that they are reliable and true to name. The latest catalogue of the seed house of D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, Mich., is a reminder that thousands of farmers in the United States and Canada have placed their faith in the reputation of this great firm. During a business career approaching half a century in time Ferry's seeds have won an annual increase in popularity, which is perhaps the best evidence that they grow and give satisfaction. Ferry's Seed Annual for 1901 is a useful guide in selecting seeds for the farm, the truck garden and the flower garden. It is sent free on application.

THE BLACK SHEEP.

He had not always been a black sheep. When a lamb his fleece was as white as that of his playfellows in the valley; and it would doubtless have remained so had he been content to confine himself to the part of the valley set apart for his kind, as did the rest of the flock. But this he would not do. To this particular sheep distance seemed to lend enchantment. He turned his back upon the luxuriant herbage around him and gazed wistfully at the vineyard upon the hill on one side of him, and at the lofty heights of the mountain on the other side.

The wise old sheep of the flock had noticed his discontent, and warned him of the traps set for intruders in the vineyard, and of the prowling wolves inhabiting the mountain. But the young sheep ignored the counsel of the Solon of the flock, believing himself possessed of enough wisdom to avoid pitfalls and openly boasting of his fearlessness as to wolves.

So one day this headstrong sheep bounded away from his companions and leaped the fence inclosing the vineyard. He ate of the grapes and ruthlessly trampled the vines on which the vinedresser had spent much time and care, all the while musing on the delights of this new field. But his musings were suddenly interrupted by the ground beneath him giving way, precipitating him into one of the traps of which he had been warned. Then he realized that what had seemed solid earth to him was merely the covering of leaves concealing from view a pit.

By and by the husbandman came that way, and, seeing the demolition of his vines, went at once to the pit and found the miscreant. Had it been a wolf, he would have destroyed him immediately; but, not wishing to kill his neighbor's sheep, he lifted him from the pit and held him fast, undecided what to do with him.

"Let me go," protested the frightened sheep, "and I promise never to intrude again."

So the kind-hearted husbandman released his captive, and the miscreant scampered back to the valley.

A few days sufficed to relieve him of the effects of his scare, and he determined to again visit the vineyard, bearing in mind the exact location of the pit into which he had previously fallen. But, alas! there is always more than one trap set to catch the wrongdoer, and that same day the vinedresser for the second time found a sheep his captive.

The intruder realized his desperate plight, and resolved upon a plan of action—one of deceit. So, when reminded by his captor of his former capture and promise, he replied: "Nay, not so. Upon my word, I remember nothing of it. It was surely another sheep."

And all sheep being so much alike, the vinedresser could not contradict him. However, being a resourceful man, he determined to mark this and future captives; so he plunged the intruder again and again into a fluid of inky blackness, and set him free.

With a bleat of delight the sheep scampered away, not realizing his change of color, and glad to escape with what he thought merely a ducking. But when he approached a stream of clear water to quench his thirst he sprang back with a cry of terror at the reflection therein. He realized that he was a black sheep.

What was he to do? He skulked in the brush on the fringe of the valley until he heard the shepherd boy call to the flock and start with them to the sheepfold for the night. Then he hastened to overtake them, and called the wise old sheep aside and told him his story. "What am I to do?" he pleaded. "What am I to do?"

"You come to me for advice," replied the counselor. "What assurance have I that it will not be treated with the same contempt as that previously given you? To those who will act upon it I give advice freely; for such as you I have none."

The black sheep attempted to pass into the pen with the others, but the shepherd, believing him to belong to another fold, knowing there were no black sheep in his flock, and aware of his master's aversion to black sheep, pushed him back.

What a plight he was in! In the light of day, surrounded by the rest of the flock, and under the watchful eye of a protector, he had boasted of his fearlessness of wolves; alone, outside the fold, and an encounter with wolves during the night a probability, it was different. Trembling with fear, he crouched close to the closed gate and lamented his fate.

By and by a wolf sauntered along. Spying the sheep, he licked his chops, and said pleasantly: "Good evening, my friend! How is it that you are not housed with the rest of the flock tonight?"

"Hold!" replied the black sheep in terror. "I know that you would devour me, but in doing so you will provide yourself with only one meal; whereas, if you will spare my life, I will bargain to furnish you with a meal each day. As you see, I am branded and an outcast, and no longer enjoy the protection of the sheepfold at night. Spare me, and I agree to entice into your reach a sheep each day."

"Agreed," replied the wolf; "but remember, the first day you fail your life is the forfeit." So saying, the wolf departed.

Strange to say, many of the foolish lambs admired the black sheep, and listened in amazement to the wonderful stories he told them of the pleasures he enjoyed on the mountains near by. Thus each day he found it easy to persuade one of them to follow him beyond the pale of the shepherd's protection. But after a few days it began to be noticed that none of his companions ever returned, and the black sheep soon found his false promises unavailing. Twice in succession was he excused by the wolf, who desired to spare him, hoping to still further use him. But when he encountered the black sheep the third night the wolf was desperately hungry.

"One more day!" pleaded the wretch, "and I promise to give you the finest of the fold."

"Hold you deceitful tongue," replied the wolf.

"One more day, and I promise."

But the hungry wolf had fastened his wicked teeth in his throat, and that was the last of the black sheep.—J. C. Carnthers, in Children's Visitor.

GRANDMOTHER'S REMEDY.

"Girls don't have to do anything!" declared Bobby as he sat down with a thump on the shoe box in grandmother's room. "Girls don't have to feed the hens or fill the wood box! Never! I wish, I wish I was a girl, so I do."

"Girls don't have to do anything!" exclaimed Grandma Stone in surprise. "Well, well, well! You come with me a minute, Bobby, and we'll see if you are right."

Bobby followed grandmother into the sitting-room. But when they got there both were surprised, for sitting in the big rocker was Beth, her eyes full of tears.

"I wish I was a boy, same as Bobby!" she said sorrowfully. "I'm tired as anything of dusting rooms. Boys don't have to dust, or mend stockings, or do anything! O dear, dear, dear!" And Beth hid her curly head in the duster and sobbed.

"Well, I never did!" exclaimed grandmother. "Suppose you do Bobby's work to-day, and he will do yours. I know that he will be delighted to change with you."

But would you believe it? Grandmother was mistaken, for Bobby shook his head. "I'm going to feed the hens myself!" he said decidedly.

Beth wiped her eyes in a hurry. "Girls never fill wood boxes," she murmured.

Then both laughed and stopped grumbling for that day. So you see grandmother's remedy was a wise one, after all.—Our Sunday Afternoon.

A DAILY PORTION.

The manna was so pure and delicate that it could not bear contact with earth. It fell upon the dew, and had to be gathered ere the sun was up. Each one, therefore, had to rise early and seek his daily portion.

So it is with the people of God now. The heavenly manna must be gathered fresh every morning. Yesterday's manna will not do for to-day, or to-day's for to-morrow. We must feed upon Christ every day, with fresh energy of the spirit, else we shall cease to grow. Moreover, we must make Christ our primary object. We must seek him "early."—C. H. M.

Benjamin Franklin, in his last will and testament, gave to the city of Boston £1,000 to be put at interest for one hundred years, and loaned out to assist small mechanics in starting in business. In 1892 the first hundred years ended, and the fund had increased through fortunate investment to over $400,000, of which $300,000 was paid over to the city of Boston to be used in public work for the amelioration of the life of the people, and $100,000 was again put at interest for the one hundred years. If Franklin were a Moses, and could have struck some peak of the Alleghenies and opened up some great river, he would have done no greater work than that which he accomplished by his last will and testament. Yet any man who gets together $5,000 before his death may do the same thing.—Baptist Outlook.

Temperance.

ALCOHOL AND INSANITY.

The influence of alcohol in the causation of insanity is not as fully appreciated by physicians generally, and especially not by the laity, as by alienists, upon whose notice the unpleasant, yet important truth has forced itself with the conclusiveness of demonstration. The evidence is both clinical and pathologic.

It has been repeatedly shown that alcohol causes degenerative changes in the tissues of the nervous system. In a discussion of the duty of the State in the care of the insane, Kraepelin (American Journal of Insanity, Vol. lvii., No. 2) states that of the patients in hospitals for the insane in the German Empire 10 per cent. have been committed on account of mental diseases due to alcohol. In some institutions the percentage is as high as 30, not including numerous cases in which alcohol has been an exciting, but not the primary cause of the trouble—in cases of mania, epilepsy and paresis. Experience has shown that about one-third of the living children of alcoholic parents are epileptic, and that more than one-half of the idiots in the world are the offspring of alcoholic parents.

Kraepelin goes so far as to consider intoxication a mental disturbance fraught with great danger to society. He points out also the frequency with which alcoholism is responsible for crime of various kinds and degrees. There is no escape from the fact that alcohol is a poison, especially to the nervous system, whose effects naturally will vary with the amounts in and the frequency with which it is used, and the stability of the structures upon which its influence is exerted. There is, thus, but one attitude for the conscientious physician to assume in this connection, namely: to look upon alcohol as he does upon other therapeutic agents, as, for instance, ether, chloroform, opium, as having a distinct and definite field of usefulness, but not to be employed indiscriminately and habitually and in the absence of physiologic indications. —Philadelphia Medical Journal.

"If the king finds his crown too heavy," says the wise man of long ago, "let him wear it every day." Habit is a great help as well as a hindrance, and good habits are as easily formed as bad ones, and their power is just as strong. Therefore, it behooves us to consider well the kind of habits we are forming.

God within us! Not only ever with us unseen, not only watching us in our secret moments and reading the very thoughts of our hearts, not only covering us with the shadow of his wings and lighting us with the light of his countenance, but within us—our bodies his temples, our hearts his home. O, if we could but grasp the thought, we should live lives nobler and more beautiful.—F. W. Farrar.

Consistent with its policy to constantly improve its service, the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad is now relaying its track between New Orleans and Slidell, a distance of twenty-nine miles, with new steel rails, weighing seventy-five pounds to the yard.

The entire line has been ballasted in the most approved manner from end to end, and, notwithstanding the increased price of steel, two-thirds of the entire mileage has been relaid with 75-pound new steel rails, and the balance of the line will be relaid as rapidly as the material can be procured.

These improvements are not only an indication of the prosperous condition of the property, but an assurance of safety and comfort to travelers.

The entire Queen and Crescent system, of which the New Orleans and Northeastern forms a part, is now a thoroughly up-to-date system of railroads running the very best equipment in the most modern style.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It has pleased God, in his wisdom, to remove from us our beloved sister and friend, Mrs. TRUDCHAN HYER AKIN, the beloved wife of Mr. Chas. V. Akin, we, the Ladies' Aid Society of DeSoto (Miss.) Methodist Church, of which she was president, beg leave to submit the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we, as a society, deeply feel and gratly deplore our loss. In her death this society has lost one of its most zealous members, and one who will be sadly missed. We extend to her husband and loved ones our heartfelt sympathy, and assure them that their sorrow is our sorrow, and pray that God may sustain them in this trouble.

Resolved, That we commend her life of Christian usefulness to all. She was an earnest worker in the church, a faithful wife, a fond mother, and a true and helpful friend. We are grateful that it was our lot to have known and loved her. In her death we are sensible of the fact that mere words will but feebly express the sentiments of our hearts. Death always brings a touch of sorrow, no matter who the victim, but when he chooses one of our noble women giving promise of such a useful and noble life, it is especially sad.

Resolved, That each member of this society wear a badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of this testimonial of our sympathy and love be sent to the family, and a copy of same be sent to the Mississippi Messenger and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and, further, that they be spread upon our Minutes.

MRS. M. J. MARTINIERE,
MISS ETTA WRAMS,
MISS FANNIE MCFADDEN.

DeSoto, Miss.

HILL—Mrs. L. A. HILL (nee Miss Anna Blackburn) was born Feb. 3, 1839, in Marshall county, Miss., near Holly Springs, and fell asleep in Jesus, Dec. 22, 1900 in Panola county, Miss.

Miss Anna Blackburn was married to Mr. W. G. Hill, April 1, 1879, and moved to Longtown, Panola county, Miss., where she spent the remaining years of her life. Her husband preceded her by a number of years to the eternal world. She was converted and united with the Methodist Church when quite young, living both in public and private a life above reproach. She was always loyal to the church of her choice. How she loved to attend divine service, the reading of the Bible, meditation, and prayer! When under the pastorate of the saintly H. L. Gibbs she entered into the "rest of faith," or "entire sanctification," and her life, consistant before, was more devout and Christ-like afterwards. She was always thinking of others and ministering to their wants. Gentle, refined, quiet-mannered, her presence was a benediction in any household. How she will be missed by the brother and sister and their families, whom she visited from time to time; but she has gone to be reunited with her father, mother, and other loved ones around the throne in heaven. How joyful must have been her welcome there! And her loved ones rise up and call her blessed. HER NIECE.

EDMONSON—Mrs. JENNIE EDMONSON was born in Warren county, Miss., Jan. 5, 1840, and died at her home near Patmos, Sharkey county, Miss., Sept. 9 1900. In December, 1873, she was married to Mr. J. C. Edmonson. The husband and one daughter are left to mourn their loss. She was an affectionate wife and loving mother, and was an active worker of the Methodist Church. She was given to hospitality, fed the hungry, visited the sick, clothed the naked, and died as she had lived—a Christian. One commendable feature of her life was her motherly care for orphan children. She was hardly ever without one in her home. Before dying she gave direction concerning her funeral, and asked that the following songs be sung: "Thou art gone to the grave," and, "Why do we mourn departing friends?" She left affectionate messages for absent friends and loved ones, and now sleeps besides a daughter who died in childhood.

May the blessings of God keep the sorrowing ones, and may they meet her in the skies!

A FRIEND.

ARMSTRONG—Mrs. MATILDA ARMSTRONG, wife of Mr. Geo. Armstrong, was born June 8, 1838, and after a painful illness died in peace, Oct. 9 1900, at her home in Woolmarket, Miss. She was married to Mr. Geo. Armstrong in 1870. This marriage was most happy, and was blest with nine children. One of these preceded her to the better land, while eight others, with their father, still live to cherish her memory. She was a member of the M. E. Church, South, and it was the privilege of the writer to know Sister Armstrong intimately, and, with all who knew her, give testimony to her Christian life. When the end came she was ready, and passed triumphantly into the bright beyond. She leaves a sorrowing husband and children, besides brothers and sisters and many others, to mourn her absence. May sorrowing ones have that faith that will take hold of the promises of God, and receive the consolation which they alone afford!

A. SOARBOROUGH.

HUTCHINS—At a called meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. Church, South, at Cayuga, Miss., Jan. 14, 1901, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, God, in his wisdom, has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved sister and friend, Mrs. J. E. HUTCHINS; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of our friend and co-laborer our society has lost one of its most useful and zealous members, whose presence will be sadly missed.

Resolved, That while our ranks have been broken, and our hearts filled with sadness, and while we deplore our loss, we bow in humble submission to the will of God, and extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy in their sorrow, commending them to our God, who alone is able to sustain and comfort them in their great bereavement.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family; also a copy sent to the Utica Herald and CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MRS. LILY HACKLER, Pres.
MISS MABELLE FISHER, Sec'y.

GOODRICH—Mr. WILLIAM JAMES GOODRICH died at the home of his cousin, Dr. Richard, New Orleans, La., of malarial fever, on the twelfth of January, 1901, aged forty-six years. Though his body was racked with pain, and ill-health his portion for some time, yet he exhibited the same Christian spirit, trusting in his Savior, his "dear Jesus," "my Jesus," for help, and praying "my dear Lord and my God" to receive him into rest.

JUST THREE THINGS.

"I once met a thoughtful scholar," says Bishop Whipple, "who told me that for years he had read every book he could which assailed the religion of Jesus Christ, and he said he should have become an infidel but for three things:

"First, I am a man. I am going somewhere. To-night I am a day nearer the grave than I was last night. I have read all such books can tell me. They shed not one solitary ray upon the darkness. They shall not take away the only guide and leave me stone blind.

"Second, I had a mother. I saw her go down into the dark valley where I am going, and she leaned upon an unseen arm as calmly as a child goes to sleep on the breast of its mother. I know that was not a dream.

"Third, I have three motherless daughters (and he said it with tears in his eyes). They have no protector but myself. I would rather kill them than leave them in this sinful world, if you blot out from it all the teachings of the gospel."—Selected.

The minister who gets all his opinions from somebody else is not likely to be an edifying teacher or preacher. He is not a voice, speaking out the deep convictions of his own soul, but a mere echo of what has already been uttered. It is not too much to say that, having thus abdicated the power of thought, which is a God-given endowment, he has disqualified himself for his calling. But he makes an almost equally grave mistake if he repudiates the results of other men's toils, and sets up his own independent judgment against all the scholars and thinkers of the world. The audacity of this latter course gives, we take it, a certain amount of pleasurable sensation, and is likely to provoke a good deal of applause. Yet, for all that, it is not wise to treat with indifference or contempt what the masters have written or spoken.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

Heaven will be full of surprises. It will be one of the joys, those constant surprises, as the friendships of earth are renewed, and as we enter into new and larger and sweeter fellowships with those cherished in memory, whose names are as household words. I have no doubt that all the avenues of knowledge which we have here on earth will be ours in heaven. There will be eyes to see, ears to hear; there will be hands that can clasp, lips that can speak. The friendships of heaven constitute one of its noblest attractions, and these are to be perpetual, constantly uplifting and ennobling.—A. J. F. Behrends, D. D.

Baron Cuvier, the renowned naturalist, then only eighteen, accepted a situation as tutor in a family living near Fecamps, in Normandy. The house was near the sea, and he often strolled on the beach. One day he found a stranded cuttle fish. He took it home, dissected it, and began then the study of mollusca, in which he won such a reputation. The ocean was his text-book. This was his opportunity to learn from that book. By embracing the opportunities offered in his three years' residence by the sea, he became one of the shining lights in natural history.—New York Advocate.

Consciousness is the immediate knowledge which the mind has of its sensations and thoughts, and, in general, of all its present operations. FOR MOTHERS.

The period immediately following child-birth is fraught with many dangers. The strength has been used in the painful ordeal through which the mother has passed and she finds herself helpless and weakened. Many mothers, like Mrs. Ford, date the beginning of their illness from the birth of their child. Indeed the frequent spectacle of a healthy young woman becoming a chronic invalid after motherhood is one of the tragedies of life. All this is unnecessary, when Wine of Cardui is obtainable. It rehabilitates the shattered nervous system, strengthens the organs and ligaments, and re-establishes a healthy, natural condition, saving years of chronic sickness and suffering. Wine of Cardui taken just before confinement will render the ordeal comparatively painless. It will re-enforce and strengthen the organs for their work. For every trying crisis in a woman's life, Wine of Cardui is the medicine to take. Ask your druggist for Wine of Cardui and take no substitute. If one is offered send $1.00 for a bottle to the Chattanooga Medicine Company, Chattanooga, Tenn.

After my baby was born I took the whites and falling of the womb, and was in a very dangerous condition. I read one of your home treatment books, and commenced to treat myself with Wine of Cardui and Black-Draught. I am thankful for what the medicine did for me, and I am now in better health than I have been for a long time.

Ninety-eight per cent. of all its graduates were professed Christians at the time they terminated their connection with the university. One-fifth of the graduates have entered the ministry of some denomination.

The Australasian Wesleyan Missionary Society is rejoicing over a surplus of $7,965 in its year's accounts, its total receipts having been $15,592 greater than in the previous year. Of this increase $10,720 is credited to the islands, Fiji giving $8,458 of it, Samoa $2,017, New Guinea $245, and New Britain 70 cents.

The young Queen of Holland is distinguished among European sovereigns as a total abstainer, and is an ardent worker in the temperance cause. She has made a convert of her great friend, the Princess Paulina of Wurtemberg, and both royal ladies actively use their influence on the side of temperance. Queen Wilhelmina is patron both of the Total Abstinence Society of the Netherlands and of the Woman's Social Purity League.

The record of growth in the Southern Presbyterian Church during the past ten years shows an increase in the whole church of 34 per cent. When, however, the comparison is made of the growth during the earlier and the later halves of the decade, The Christian Observer finds "food for reflection;" the rates were 21 per cent. from 1890 to 1895, and only 11 per cent. from 1895 to 1900, while the rate for the last year was only a little more than 2 per cent.

A new missionary society has been organized in New York City under the name of the International Union Mission, to engage in foreign missionary work. Among the directors are Dr. D. A. Blackburn, pastor of the Church of the Strangers, and Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, president of Union Theological Seminary. Its object is to form a medium for the transmission of money directly from the givers to the beneficiaries without troublesome and unnecessary delay. The society starts out with one missionary in India.

Dr. Jay Benson Hamilton, pastor of DeKalb Avenue Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., has been elected to the presidency of Walden University, Nashville, Tenn. This institution was formerly known as Central Tennessee College, but a short time ago its name was changed to Walden University, in honor of Bishop Walden. The founder and first president of the institution was Dr. John Braden, who died some months ago. The college property consists of seven substantial brick buildings and four frame buildings, situated in the southeastern part of Nashville.—Christian Advocate (N. Y.).

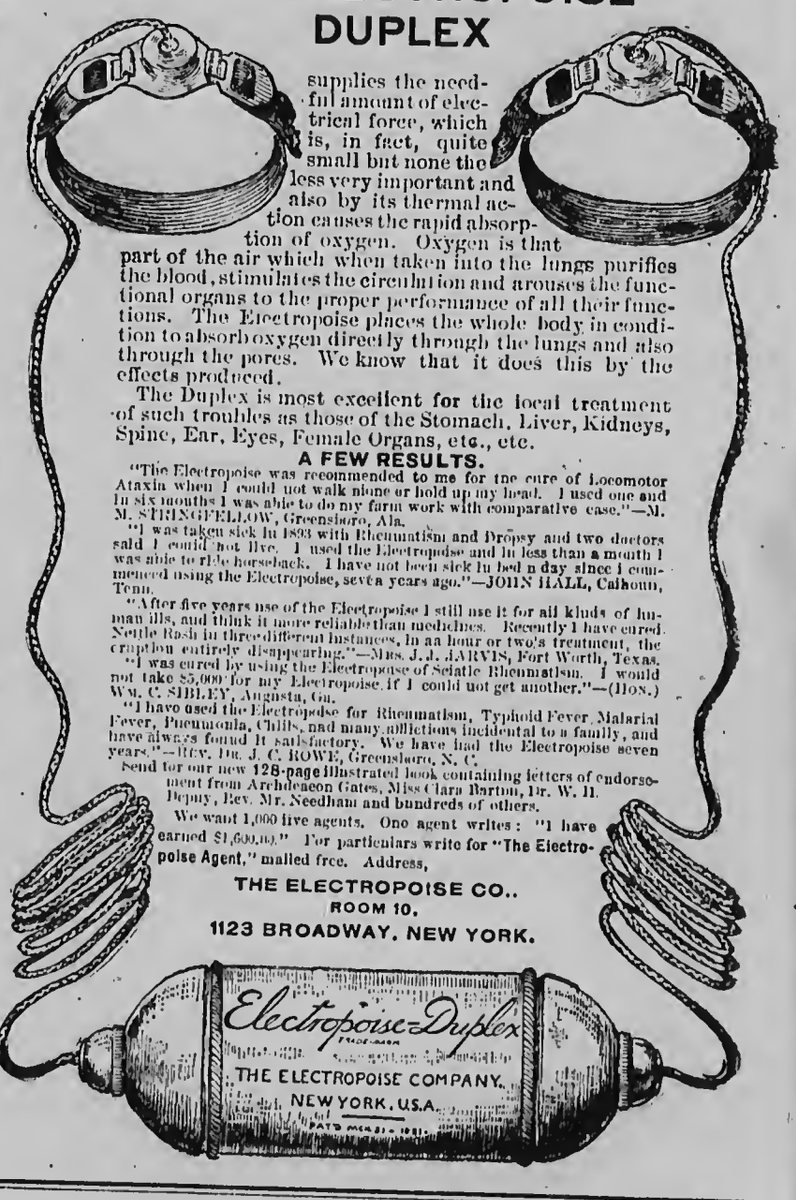
THE ELECTROPOISE DUPLEX



supplies the needful amount of electrical force, which is, in fact, quite small but none the less very important and also by its thermal action causes the rapid absorption of oxygen. Oxygen is that part of the air which when taken into the lungs purifies the blood, stimulates the circulation and arouses the functional organs to the proper performance of all their functions. The Electropoise places the whole body in condition to absorb oxygen directly through the lungs and also through the pores. We know that it does this by the effects produced.

The Duplex is most excellent for the local treatment of such troubles as those of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Spine, Ear, Eyes, Female Organs, etc., etc.

A FEW RESULTS.

"The Electropoise was recommended to me for the cure of Locomotor Ataxia when I could not walk alone or hold up my head. I used one and in six months I was able to do my farm work with comparative ease."—M. M. STRINGFELLOW, Greensboro, Ala.

"I was taken sick in 1893 with Rheumatism and Dropsy and two doctors said I could not live. I used the Electropoise and in less than a month I was able to ride horseback. I have not been sick in bed a day since I commenced using the Electropoise, seven years ago."—JOHN HALL, Calhoun, Tenn.

"After five years use of the Electropoise I still use it for all kinds of human ills, and think it more reliable than medicines. Recently I have cured Nettle Rash in three different instances, in an hour or two's treatment, the eruption entirely disappearing."—Mrs. J. J. JARVIS, Fort Worth, Texas.

"I was cured by using the Electropoise of Sciatic Rheumatism. I would not take $5,000 for my Electropoise if I could not get another."—(Hon.) WM. C. SIBLEY, Augusta, Ga.

"I have used the Electropoise for Rheumatism, Typhoid Fever, Malarial Fever, Pneumonia, Chills, and many afflictions incidental to a family, and have always found it satisfactory. We have had the Electropoise seven years."—Rev. Dr. J. C. ROWE, Greensboro, N. C.

MORE ABOUT THE MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

BY DR. J. H. PRITCHETT.

The Executive Committee having in charge the preliminaries of the New Orleans Missionary Conference, besides doing all it can along the special line for which it was created, such as securing the best place, the largest attendance, the cheapest rates of travel and entertainment, the most inviting programme possible, is also trying, by every means available, to awaken in the whole church both a just appreciation of the meeting as an epoch-making occasion, and a profound realization of the personal responsibility of every member to bear some part in the work.

Among other things looking in this direction, it has sent out a large number of neatly printed prayer cards, with the request that those receiving them organize among their friends prayer circles pledged to a daily remembrance at a throne of grace the following interests:

1st. The Conference; that the presence and power of the Holy Spirit be manifest in all its plans and deliberations, and that each delegate realize a personal sense of obligation to Christ to carry out his last command.

2nd. Our Missionaries, Foreign and Native; that wisdom, faith, and love be granted in a large measure for the work of the ministry.

3rd. Our Native Christians; that in purity of life and singleness of purpose they may be faithful witnesses.

4th. The World-field; that the "Lord of the harvest will send forth laborers" into the field so providentially prepared.

5th. The Home Church; that there may be a missionary pastor in every pulpit and a missionary conscience in every pew.

Three things appear upon the very face of these little missives: (a) The incalculable worth of prayer. (b) The transcendent importance of these themes. (c) The multiplied power that concert gives our prayers.

We desire to extend the good work of the committee to a wider field, and hope to reach by means of this communication many to whom these cards may not go, and who may enter the prayer circles contemplated by them.

It needs to be kept before the minds of all concerned that the cause in the interest of which this Conference is called, and for which prayer is so earnestly solicited, is the one true vocation of the church, the one only hope of the world. Until Christian men and women come to recognize this fact, and are profoundly impressed with it, responses to any call made in its interest will be sadly incommensurate both to the duty of the church and the needs of humanity. That any Christian can live for a day without such a recognition and impression is the abiding wonder of angels, devils, and bad men. That this cause,

> "For which all nature stands,
> And stars their courses move,"

for which the Son of God gave himself to make it a verity, for which the Holy Spirit is ceaselessly engaged in men's hearts and lives, for which the numberless forces of God's universe, good or bad, are put under contribution, should be put second in value to anything else by one of its beneficiaries, is inconceivable to anyone except the beneficiary himself.

The cause of missions—Christ's plan for disseminating his gospel, and thus revolutionizing the world to God—asks, demands, four things of every Christian. To refuse them is to forfeit the name and surrender the claim of a Christian. (a) To pray for it. (b) To believe for it. (c) To live for it. (d) To give for it.

To pray for it, because on its success depends the world's rescue from sin, and sin's present and eternal consequences. To pray for it, because its past history, including your part in it and mine, is but the record of answers to prayer. Christ himself came because he was the Desire of all nations; the Pentecost came because those who held in their hearts the hope of the world were "all with one accord in prayer and supplication;" the church has advanced only upon her knees. "Ye have not because ye ask not," which has been the explanation of her every season of spiritual poverty and humiliation in the presence of her foes. "The gospel has winged its ever-widening way round the world only on the pinions of prayer." To pray for it "with all prayer and supplication in the spirit," because it "wrestles not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places," and its victory is to come, "not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Your Master says, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain, and that whatsoever ye should ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you."

To believe for it, because it is only the prayer of faith that avails. "All things are possible" only "to him that believeth." "How shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed?" Only those who doubt not in their hearts, and believe that they have the things for which they pray, shall have them. To believe for it, because God enjoins it, the worthiness of the cause challenges it, the church waits for it, the world anticipates its conqueror. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

To live for it, because only life can measure the effectualness of prayer, the prevalence of faith. "Why call ye me Lord, and do not the things I say?" To live for it, because "he that saveth his life (for himself) shall lose it," while only "he that loseth (invests it for Jesus' sake) shall find it." What a man puts of his life into this cause is absolutely all that he saves. To live for it, because the tide of life that flows through you to the heathen world will hardly rise above the level of its medium. What you would have the gospel reproduce in them, be sure that it produces in you.

To give for it, because only giving can testify your appreciation of God's best gift to you. To give for it, because, with Paul, you are a debtor, for Christ's sake, to every unsaved man in the world, and you can only approximate a liquidation as you labor to give him what Christ has so freely given you. To give for it, because it is the safest and richest investment possible to you. "Ye shall receive an hundredfold in this life, and in the end life eternal." To give for it, give yourself, your time, your influence, your business, your money, because, like the blessing of the Lord, "It maketh rich, and addeth no sorrow with it."

OLD-TIME CONVERSION AS JOHN BUNYAN SAW IT.

BY REV. GEO. G. SMITH.

The experience of John Bunyan was in some features abnormal, and the great value of his Pilgrim's Progress and The Holy War will not be seen unless this fact is recognized. There was an intensity about it, and a real tragedy in it, which a man of good health, sound mind and a true experience will look for in vain in his own spiritual exercises; but, stripped of the imagery, and with this fact recognized, there is nowhere a more beautiful and profitable study than The Holy War and the Pilgrim's Progress. There had been a fierce battle before the man really recognized his need of a Savior, and before the desire to find him sprang up within his heart, and before he began to seek in earnest for his soul's conversion. It was no easy matter for him to get where he could make a full surrender, and then begin to pray, and there was at first no reply to the earnest prayers which went heavenward for pardon and peace. The seeker prayed and wept. The old hymns, "Show pity, Lord, O Lord forgive;" "Depth of mercy! can there be mercy still reserved for me?" "Lord, I can not let thee go," were not written then, but they express the feelings of this penitent soul seeking the Lord. There was an hour of great suspense and agony of heart while these exercises went on. There was earnest prayer, but there was no relief. Although there was a full submission, there was no assurance of pardon. The poor, convicted sinner, struggling with doubt, and yet feeling some hope, continues to pray, and tries to find something good in himself with which to commend himself to God, but, finding no good deeds to present, no pleas to offer, with tears he throws himself at his Lord's feet. The answer that comes only increases the anxiety, for the penitent has brought before him the true picture of his own conduct, until abject despair settles down upon him. He finally gives up every plea beside God's mercy, makes full confession, and, on the faith of God's word, goes out confident that his sins are pardoned. As yet there is no joy, no rapture, only a calm assurance, which is based on the written word of the Lord that all is well. "I must, I can, I do believe that Jesus saves me now," is the song of his heart. There is relief, the burden is gone, but no rapture. Then comes liberty and assurance. The assurance of pardon was so sudden, so glorious, and so big, he was not able to stand it, and his will was for a moment so overcome that he could scarcely realize that he had any. The songs Charles Wesley sang, "O for a thousand tongues to sing," "How happy are they who their Savior obey," are the genuine utterances of the newly converted soul. Few, few indeed have such an experience as this, and the transition from despair to assurance, from darkness to light, from hell to heaven, is one that only those know who have known what it was to see sin in its deformity, and the cross in its glory. There used to be many more sky-bine conversions, as they were called, than there are now. These intense emotions are only the portion of certain temperaments, and of those who have had a certain kind of previous training, and of certain environments; but the fact that peace comes through a full surrender through prayer, through faith, is a fact for all people and for all times. One thing is sure: the lofty joys of a happy Christian do not come to those who are not intensely in earnest. The fullness of joy often, even to these, does not come at once. There is sometimes an overwhelming sense of divine favor which floods the soul, and which is overwhelming, but many a true believer waits long for it. The new life always comes, the relief from sin's bondage always comes, peace with God always comes, but such an experience as Bunyan had, and as George Whitefield had, and as Charles Wesley had, and as Lady Maxwell had, is not for all, and only comes to a few. I have really been touched as I have seen with what intense interest John Wesley used to hear the recital of these vivid experiences, of how high an estimate he placed on them, and of how vainly he himself sought for them. Calm as a May morning, with a sky as cloudless as an October day, he knew nothing of the horrible pit, on the one hand, or of riding on the sky, on the other, but there was the same trust, the same love, the same submission, the same service as was found in those who were, as he thought, so blessed. Alas! for him who has never had any conscious experience of grace, and who has not felt his need of it. His Christian life has not begun. Let him cry out, "Draw me nearer, nearer, blessed Lord," until he does know what the fellowship of the Spirit is. The glowing picture of the happy delight of one who first knows his sins forgiven, is beautifully pictured in the Pilgrim and The Holy War. The Lord is enthroned, the Word of God is a joy; faith, prayer, love, Christian communion are delights. He feels that he can not doubt any man, and will never want to sin again. The bondage to sin is broken, the inward witness is bright and clear, the sun shines, and December is as pleasant as May. The mind, the conscience, the affections, are all in harmony. The will is in sweet subjection to the Divine will, and sorrow, which was for a night, gives way to the joy which come in the morning. The whole heart is changed; the tastes, the appetites, the passions, all are brought under control. Atheism, hard-heartedness, pride, falsehood, deceit, are no longer felt, and the grosser sins are left far behind. There is belief, truth, uprightness, heavenly-mindedness, thankfulness, zeal, humility, ruling within; but, alas! this state does not continue forever. There is often decline, and why? This is the subject of another study.

I have given this statement of conversion as it is presented in Bunyan, and as it is found in Baxter, Flavel, Alleine, and later in Whitefield and Wesley, for a purpose. There has been a fearful amount of superficial work done in these latter days. For years there has been a reaction from those teachings which were once accepted as certainly true, and yet which may have gone too far in one direction until a very large number of the people in all churches where they hear of conversion have no conception of what is meant by it, and not a few who claim the distinct blessing of entire sanctification who have just entered on the life of a true believer. We must come back to these essential truths; we are sinners; we give up all sin; we make a full surrender; we take Jesus Christ as a full Savior; we are conscious of pardon, and have the peace of God in our hearts, the bondage of sin is broken, and we rejoice in the Lord. Merely joining the church, merely giving of our means, merely living a correct life, is not religion. We must be born again, and we must be assured of the fact. I am an old pastor, and I speak from experience when I say that in every church there are scores of people who are compelled to admit that if this is conversion, they never had it. Do not discourage these weak disciples; help them into the pool, but as you value their happiness here and their happiness hereafter, do not tell them they are in need of no healing. Edifying means building up. The foundation may be there, the first work may be begun, but the work of rearing the structure must be carried on, or the cap-stone will never be laid.

INDIAN MISSION—AN URGENT APPEAL.

By reference to the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference, soon to be published, it will be seen that the Bishop and cabinet continued my appointment as financial agent for the Indian Mission in Mississippi, and, therefore, I am to continue my efforts to raise money for the mission. I am informed by the presiding elder, Bro. Mellen, in whose district the Indian Mission is located, that they need money very much at this time to meet some payments on the land already bought, and then we need to buy some more as soon as possible. If we expect the work to prosper, we must furnish the means, and help to push forward the work. The cause is so important, and the people for whom I appeal so needy, and so worthy for Christ's sake. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Is not Christ our Savior worthy of this appeal, and of the help for which I ask in his name? If so, brethren and sisters, friends of the poor, destitute Choctaw Indians, please send me help at once. Please do not neglect this matter, but send at once. Send postoffice order or registered letter to me at Lorman, Miss., and pray for missions and missionaries.

Yours for the salvation of all men,

A. D. MILLER.

THE PROGRESS OF METHODISM.

Dr. H. K. Carroll contributes an article to the New York Christian Advocate in reference to the growth of Methodism, from which we take the following:

A handful of Methodists in	1766
5,000 in	1776
15,000 in	1784
65,000 in	1800
103,000 first qr. century after organization	1809
639,000 half century after organization	1834
1,835,000 century after organization	1884
2,900,000 in round numbers in	1900

A growth of 2,900,000 in one hundred and thirty-four years, and of 2,835,000 in the past century. The 65,000 was added to itself nearly forty-four times. In other words, the gains of thirty-four years, represented by the 65,000, was repeated during the century every two and a half years. The average annual gain has been 28,350.

The percentage of increase is 4,362. If the population of the country had increased in this period at the same ratio, it would now be 232,000,000, instead of 76,300,000.

But the gains of the M. E. Church have been only a part of the gains of Methodism. Include all branches since 1884, and we have:

A handful of Methodists in	1766
4,000,000 century after organization	1884
5,900,000 in	1900

The 65,000 has repeated itself about ninety-one times, or once every thirteen months. The percentage of gain is 8,977. If the population had increased at the same rate, it would now be 476,000,000, instead of 76,300,000. The average annual gain has been 58,350.

The gain in preachers is indicated by the following:

1 local preacher in	1766
24 preachers in	1776
83 preachers in	1784
287 preachers in	1800
600 preachers first qr. century after org'n	1809
2,300 preachers half century after org'n	1834
6,000 preachers in the M. E. Church alone — third quarter century	1859
12,400 preachers in the M. E. Church alone at the end of the century	1884
17,700 preachers in the M. E. Church in	1900

The gain of the century is 17,413. The 287 have been multiplied by 62; average annual gain, 174.

The beginning in a sail loft in 1766, the erection shortly afterward of a church costing $3,000, gave no more promise of ecclesiastical wealth than it did of growth in membership. Our 27,000 churches, worth $116,000,000, show a development of resources as wonderful as a miracle. It takes now between $23,000,000 and $24,000,000 a year to carry on the work of the M. E. Church, to say nothing of universities, colleges, and hospitals. The consecration of wealth is truly stupendous. Methodists have not been stingy.

Methodism was ninth among the Protestant denominations in number of churches in 1775, and third in number of communicants in 1800. It soon advanced to first place in numbers, and easily holds this place at the end of the century. It was only a handful of corn on the top of the mountains at the beginning. How wonderfully has God multiplied it!

TWENTIETH CENTURY THANK-OFFERING.

From the statement of the Secretary of Education, Dr. J. D. Hammond, it appears that we still lack nearly $150,000 of having the million and a half subscribed. This is disappointing. It was hoped, and confidently believed in some quarters, that the entire amount would be subscribed by the first day of the new century. The fact that it has not been yet promised, however, must not discourage us. The order of the General Conference was that the canvass should be continued until the full amount was raised; and be it remembered that the amount asked for from our church was the smallest per capita sum which any of the great Methodist bodies proposed to raise as a Twentieth Century Thank-offering. We are glad to see that the General Board of Education has no thought of closing the canvass for at least a year. Better still, there seems to be a general feeling on the part of the church at large that the cause should be pressed. Dr. Hammond reports that he visited eighteen of the Annual Conferences, and that they were a unit in favor of continuing the canvass. This is gratifying. Save in the single matter of personal salvation—a revival—there never was so important an issue before Southern Methodism as this question of the enlarging, equipping and endowing our schools. More than cold type can possibly make it appear, the very future of our church is locked up in our educational plants. Not for a moment do we mean to underrate the Holy Spirit or personal piety as the indispensable condition of ministerial and church success. . . . The demand for adequate educational facilities—adequate in all respects, equipment, endowment, scholarship and religion—is imperative. In this view it is just as religious to do this sort of work in its own proper place as it is to conduct a revival. The one must not overshadow and crowd out the other. Both must move forward together. Just now we need to stress this educational movement till all see and feel it, and till the million and a half of dollars have been secured—that much at least. To do this, it will be absolutely necessary to get an offering, if possible, from every member of the church. In many instances this can not be done, if the pastor is expected to do it all; but by judiciously organizing the church membership into classes, and designating certain ones to see the others, it can be done. We must have the million and a half.—Central Methodist.

A SUGGESTION.

I have been itching, as it were, for years to whisper into the ears of the leaders of the different church organizations, and especially to those of the Methodist denomination, a material suggestion relating to the manner of the delivery of sermons. While the newspaper fraternity universally in the headlines to their articles call the attention of the reader to the subject to be discussed therein, nearly all ministers of religion leave their hearers the task of making up their minds as to the subject discussed by resurvey of the sermon after it has been delivered. This is all very well for active, alert, and inquiring minds, but as there are very few of such minds in the average congregation, the mass of them go away from the services with very vague ideas, or no ideas at all, of the "subject" which the preacher has under discussion. I would, therefore, humbly suggest the wholesomeness of the practice of prefacing the sermon with a statement of the subject which it is aimed to be discussed before the congregation. This, I think, would engage the minds of nearly all present in following the remarks of the speaker, and applying them with a greater or less degree of indorsement to the subject announced. The religious newspapers being the mentors, more particularly of the clergy of their respective denominations, it has occurred to me that, in order that this subject might receive the widest possible attention on their part, I should make it through the columns of their leading denominational organ. This, therefore, must be my apology for thus trespassing upon your attention and space.—A Laymar, in Christian Advocate (Nashville).

Glances at the World.

FILIPINO CATHOLICS.

Many Roman Catholics, according to dispatches from Manila, have resolved to become Protestants. No formal declarations to that effect have yet been made, but prominent leaders have conferred with a Presbyterian missionary, Rev. J. B. Rogers, with a view to forming an Evangelical Church. A press dispatch says: "After mature deliberation, 10,000 Catholic members of the Federal party, citizens of the district of Binondo and Manila, which are the headquarters of the spirit of the party, have resolved to completely separate from the Vatican, believing that the doctrines of Rome are detrimental to the progress of the country. Those favoring a middle course proposed the formation of a Filipino synod and the throwing off of spiritual tutelage. A majority, however, joined the extremists in demanding complete emancipation from Rome, leaving the question of a new church to be decided later. The real trouble which is causing the threatened schism does not lie with the church, which is sincerely loved, but with the friars, whose return to the provinces, backed by Archbishop Chapelle, is the cause of constant agitation among the Filipinos, who are rapidly absorbing liberal ideas. So much has been written about the general hatred of the friars here and the sincere desire of the enlightened Filipinos for the complete separation of Church and State that Americans must realize the gravity of the situation from a religious standpoint. The Federals hold that the friars must not be permitted to return to the provinces. Catholicism, they say, is essentially and honestly loved, and the church can accomplish the greatest peace, but not through the friars. Leading Federals seem to be resolved upon the complete elimination of the friars or the renunciation of the Church of Rome."

THE NEGRO AND THE SOUTH.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat, of the thirtieth ultimo, in an editorial on "The Negro and the South," gave some facts that can not be too widely circulated. We quote the closing paragraph: "It is not surprising to see the negroes of the South recognizing that they are bound up with the Southern whites. Take the Confederate veterans, for instance, to entertain whom a Memphis negro and ex-slave has given $1000. The race has no cause to complain of the treatment it received from the Confederate soldiers. On the Confederate pension roll of the State of Mississippi are borne the names of a number of negroes, for when the Legislature of Mississippi passed a pension law it provided that there should be no distinction of race or color in the matter of pensions, but that negroes who served as nurses or in other capacities with the Confederate army, and were wounded or otherwise incapacitated by work while in the service, should receive pensions as well as the whites. It is becoming more evident every day that the Southern negro better realizes how he stands with the whites, and that Northern sectionalists have lost all their influence over him, their hypocrisy being now well understood. The Memphis incident is simply one of many evidences of this."

ENGLAND AND GERMANY.

Everything that concerns England is just now a matter of interest to the whole world. The fact that the hitherto friendly relations between the sovereigns of the two countries have been strengthened by the visit of Germany's Emperor to his grandmother, Queen Victoria, during her last illness, will be hailed as a good beginning of the reign of Edward VII. In conferring the Order of the Garter on the Emperor's son, the King said, according to the London Mail, it had been his mother's wish to confer the Garter, but that being impossible, the duty and pleasure devolved upon himself. "His Majesty then dwelt upon the friendly relations between the two royal families; relations which had been so clearly proved by the present visit of Emperor William, who had arrived in time to be recognized by his royal grandmother, and whose consideration and feeling had so deeply touched the nation, which keenly appreciated his action. Then, turning to Emperor William, the King gave expression to his deep feeling for him, saying that he (the King) and the British royal family esteemed him not only in virtue of their blood relationship, but for all the great qualities of the Kaiser, and in particular they valued his long sojourn of consolation in England. The King said he trusted that these friendly relations would always continue, and that the two nations might, in a common understanding, continue to work together in the cause of peace and the civilization of the world."

PRAISE FOR THE NEW KING

It may be that the new King of England will disappoint the expectations of those who have not been impressed with his entire fitness to reign over the English people. The London Times in an appreciative article says: "If anything can in some measure console the nation for the irreparable loss it has sustained, it is the well-founded conviction that the Queen has left behind her a worthy successor, who may be trusted to walk in her footsteps. In the whole range of English social and political life no position is more difficult to fill satisfactorily and without reproach than that of the heir apparent; and it may be justly said that the way this position has been filled has contributed to the remarkable increase in the devotion to the throne and the dynasty which has been one of the striking characteristics of Victoria's reign. As Albert Edward has been a scrupulously constitutional prince, we may predict that he will be a scrupulously constitutional King. In fulfillment of this onerous task he will have by his side a Queen who is already enthroned in the hearts of her loving subjects."

HAZING AT WEST POINT.

The Congressional Committee has concluded its investigation of the hazing at West Point, and the report will soon be ready for submission. The report will not only sustain the charges of hazing at our Military Academy, but will be in substantial agreement on the following recommendations: "Expulsion from the Military Academy for sending or accepting challenges; exclusion from subsequent appointment to the army of anyone dismissed from the academy on account of hazing or fighting; more tactical officers to give greater supervision to cadets, and closer relations between these officers and the cadets. Members of the committee said that the testimony taken abundantly showed the necessity of legislation on these points. It is said that the evidence discloses that dismissals from the academy are often followed by army appointments based on the strong recommendations of members of Congress, and the intention of the committee is to make dismissal a lasting barrier to army service."

What Our Editors Say.

A GOOD SIGN.

Baltimore Advocate.

It is an encouraging indication that nearly all the large cities of the Union are passing most stringent enactments against those sparring and prize-fight exhibitions that have been so much in vogue of late. Apart from their brutal and disgusting accompaniments, they have developed a fraudulent feature that is attracting the attention of the municipal authorities in several of the cities. In Chicago recently, it was discovered that some of these contests, announced to take place on their own merits, were pre-arranged affairs by a coterie of gamblers for their own benefit. The parties to the contest mutually consented to be badly pummeled and bruised, and one of them to be seemingly used up, in order to share the financial outcome of the fight with those who had gotten up the sham exhibition. Thousands of dollars paid as entrance fees, or wagered on the result, were coolly pocketed by the cunning rogues that had planned this tricky device. It is to be hoped that they were not only checked in their dishonest machinations, but prosecuted also for obtaining money under false pretenses. At any rate, it is to be hoped that this new development will assist in putting a stop to these exhibitions of brute violence and beastly passion that are a disgrace to our civilization and our manhood.

THE BEER LOBBY AT WORK.

Advocate (St. Louis).

The beer lobby is hard at work in Washington endeavoring to secure a reduction of the beer tax to the figure that prevailed prior to the Spanish war. It would be a good plan for Christian people to write to their members of Congress and intimate in plain terms that no favors should be shown to the brewers. There is scarcely a brewery in this city which has not, during the past few years, spent thousands of dollars in the erection of new buildings and the increase of its plant. The brewers do not pay the tax on beer. It is paid in nickels and dimes by customers whose families often need the money which goes over the counter of the beer saloon. The brewers should have no favor, and members of Congress who show that they are under the influence of the beer ring should be remembered and watched.

"FINAL FOOTINGS" AND A BLISTERING SHAME.

Wesleyan (Atlanta).

The record of the last "foot-ball season" is about made up, and these are published as "the final footings" of the game in the United States: 11 deaths, 62 serious injuries, and 150 less serious hurts. And what have the colleges received in return for these casualties? Not a thing which a decent, self-respecting institution ought to care to possess. If the authorities of the American colleges had the courage to take up this matter on its merits, there is not an institution in the country which would allow it. If the game had not been played until it has acquired the force of a lucrative fad, and these college authorities were asked to consider for the first time its admission into the list of allowable sports, they would vote it down instantly and unanimously.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

Texas Christian Advocate.

The facility with which our system of government works throughout the church is illustrated annually in the appointments of our ministers. They go to the several Conferences, make their reports, have their characters passed, sing, shout and pray, and without a murmur receive their orders to new fields, and move off to service with joy and delight. And when they reach their places of toil, the people are there to bid them a cordial welcome. There is nothing like it anywhere else in the world.

AN INTERNATIONAL BOON.

Richmond Christian Advocate.

Man is a very stupid animal at times. He carried a water bucket on his shoulder for two thousand years before he improved it by a handle. There are great ideas having birth in the rich soil of virile mind and nourished by thought into phenomena of genius, mercy, utility. To discoverers and inventors, the world is a deep debtor. Within a few months Professor Pupin, of Columbia University, N. Y., worked out an ocean telephone. He received nearly a million for his patent, yet reckoned the benefit to mankind, it was a meagre wage for his work. Here was a scientific contrivance hammered from its primary ingot, an idea, into a public and international boon.

AS ONE THAT BEATETH THE AIR.

Christian Advocate (Nashville).

Writing or speaking without ideas in the mind is like making brick without straw. The necessity of sometimes trying to do it is imposed upon all editors, lecturers, and preachers. We feel profoundly sorry for the man who feels that he must talk when he knows that he has nothing to say. It may not be altogether his fault. Circumstances may have rendered it impossible for him to make anything like due preparation. The thing for him to do in such a case is to be as brief as possible, and especially to avoid the dishonesty of making statements without being sure that they are correct.

OUR CONFERENCE CLAIMANTS.

Alabama Advocate.

The large majority of our claimants are altogether worthy. They have served the church long and well. They have been instrumental in saving hundreds, and some of them thousands of souls. They are now unable to work, and most of them without the means of support. Let every pastor in our Conference see that every cent of the assessment for these worthies is raised. Begin to work and plan for it. Let there be no failure at this point. How can we go up to Conference with our own salary paid in full, and not carry up the amount assessed for the men who have worn themselves out in the services of the church?

NEEDED LEGISLATION.

Raleigh Christian Advocate.

It seems to us that there is sorely needed a law which will prohibit the publication in our newspapers of the details of murders, lynchings, and legal executions. On what grounds a newspaper can complacently fill a whole column with a description of the burning of a negro in Kansas, last Tuesday, we are not able to see. Such descriptions, which are virtual proclamations, interest only those of low and depraved tastes, and never fail to develop brutality in man, thus preparing the way for more crime. Oh, for the newspaper which will deliberately refuse to publish such dark and hellish news!

Communications.

BRO. HARRISON'S LAMENT.

BY REV. W. R. WILLIAMS.

MR. EDITOR: It seems that some of our preachers have become very much alarmed at what they call "a spiritual stagnation," which, they claim, pervades our whole church. I think this is more of an idea than a reality. Bro. K. M. Harrison has recently written a very able article on this subject, in which he says he can remember when our circuits had strong preachers, and would report one hundred and fifty accessions to the church during one Conference year. Now they have no such reports to make.

Let us consider this a little. I know a preacher of the North Mississippi Conference who once traveled a circuit, including a part of the circuit I now serve. It had at that time twenty-six appointments. Supposing him to have had six accessions at each church, that would have given him one hundred and fifty-six accessions. Now this same circuit constitutes about six circuits and one station. I know three circuits in the bounds of the same territory that had during the past year two hundred and three accessions. That is an increase of forty-seven on less than half the same ground. The Corinth district is not much larger than some circuits were in Bro. Harrison's early days. During the year that has just closed we have had between four and five hundred added to our church. That does not look much dead to me.

In regard to those circuits once having strong preachers, I want to say some of them still have strong preachers. I do not believe our Bishops send all our best preachers to the single-barreled and the second best to the double-barreled stations. Neither do I believe that the inferior preachers are all sent to the circuits. Some of the greatest gospel preachers are to-day serving pine-hill circuits. It will not always do to measure a preacher by the appointment he receives. I do not believe that such a test ought to be applied. I believe our Bishops act very wisely in fixing the appointments.

Now let me say to dear Bro. Harrison that when he wants to hear the thunders of Mt. Sinai roll in the way of a gospel sermon, let him get away back in the hounds of some of our circuits, where sinners are made to fall from their seats like dead men; where fifty and seventy-five are saved during one protracted meeting. How often has my heart been made sorry for our station preachers who do their best as brave soldiers of the cross, and preach for two and three weeks at a time, and never witness a single conversion! But, brother, when such is your lot, don't conclude that the church is dead, or even dying.

Bro. Harrison says there are sixteen old Methodists in his town that he can not induce to attach themselves to the church on account of the expense; then concludes his article by saying that since he has been a preacher he has worn black clothes and saved money and fared sumptuously every day; educated his children, and had a good time. If such has been Bro. Harrison's good fortune, I suggest that he give those sixteen old brethren a free gospel; get them into the church, that they may be found waiting when our Lord calleth for them. May God bless Bro. Harrison and all other Methodist preachers!

CONFERENCE REFLECTIONS.

BY REV. C. C. WIER.

One morning, during our Conference at Baton Rouge, I sat behind a small lady dressed in deep mourning, and heard her say, "It is too bad to think I can never hear my boy preach." The lady was Mrs. Rowe, of Baton Rouge, sister of our Bro. I. T. Reames. Her first husband was Bro. Jeff Jackson, who died in Opelousas several years ago. This recalled vividly a very sad scene in my charge which occurred June 1, 1900, the day her boy died. The last week in May I returned from work to find two bicycles on the front porch. From the manner in which I was made to guess who was inside, I knew we had very welcome guests. I was soon inside shaking hands with Bro. Reames, a former pastor of our Lafayette Church, and his nephew, Isaac James Jackson, son of a former pastor. He had lived here when quite a small boy, and had won the hearts of all these people. They received him back very heartily and gladly. They were glad to see the smiling boy make such a promising youth. He told us of his plans to attend Centenary College in the Fall, and graduate from that institution of learning, and then to do for his life-work what pleased God. If God called him to preach, he would do so. He was full of promise and full of hope. Born in the home of an itinerant preacher, he joined the church at the early age of seven; but our dream of the usefulness of this young Methodist was soon turned to ashes, for he was seized with a violent type of meningitis, and lived but a short time. His death was indeed pathetic. In the home of the oldest member of our church, Mrs. M. A. Girard, where stood the pastor of the church and his uncle, Bro. Reames, and the doctor and the members of the household, and such other friends as were admitted, the poor boy was dying. The uncle could only bow in submission, and hold to the dear boy's cold hands and watch him as his life ebbed away. He was a loving, obedient son, and always faithful in the discharge of duty. He was laid to rest beside his sainted father in Opelousas.

We may lament the weakness of the ministry and the worldliness of the church all the day long, but so long as there are mothers in the land who can give their promising boys back to God and sob through their tears, "I can never hear my boy preach," so long will God bless us as a church.

High hearts are never long without hearing some new call, some distant clarion of God, even in their dreams; and soon they are observed to break up the camp of ease, and start on some fresh march of faithful service. —James Martineau.

NOTE FROM REV. W. D. BASS.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: I am truly glad that you have been elected editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I honored and loved Dr. Black during his term as editor, and did what I could for the circulation of the ADVOCATE. I assure you that I shall continue to evidence my desire for the success of the paper by renewing my efforts, and get every subscriber I can wherever I may work.

Please say to the pastors in Mississippi and Louisiana that now is the time for those who think of having my assistance in their revival meetings to write me and make arrangements. My calls last year were many more than I could possibly accept, but if several of the brethren had written sooner, I could have been with them. Those who contemplate holding revivals in the Spring, and wish my help, should make arrangements with me at once. I had to refuse helping in several important camp meetings last year because the calls were too late. May the Lord make this a great year for genuine revivals! W. D. BASS.

THE GREAT PROBLEM.

The great problem that is steadily forcing itself every day and every hour upon the Christian world is, How shall the tide of restless thought be brought within the one grand central purpose of God, made clear by the life and death of his Son, the blessed Savior of the world?

How turn this restlessness into an intelligent activity for the salvation of the Christless millions who wait in mute appeal for the revelation of the "Unknown God" whom they "ignorantly worship?" How shall purposes and plans be united with power to bring about even the gradual consummation of this grand, loving scheme of the gospel?

In what direction shall we look for resources that shall be "sufficient for these things"? There is but one: Take God at his word and rely upon it. Discover as foretokens of the true direction what is his word. It is revealed. Knowing his word is, therefore, the first step, believing his word the second, and doing his word is the third; and "these three are one." How shall we know and believe and do? "And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us: and if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him." (I. John v, 14, 15.)

True prayer is creative. At one time, only a few years ago, J. Hudson Taylor called his co-workers together and said: "We need five hundred new missionaries and fifty thousand dollars in money this year; let us pray for them." When the prayer was ended he said: 'Now let us thank God for sending them to us." Once more they devoutly knelt and thanked God in the faith of the promise that, "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it;" "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."

In the presence of such faith why should we think it remarkable that before the year closed they were reenforced by fifty missionaries and had received fifty thousand dollars?

O for such faith as this for every member of our Woman's Foreign Missionary Society—yes, for every Christian in the land! Let us seek audience with the Deity!—Woman's Missionary Advocate.

It may be possible to serve the Lord outside of church membership, but he is a foolish man who makes such an experiment. The comfort of human sympathy, especially when that sympathy has been elevated and ennobled by mutual consecration to the highest, is unspeakable.—Selected.

No man need hunt for his mission. His mission comes to him. It is not above, it is not below, it is not far. . . . The neglects of ours in daily, home, and homely duties, . . . these, the mission so rarely undertaken, constitute our simple, human duty, not to make happy human faces now and then among the children of misery, but to keep happy human faces about us all the time.—J. F. W. Ware.

FIRST CHURCH, SHREVEPORT.

First, I desire to welcome an old friend and fellow-laborer in the Memphis Conference to Louisiana and the editorship of the ADVOCATE, and expresse the hope that the connection prove both pleasant and profitable.

We have started ont well on the new year at First Church. Have had six added by certificate and one by profession of faith since Conference, and financially we begin the year with a clean balance sheet.

We have let the contract for a handsome new parsonage, and the ladies, nnder the intelligent and active lead of Mrs. John P. Scott, are pushing the enterprise, as the brethren paid for lots, and the Ladies' Aid Society, of which Mrs. Scott is president, are building the house. We have an elegant location, and my successor will enjoy a delightful home, which will cost about $4,500. As has happened to me several times, I presumed that about the time the house is done I will be sent elsewhere, and some one else will enjoy the comfort. Well, I am thankful that I am able to do the much-needed work, and am content to sow if others may reap to their comfort.

Our Sunday-school is growing under the efficient superintendency of Bro. W. L. Foster, one of our State Railroad Commission, and a noble man and Methodist, with whom it is a delight to labor. I have a splendid Official Board, of which Capt. P. M. Welsh is chairman, and I only wish that every charge could have a man like him in push and devotion to the church, for he is a business man—a lawyer—and keeps things right up and in order. With a clever people, faithful helpers, and the blessed promises of God, I enter my third year with encouragement and hope, trusting that it may in every way be a year of great success.

W. T. BOLLING.

WESSON STATION.

It has been twenty-six days since we began pastoral visiting on this charge. We have made three hundred visits, and prayed each time. We have had an accession of twenty-eight to our church; seventeen by certificates, and eleven by vows and baptism. We have baptized forty-four children. We have nine weekly prayer meetings, and purpose increasing them to fifteen, or more, soon. We read the Greek New Testament daily, and occasionally the Septuagint, and daily our Authorized Version of the Holy Scriptures; we sketch the Daily Times-Democrat, except the Sunday issue; we read the Nashville and NEW ORLEANS Christian Advocates, the Methodist Review, the Review of Missions, the Literary Digest, Cram's Magazine, Appeal to Reason, the Bookman, the Normal Instructor, one weekly Medical Journal, the Epworth Era, etc. We just mention these things that it may be known that we are doing more than visiting and praying.

Some of our people are becoming quite zealous for our Lord, and, of course, we earnestly hope and pray that through the agency of these we shall be able, by God's grace, to enlist and enthuse all the rest of the members in all church work of our charge. We have in cash and subscriptions $167 of the Conference collections.

Pray for us, that we may lead the Christians of this church into a higher plane of Christian life, and to win the sinners of the church and town to our blessed Savior. Oh, how we long to see poor lost sinners saved! They are so blind! May God help us to save them! ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

A CHEERING NOTE.

MR. EDITOR: Your first issue of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met with a hearty welcome in my home yesterday. May great happiness and abundant success accompany you to the noble end which you desire.

I have just finished the first round on the Wilson circuit. It is all that I wish as a place of service and success in my Master's name and cause. A better and more hopeful people I have not found. An exceedingly hearty and affectionate reception was given, a liberal allowance was made, and everything starts off smoothly, cheerfully and trustful. The best year of my life is before me. May great grace attend us.

The church work at Jackson, under the wise and prudent leadership of Prof. H. B. Carre, is exceedingly hopeful. For it we bespeak a happy and successful year.

Centenary College is abounding in knowledge, rejoicing in hope, abundant in labor and love, ready and well prepared to receive more boys, and by no means disposed to reject a girl, now and then. Centenary is the very best place for my boys. My boys are just like yours, and those of other men; therefore, tell it as you go, "Centenary is the place for boys."

We believe, my dear Doctor, that our most sanguine hopes will be realized in the success of our good paper under your wise and prudent management. Promising a liberal support by aiding in the increase of its circulation, I am,

Your friend and brother,

HY. W. MAY.

RUSTON METHODISTS.

Sunday was a busy day with the Methodist Church at Ruston. In the morning, after preaching a sermon on 'Missions and Self-Denial," the pastor called for a collection for missions. This church is assessed $373 for 1901, but in ten minutes $426.50 was subscribed, and the pastor says that fifty members who usually contribute were absent, and would swell the amount. Many said that the sermon was the strongest presentation of the Christian's duty to missions they ever heard, and many contributors gave more liberally than ever before. In the afternoon an old-fashioned love-feast was held, which seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed by the large number of old fashioned Methodists present. After this service the Epworth League held an interesting meeting. At night the church was crowded even to the gallery, and after a sermon of unusual force and eloquence on "The Rich Fool," the pastor received three members into the church. The good people of the charge have recently built a parsonage. It is one of the most comfortable and commodious residences in Ruston, containing seven large rooms and a reception-hall. The total cost was $2,200—all paid except about $150. Fifty dollars' worth of new furniture has been placed in it by the ladies of the church, who also deserve credit for raising in cash $200 of the building fund.—Ruston Leader.

CARROLLTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have just held our first Quarterly Conference for Carrollton and McAnerny charge. Bro. J. H. Mitchell, our faithful and painstaking presiding elder, was present, and proved himself worthy of the high position he occupies, both in the pulpit and chair. The district is fortunate that has such a man as presiding elder, for he magnifies his office. He raised $40 for improvements on district parsonage. More will be paid later. We reported foreign mission assessment and Bishops' fund paid. All the claims of the Conference last year were met, with an excess of $36.05 on foreign mission. This charge has contributed seventeen hundred and seventy-five dollars to the Twentieth Century Movement. This includes one hundred dollars thank-offering made at our watch-night service. This excellent record is due in part to the wise management, energy and liberality of that prince among laymen, Bro. J. R Bingham, as well as the assiduous labors of my worthy predecessor, Rev. T. W. Law. This people have sustained their reputation for dispensing Christian hospitality by the cordial reception and thoughtful entertainment accorded their present pastor and family. My desire and purpose is to reward them in part, by earnest, faithful and persistent service.

Mr. Editor, we intend to do what we can for the ADVOCATE. Hope to send you some subscribers soon.

Your brother,

EUGENE JOHNSON, Pastor.

OLLA, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to congratulate you as editor of our ADVOCATE, and I think I have a right to do so, for I have been a subscriber ever since it started.

The Olla and Pollock charge was left to be supplied, and this makes the second year I have supplied the work, though a superannuate. We have been well received. A few evenings ago there was an alarm at the door of the parsonage. We arose and attended to the alarm, and found a young lady and gentleman at the door as a fore-runner of a storm which was soon to approach; and come it did—about thirty-five or forty of the young and old people of the town came in, and such a pounding our pantry and table did get, with that which is pleasant to our taste and a gratification to our appetite. The effects of the storm can be seen for at least three months on our table. So the good people of Olla have drawn us nearer to them, and we hope and pray that we may be the means of getting all young and old nearer to Christ.

MAYERSVILLE, MISS.

We have been very graciously received by the good people of Mayersville, who are noted for their kind and generous treatment of Methodist preachers and their families. On the day of our arrival we found comfortable fires burning at the parsonage, and several noble-hearted ladies on hand ready to welcome us and render us any needed service. On going to the pantry, we were agreeably surprised to find it stocked with a goodly supply of provisions which unknown friends had thoughtfully provided. We feel very grateful to the people here for these and other substantial expressions of kindness.

In this connection we desire to thank our predecessor for leaving us a nice lot of wood and some chickens. We have been favored so far with bright Sundays, and hence have had good congregations. We hope, with the Lord's help, to be able to make some progress during the year.

A GREAT DAY FOR GREENWOOD.

On last Sunday, Jan. 27, Bishop Galloway preached a great sermon and dedicated our handsome church, which is a great credit to the town and community of Greenwood. Our church cost about $20,000, and is one of the most beautiful and well-arranged churches in all the country. We have raised since Conference, $3,775. We all feel happy, and now begin to plan for a great revival, and we believe that the Lord will give it to us. The church here has raised since I came, a little over a year ago, for all purposes, $8,730. To God be all the glory.

TEACHERS' BUREAU
The Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has, under paragraph 115 of our Discipline, established a TEACHERS' BUREAU. The purpose of this Bureau is the advancement of Christian Education. We propose to do our best to secure for the graduates of our institutions, and for other competent persons, positions in our schools and colleges; but we guarantee a position to nobody. Applications for positions will be furnished, upon request, with our application form, which will explain itself. Since the making of money is not the purpose of our Bureau, we will make our recommendations with the greatest possible care. Presidents of our schools and colleges, and Boards of Trustees seeking teachers, will do well to apply to us. The facilities of the Board for this work are unusual. We have a constituency, preachers and laymen, of one million and a half. We request the pastors throughout our Connection to advertise this Bureau, and to notify us of any vacancy in any school, secular or Christian, as soon as it occurs. By so doing they will greatly aid us in promoting Christian education. Address Rev. J. D. Hammond, Gen. Sec., Nashville, Tenn.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

1. All offers of premiums of books, etc., are withdrawn except those found on the fifth page of this issue.

2. From this date no receipts will be sent for money remitted on subscriptions. The moving up of the figures on the label will be regared as receipt sufficient. If errors are made, we stand ready to correct them. If two or three issues pass before the label is changed, please do not get uneasy.

The natural tendency of men is away from God. If anyone doubts this, let him look aronnd and see in which direction the great stream of humanity is going. Let him watch the early career of thousands of children born of the best Christian parents. Let him consider how continnously and zealously parents and pastors and other teachers must guard the young, and then note how often, after all their care and pain, their hopes are blasted. As Christians, we should recognize these facts, do our part to the utmost limit and trust all to God. Otherwise the loss of multitudes will be charged to us.

We often find good men ready and fluent enough in political gatherings, or even in the Lord's house, in discussing the temporal affairs of the church, but too timid to lead the congregation in prayer. It is not in our heart to condemn them, bnt we are decidedly of the opinion that their timidity can be overcome by determining to use the grace which the Holy Spirit supplies to all who seek it. No matter how lame the speech, or how weak the thought, both will be increased in strength with age and exercise. "To him that hath," and will improve his talents, "shall be given, and he shall have abundance."

The pastor is, by virtue of his office, the director and supervisor of all religious services connected with his church. As a pastor, he is in sympathy with every kind of service at all adapted to advance the spiritual interests of his flock. The people should never undertake the introduction of extra services without his advice and consent. Proper appreciation of his position, as well as loyalty to discipline, will not allow Methodists to act otherwise. On the other hand, the pastor will not take advantage of his office to outrage the consciences of his people by introducing strange fire into the sanctuary. If the preacher has authority, the people have rights. Both should be respected.

BACK TO CHRIST.

The exhortation, "Back to Christ," is wholly out of place when addressed to the evangelical Christians of this land and Europe. Not one of the churches has ever departed from Christ, either in faith or practice. They may differ from each other in non essentials, and in the method of administering the ordinances of the gospel, but all base their hope of salvation on the atonement made by our Lord Jesus Christ. All preach Christ crucified—"the power of God and the wisdom of God." All are trying to save their fellow-men and build up the kingdom of God. Under their faithful cultivation the "desert is blossoming as the rose," and the land yielding "the peaceable fruits of righteousness." Churches filled with devout worshipers are everywhere, millions of children learn of Jesus every Sunday, and Christian schools and colleges reenforce the teachings of the pulpit and Sabbath-school throughont the week. Hundreds of millions of dollars annually are contributed to support the gospel and benevolent institutions. More than sixty millions were given last year to education alone. In addition to the support of the home work, all the churches are active in sending the gospel abroad—all for the purpose of extending the knowledge of salvation through Jesus Christ.

Why, then, raise the cry, "Back to Christ!" And who is it that makes the cry? It is evidently inspired by the fact that denominationalism has a strong hold on the popular mind, as demonstrated by the rapid growth of the churches. This has given rise to the suspicion that what is called sectarianism has supplanted Christianity, and under its influence men love their denominations better than they love Christ. Those who so think are careless in their observations, and look only on the surface of things. Men are not in the church for the church's sake, but because they love Christ, and for the sake of what the church can do for them in affording the communion of saints. So long as they love Christ and enjoy the fellowship of each other as Christians, there is no danger of departing from Christ, or of loving the church better than Christ.

It is true we meet men occasionally who are intensely sectarian, even among evangelical Christians. Without good reason they assume to belong to the only true church of Jesus Christ. They sometimes talk so as to impress hearers that the church is above everything. This they do not believe. But they do believe that Christ organized the church, and put it in operation just as they preach and practice, and though they insist on union with the church and submission to its ordinances, they are firmly persuaded that they are acting in obedience to Christ. It would be hard to convince the world that these zealous men have departed from their Lord.

Those who cry, "Back to Christ," are sentimentalists. Honest they are, doubtless, and while they would charm the world with the one word, Jesus, and by fair speech plead the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, they would do so at the expense of creed and ordinances, and the organized church purchased with the blood of the Son of God. We see an indication of this in every attempt to bring together the members of the various denominations in social meetings, or meetings for the promotion of any special phase of religion. In such meetings the ordinance of baptism is never administered, nor do the attendants come together around the Lord's table. To us it seems that those who promote such organizations and cry, "Come back to Christ," themselves ought to return, for they, not the churches, have departed from their Lord.

We are heartily sick and tired of the faddists(?) who, pretending to love and obey the Savior, are continually slurring his church, which is as dear to him as the bride is to her husband, and which he has ordained to be the nursing mother of all the children of God. The man who loves the church, and works for its welfare and upbuilding, is more likely to live near to Christ than the man who is constantly crying, "Back to Christ," and at the same time is slandering his church. We can not come back to Christ because we have never forsaken him.

THE OPEN FIELD TO INTEMPERATE MEN.

It is solemnly asserted that the only field open to intemperate men is the field of politics. The statement is startling, and yet it seems to be true. An intemperate man can not get a position of any kind on a railroad. On some roads a man who indulges in drink only occasionally can not secure employment. Too much is at stake in the way of life and property. Such a man can not secure employment in a bank, a dry goods store, nor anywhere else that requires the handling of another man's goods or money. He can not be fully trusted. He is unfit for factory or machine work. He lacks steadiness of hand. He is not wanted for a farm laborer, for he is not only untrustworthy, liable to be out of place when needed, but to be cruel and abusive to dumb animals. This no good farmer will tolerate.

But, unfortunately, while the drunken man is regarded as unfit for places of responsibility under the direction of other men, he is too often regarded as thoroughly competent to direct, on his own responsibility, the thoughts and acts of men in the field of politics. No matter how intemperate he is, unless he has lost all self-respect, if he aspires to political leadership, he can not only get the ear of the people, but their confidence. If he desires office, he can secure the necessary votes. Hence the strange and unaccountable sight in this Christian land—wine-bibbing men in high places, drunken Congressmen, and State law-makers so often under the influence of drink that they can neither walk straight nor talk with intelligence.

Strange indeed that railway officials will not allow a drunken man to put his hand on the throttle of an engine, even to carry dead-loads of freight, but the people, the sovereigns of the land, will elect a saloon supporter and a whisky drinker to make laws for the government of the nation. A drunken man unfit to manage a corporation or a limited supply store is trusted to look after the interests of the State or the General Government. When the people fully awake to their peril, they will not only close the doors of industrial and commercial institutions against the inebriate, but he will be banished from the field of politics, and be compelled to reform, or starve. The time is coming when there will be no place open to the man who drinks.

No man is by nature qualified for the Lord's service. He is a "vessel of wrath fitted for destruction." But by grace he may be transformed—made a new creature in Christ Jesus, and both enter into communion with God and become "meet for the Master's use." Nothing hinders the accomplishment of this cleansing and qualifying work in the soul of every enlightened man save the stubbornness of his own will. "Wilt thou be made whole?" is Christ's earnest question. It is direct and personal.

A GOOD GOVERNOR.

The religious press watches with interest every public man who, in any way, is charged with the execution of the law, and the maintenance of the peace and safety of society. It is a pleasure to name and commend such as truly have the good of the State at heart—not the material only, but the moral interests of the people as well. In this connection we might name several governors who are worthy of honor—among them Gov. Longino, of Mississippi. We have no personal acquaintance with him, but from private sources we learn that he is a gentleman of highest tone, a member of one of the leading Evangelical Churches, and a consistent Christian. From his public utterances we know how he stands on questions affecting the interests of the people.

In a recent address before the Southern Industrial Convention, in New Orleans, Gov. Longino took occasion to urge upon the people the development of the resources of the South, especially of Mississippi, and at the same time counseled the observance of "law and order," without which, he declared, "progress and prosperity do not exist." There is, perhaps, as little lawlessness in Mississippi as in any State of the Union, taking population into consideration, but, as in all sections, occasionally there is an outbreak, unforeseen, and absolutely impossible to stop when once the mob spirit is aroused. The direful effects of these outbreaks are not to be charged to the officers of the law, nor to the people at large, but to the participants in the crime. The people at large, however, feel the shame and bear the disgrace.

There is one form of lawlessness for which local officers of the law and the people are in part responsible. We allude to the illicit sale of liquor; in other words, the existence of "blind-tigers." As a rule, the location of these places is known. One can not exist long in any community without being detected. This illicit business is just now, or has been, one of the great evils afflicting the State, more than half the territory being under the operation of the local-option law. This form of lawlessness can be stopped only by local officers and law-abiding citizens. The local officers in many places must be prompted, otherwise the evil will continue.

Gov. Longino, we happen to know, properly appreciates and trusts the moral elements of the State. Upon these he calls, in the full assurance that, if they sustain the law and law executors, all forms of lawlessness will be reduced to the minimum, and Mississippi continue to hold her place as one of the best States in the Union. We hope the good people of the State will stand by the governor in his noble purpose to maintain law and order, and heed his exhortation to develop the material resources of the great Commonwealth.

A KNOTTY QUESTION.

The question whether the Constitution follows the flag in the acquisition of territory has been discussed for some months past in political circles. The Supreme Court of the United States has been called on to decide the question. The country is waiting with much interest for the decision. A question of similar import is now being considered in certain ecclesiastical circles. The case is this: The Hawaiian Islands recently came into the possession of the United States. While yet an independent kingdom, and later a republic, the Church of England, through the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, established a mission, which developed into a diocese. Immediately after the islands became United States territory the society withdrew all support from the mission, presumably on the ground that at the raising of the American flag on the islands the mission "fell under the jurisdiction of the presiding Bishop of the American Church." Now, the question is: Does one branch of the Anglican Church necessarily fall under the jurisdiction of another simply "by reason of the change of civil government"?

The question seems to be an open one, and in connection with it we read some surprising things. For example: Bishop Potter, of New York, is charged with using such language as implies the right and authority of the American Bishops to take charge of the work in Hawaii, and to "divest a brother Bishop of his share in this episcopate, and force him out." We are not at all surprised that the representative of a State Church should take such a position, and make haste both to surrender jurisdiction and withdraw support; but that any Bishop in America (there is no Bishop of America, nor any such institution as the American Church), where the Church is in nowise dependent on the State, should claim jurisdiction over territory only because the stars and stripes float over it, is a little more than surprising.

We are wholly unable to solve the knotty question. We are not at all concerned, and allude to it only to call attention to what the discussion suggests, viz.: the amazing assumption that is manifest in the title, the American Church. The American Church, indeed!

A SAD DEATH.

Rev. W. B. Roe, of the White River Conference, was wounded by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of a youth about the first of January. He suffered great pain for six days, and then quietly passed to his eternal rest. He recognized the seriousness of the wound, and felt that he could not recover, but was unterrified in the face of death; confident, through Christ, of a home in heaven. Bro. Roe was the husband of this editor's youngest sister. The blow falls with tremendous weight on her and her helpless children. May the good Lord sustain them under the trial. He was a good man, and had the reputation of being a faithful and efficient pastor.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

We call attention to the announcement of the time and place of meeting of the Louisiana Conference Home Mission Society, especially to the fact that the preachers are cordially invited to attend. The work of the society is vitally connected with the work of the preachers.

The Midland Methodist, organ of the Tennessee and Holston Conferences, an old and well-established paper, with near, or quite, six thousand subscribers, finds itself unable to live at the subscription price of one dollar a year, and the publisher has given notice that the price will soon be raised. Bro. Patton says he was obliged to do it for self-preservation.

The Fourteenth Year Book of the Memphis Conference Sunday-school Board, containing 112 pages, is packed full of information in regard to Sunday-school work. Bro. J. R. Pepper is an active Sunday-school worker, and presides over, perhaps, the best organized convention in our church. Persons interested will learn something by reading Bro. Pepper's booklet. We thank him for a copy.

PERSONAL.

The address of Rev. R. L. Phillips is changed from Peden to Moses, Miss. Correspondents will please take notice.

A note from Rev. R. H. Barr says: "Everything is moving along nicely on the Matherville charge," which, being interpreted, means that Bro. Barr and his people are mutually pleased.

Mr. J. S. Featherston, one of our active Methodists at Macon, Miss., gave us the honor of a call last week. He reports everything in fine shape at Macon. He speaks in the highest terms of his pastor, Dr. J. D. Cameron.

Rev. H. T. Cunningham, of the North Mississippi Conference, has been quite sick at his home in Vaiden, suffering from a severe attack of la grippe. He is recovering, and hopes soon to resume his studies in Millsaps College.

Bishop Key is at present in Mexico. A short time since he laid the corner-stone of a new church at El Paso, Texas, and next week will dedicate our new church in the City of Mexico, which Dr. Lambuth says is a magnificent building.

Rev. F. S. Parker, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge district, spent a few days in the city recently visiting relatives, and friends, and parishioners of former years. Bro. Parker is deservedly popular in New Orleans, the home of his youth.

Dr. H. M. DuBose, Epworth League Secretary, passed through the city on the twenty-ninth ultimo. He was on his way to Mexico to meet the Conference. It was a pleasant surprise to meet him. He has a warm and brotherly heart, and is doing a great work for the young people of our church.

Rev. H. B. Singleton is in great favor with his people at Ruston, La. The Leader, of that city, says he has "done a world of good" in that field, and that the people of Ruston "are to be congratulated upon his return for another year." We hope our brother may be abundantly blessed in his labors.

Rev. H. H. Ahrens, an estimable local preacher of our city, and some time connected with the Daily Picayune, is now staff correspondent of that paper, travels much in its interest, and is succeeding in enlarging its circulation. We are pleased to make the acquaintance of one so pleasant and brotherly.

Dr. W. B. Murrah, president of Millsaps College, spent last Saturday in the city. We thank him for remembering the ADVOCATE. He has promised to give us notes from the college. Our readers will be glad to have them. They will also relish notes from all the schools in the bounds of our territory.

The Conservative, of Carrollton, Miss., of recent date, says that Rev. Eugene Johnson, the newly appointed pastor, has made a favorable impression in the social circles of his charge, and also by his pulpit ministrations. His preaching pleased and edified the people. We are not at all surprised at the Conservative's statement.

Dr. W. R. Lambuth, on his return from Mexico, stopped a day or two in New Orleans in the interest of the coming Missionary Conference. He gave us several bits of information in regard to the mission work, but as he never withholds good news from the church, we will not anticipate him by giving it in advance. The signs are promising.

A postal from Rev. H. S. Johns, of Morgan City, La., says: "Rev. R. W. Tucker, of Lake Charles, preached ten able sermons for me, which stimulated my people very much. There was one accession. The battle will be pressed again later." He notes also the fact that the residence of Captain Pharr was burned last week. His loss was very heavy.

The Logansport (La.) Journal says that at the initial services of Rev. Wilson Moore, in Logansport, on Sunday, the twentieth of January, he preached two able discourses and pleased the people, notwithstanding he had not recovered from a severe attack of the "grip." The sermons were commended on account of the "absence of unnecessary words and a repetition of phrases." That is quite a compliment.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of Pickens, Miss., in a private note to the editor, says: "The work here surpasses anything I have ever seen in my ministry, but can be greatly strengthened if I put a church paper in every home. I would like to be the first of a long list of preachers to say that one of the Advocates is read by every family in the bounds of my work." We hope he will succeed, and that the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, the Conference organ, will find its way into many homes. Who will follow the example of Bro. Gladney?

THE PIANOS AND ORGANS Represented in our exclusive agencies embrace all the requirements of a perfect high-grade instrument. We make terms to suit, and guarantee our goods.

REV. M. H. HONNOLL.

Rev. Moses Hamilton Honnoll, son of Peter and Mary Honnoll, was born in Alcorn county, Miss., May 9, 1850. When he was nine years old he joined the Methodist Church on profession of faith, near the home of his parents. His consistent Christian life was so mature that at the age of twenty years he was licensed to exhort. On account of his changing place of residence, he united with the Congregational Methodists. His labors among them were so acceptable that they ordained him an elder. When he was twenty-one years old he was happily married to Miss Onada Hawkins. He was received into the North Mississippi Conference at Aberdeen, Miss., in 1884, and was appointed to Blackland circuit, which he served two years. His next charge was Austin—one year. From there he was sent to Richmond circuit—two years; thence to Olive Branch for one year. New Albany circuit was his next charge for four years. The next appointment was Buena Vista circuit—two years; thence he was sent to Kossuth two years. His last pastoral charge was Potts Camp, which he served for two years, where, on Dec. 24, 1900, surrounded by his wife and eight children and many friends, he went to his reward. His death was like his life—one of peace and joy. His health had been failing for some time, but as the "outward man perished, the inward man was renewed day by day." During his hardest suffering he would exclaim: "Happy! happy! O heaven, sweet heaven, when shall I see; oh, when shall I get there?" To the last he was perfectly conscious; gave godly advice to his family; told his wife that his "praying time was over." On Saturday before he died on Monday he selected the following hymns for his funeral: "How firm a foundation," "Amazing grace," "Oh, think of a home over there," and "I am going home, to die no more." He requested that the writer conduct the services. On Christmas Day, at 2 P. M., the Methodist Church at Potts Camp was crowded with people whom he had loved and served to hear tributes paid his precious memory by Revs. S. A. Ellis, G. W. Strickland, and the writer. His remains rest in the cemetery at Potts Camp. His bereaved family, who now reside in Verona, Miss., deserve the deepest sympathy of our preachers and people.

Bro. Honnoll enjoyed a deep and an abiding experience of grace. He understood, preached, and ably defended the doctrines of our Methodism. He was too good to seek prominence; he was too strong to ask or seek places. His whole life is an unanswerable argument for Christ and the Church. He has left his family and his Conference a legacy too rich to be purchased or sold. We must meet him in heaven.

JNO. D. ELLIS,
For the Executive Com.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONFERENCE.

To the Pastors and Sunday-school Superintendents within the Bounds of the Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: The Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Convention will meet at McComb City, March 28-31, inclusive.

All pastors and Sunday-school superintendents are members of the convention by virtue of their office, and, in addition, each Sunday-school is entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five pupils. Every Sunday-school, however, is entitled to one delegate.

Please see to it at once that each school over which you have jurisdiction elects a representative to the convention, and send the names of all who promise to attend to Rev. J. W. Chambers, McComb City, in order that homes may be provided.

You will greatly expedite matters and save Bro. Chambers much inconvenience by sending names of all who will attend several weeks before the convention meets. See to it that the delegates attend, and go yourself.

It is within our power and opportunity to go to McComb this year with the largest representative gathering ever seen within the bounds of the State. Why not go one thousand strong? How it would impress the people of McComb City with the strength of Methodism, and what an impetus it would give the Sunday-school movement for the beginning of the twentieth century!

The last Sunday-school Convention, which met at Madison Station, memorialized the Sunday-school Board to have printed blank forms for the use of Sunday-schools in making their reports to subsequent conventions. The Board, at its last sitting, did not concur with the resolution. We did not think the blanks necessary, in that the convention is a place for the comparison and discussion of methods of work, etc., rather than a place to receive detailed statistics. All statistics are reported to the Annual Conference. You can come to the convention, and report the condition of your Sunday-school and methods of work, but the reading of statistics from three or four hundred schools would consume valuable time that can be more profitably used in the discussion of live subjects. For reasons which space forbid mentioning, the Board also refused to concur in resolution marked "D" in "Year-Book" passed at the Annual Convention at Madison.

The programme of the next Sunday-school Convention is now ready, and has been sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and local press of McComb City for publication.

Rev. Jas. Atkins, D. D., our Sunday-school Editor, is expected to be with us. Those who do not attend the convention will miss the inspiration which his presence and counsel will lend. The presence of Rev. F. M. Keen, who will conduct the singing, assisted by the Methodist choir of McComb City, guarantees music worthy of the occasion. The rates over the different railroads will be published in due time.

Yours fraternally,

JNO. D ELLIS.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

REV. THOS. H. DORSEY, Arcola, Miss.
EDITOR.

CENTRAL CHURCH, MERIDIAN.

BROTHER DORSEY: Dr. Weems handed me your postal last evening, and I take pleasure in complying with your request, and hope the items I send will be what you desire.

We hold our League meeting just after the Wednesday evening prayer meetings. The first Wednesday evening of the month we hold our business meetings, and as our president never does things by halves, the business meetings are always a success.

All of the Departments are well organized and good work is being done. Our devotional services are conducted by leaders appointed by the first vice-president some time previous to the meeting. Each one present is brought in touch with these beautiful services by taking part in them, reading a favorite passage, uttering a sentence, prayer—in some way taking part in the service. These devotional services are so helpful and strengthening, one always feels better for having been under these influences. The missionary meetings are held the last Wednesday in the month, and are full of interest and information.

The Charity and Help Department has been unusually busy this Winter; the exigency of this department has been felt throughout this field of work. Many burdens have been lifted and despairing souls comforted. Dr. Reynolds, chairman of this committee, is one of our most active, silent forces, and, with his co-workers, has made this department a telling factor in our League.

The Literary Department is doing excellent work. The Reading Circle meets at the parsonage every Monday evening. This feature of the League is well organized, and so conducted as to be instructive and entertaining. The lesson is read, then discussed, or questions asked. We have a critic, too; that makes us more careful in our pronunciation.

The young folks are taking more interest in the circle than ever before. We have quite a nice membership. Ten sets of the "1901" course have been ordered.

We anticipate having a League social in the lecture-room in the near future, and hope by this means to bring the young people, Leaguers especially, in touch with their co-workers.

The council agrees upon nominations of officers, and submits the names at a business meeting to be voted upon by acclamation.

We have on our roll about one hundred and twelve names.

Sincerely,

MISS GIBBS WHITAKER,
Sec. Senior Epworth League, Central Church

TO PROVE WHAT THIS FAMOUS NEW DISCOVERY WILL DO FOR YOU, EVERY READER OF "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" MAY HAVE A SAMPLE BOTTLE SENT ABSOLUTELY FREE BY MAIL.

65TH POLICE PRECINCT, GREATER NEW YORK, October 11th, 1900.

Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.:

GENTLEMEN:—In justice to you, I feel it my duty to send you an acknowledgement of the receipt of the sample bottle of Swamp-Root remedy you so kindly sent me. I had been out of health for the past five years with kidney and Bladder trouble. Our best physicians prescribed for me. They would relieve me for the time being, but the old complaint would in a short time return again. I sent for a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, and I found it did me a world of good. Since then I have taken eight small bottles purchased of my druggist, and I consider myself perfectly cured. I do not have to get up during the night to urinate, as I formerly did, three or four times a night, but now sleep the sleep of peace. My back is all right again, and in every way I am a new man. Two of my brother officers are still using Swamp-Root. They, like myself, can not say too much in praise of it. It is a boon to mankind. We recommend it to all humanity who are suffering from kidney and bladder diseases.

My brother officers (whose signatures accompany this letter), as well as myself, thank you for the blessing you have brought to the human race in the compounding of Swamp-Root. We remain, yours very truly,

Officers of the 65th Police Precinct, Greater New York.

JAMES COOK,
HUGH E. BOYLE,
JOHN J. BODKIN.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root investigated by the "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," the one which we publish this week for the benefit of our readers speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

So when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince you—and you may have a sample bottle free for the asking.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, some of the symptoms which prove it to you are pain or dull ache in the back, excess of uric acid, gravel, rheumatic pains, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times during the night to empty the bladder; sleeplessness, nervous irritability, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallow, unhealthy complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes; sometimes the feet, limbs or body bloat, loss of ambition, general weakness and debility.

Swamp-Root is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

To prove its wonderful curative properties, send your name and address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., when you will receive free of all charge, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a valuable book by mail, prepaid. This book contains many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of this world famous kidney remedy. Swamp-Root is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle, and to be sure and mention reading this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE."

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

TOWN OF IMAGINATION.

There's a wonderful town in childhood's land,
Where fanciful people dwell;
And the sights seen there I do declare
No language can fitly tell.

'Tis a place set apart and dear to the heart
Of ev'ry little girl and boy.
No grown-ups ever come and o'er it roam,
For 'tis childhood's alone to enjoy.

There the fairies dream by a silvery stream,
Where the goldfish sport and play;
And beautiful flowers beguile the hours
With their perfume and petals gay.

Every kind of bird that was ever heard
Sings merrily in the trees
Which never grow bare, for Summer reigns there,
And there's always a cool, gentle breeze.

For the rosy-cheeked girls, with tossing curls,
There are dolls with dresses fine;
While the dear little boys with all sorts of toys,
Which make their bright eyes to shine.

In this wonderful town there's never a frown
To make the little ones sad;
But all is bright with laughter and light,
And everything to make one glad.

Now this queer little town of much renown
Is childhood's own creation,
And the name—I know you have already guessed—
Is the Town of Imagination.

THE ORIGIN OF WORDS AND PHRASES.

JACK ROBINSON.—Here is the story as found in an old paper: Once upon a time a farmer named Robinson was much troubled by a wolf which had fallen into the habit of eating his sheep. The farmer reasoned with him again and again, and even offered to send him to an asylum where he would be effectually cured. But the wolf preferred to eat the sheep. The farmer concluded that if he could not prevail upon him by fair means, he would try another plan; so he sat a trap for him, and was delighted one morning to find the wolf caught in the trap by his tail. He was just going to kill him when the wolf asked the privilege of making a few remarks. He assured the farmer that he could easily extricate himself, but in so doing he might lose his tail, and as he was devoted to his tail, he was not anxious to part with it. So he proposed that if the farmer would let him go with his tail, he would try to cultivate a different taste. The farmer said: "I will let you go on condition of whether you cultivate a different taste or not, that you eat no sheep of mine." "If I promised that, I should starve," replied the wolf. "Not at all," said the farmer; "you can eat my neighbors' sheep"—although he very well knew that his neighbors had no sheep. "How am I to tell your neighbors' sheep from yours?" inquired the wolf. "You can ask them to whom they belong, and if they say 'Jack Robinson,' let them go." To this the wolf agreed, and they both went their way rejoicing. To the farmer's surprise, his sheep disappeared faster than ever, and upon inquiry he found that when the wolf met a sheep and asked her to whom she belonged, he ate her up before she could say "Jack Robinson."

SUSQUEHANNA.—The river Susquehanna is said to have received its name in this way: An Indian standing on one side of the bank called to another whom he supposed was on the other side, "Susque," which means, "Are you there?" His friend replied, "Hanna," which being interpreted, means, "I am here." A white man who happened to be near heard it, and named the river accordingly.

CANADA.—The origin of the word "Canada" is quite amusing. When the Spaniards first visited the country they hoped to find gold, but as they found nothing they said, "A-can-nada"—"There is nothing here." The Indians learned the sentence and its meaning, and after the departure of the Spaniards, and the French came, as they did not want them to remain either, they kept repeating to them "A-can-nada;" and the French, not understanding Spanish, supposed that was the name of the country, and they too said, "Canada," and so it was named.

THE SAND MAN IS COMING.—This is a common nursery expression, and is applied to children. It refers to the kind of sensation as of dust or sand in the eyes when sleepiness comes on and the "sand man" has arrived.—Mrs. M. B. Chapman, in the Epworth Era.

MISSION MIRACLES.

Dr. Paton, speaking of the work in the New Hebrides, said not long since:

"We have about eighteen thousand converts, and three thousand church members. By a 'convert,' we mean those who have vowed to serve Christ, and have placed themselves under Christian instruction. The church members are those who have had considerable training. We do not baptize a convert until he has had some training and has shown himself true to his vow; for if a convert returns to his old life, the effect on the natives is much worse than such an event is in Christian lands.

"In the families of every one of the converts there are morning and evening prayers, and nothing prevents them from having it.

"In Christian lands many people have the impression that cannibals do not work, but live simply on supplies provided by nature without cultivation. This is not so. They are very industrious, and cultivate the ground. They have no stores nor currency, but depend entirely upon the natural products of the land.

"When I first went there they had a very complete system of irrigation, and were a most industrious people. I introduced Indian corn among them, and they have since widely cultivated it, so that it now proves a valuable addition to their food.

"Every convert becomes a missionary. They are eager to tell others of the Savior they have found. Hence we have no difficulty to keep three hundred teachers. They are sometimes murdered or stolen for the slave traffic, but others are ever ready to take their places.

"The more we study the Word of God to give the true translation to the natives in their own tongue, the more we ourselves become convinced that it is the inspired Word of God from the first verse of Genesis to the last of Revelation.

"We missionaries accept the Scriptures on their own divine authority, 'Thus saith the Lord.' Jesus Christ also witnessed to its inspiration, and that is quite enough for us.

"If you want a new evidence for the inspiration and power of the Holy Book, you have it in the mighty results of its teachings. Look at the heathen, they are tired of their idolatrous worship, superstitions and bloody rites. They desire something satisfactory and enduring which can only be secured by receiving the Word of God.

"That statement, 'And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me,' is being fulfilled more than ever to day. It has not become antiquated, but still is 'the power of God unto salvation unto everyone that believeth.'

"We have now twenty-three missionaries in these islands, but there still remain at least 40,000 cannibals whom we have never yet reached.

"If I had Scripture for it, to believe that without the gospel the heathen would be saved somehow, I would not face such difficulties. But the Word says distinctly, 'Where there is no vision, the people perish.'"—The Christian World.

STRONG DRINK GAINING IN NEW YORK STATE.

Albany, Jan. 13.—Drunkenness has increased to an alarming extent in New York State, according to the annual report of the State Commission of Prisons. There were 32,859 commitments to the penitentiaries, jails and work-houses of the State for intoxication during the year ended Oct. 1, last.

More than one-third of all the commitments to jails and workhouses, and nearly one-third of the commitments to the penitentiaries, were for this offense. This makes no account of many thousand other convictions for the same offense punished by a fine. Adding the probable number of these to the foregoing, it is likely that one-half of the convictions in this State during the year were for intoxication. And, of course, in addition, there were many thousand cases of drunkenness in which there were no arrests and of which there are no records.

Under the head of "Treatment of Drunkenness," the report says:

"Whether the punishment is by fine or imprisonment, it usually falls more heavily upon the family of the offender than upon the offender himself. The man of means suffers no inconvenience. In the case of the poor man, whether he pays his fine or goes to prison, his family is punished rather than himself. We recommend that in the case of first offenders the sentence should be suspended and the offender paroled.

"Habitual drunkenness is a disease quite as much as a crime, and should be treated by the State rather to be cured than be punished.

"The probation law in operation since 1891 in Massachusetts, which has proved advantageous in that State and a source of great economy (and is also now in operation both in Vermont and Minnesota), is commended. Under this law judges of criminal courts are authorized to appoint probation officers and allow them reasonable compensation. The judge has the discretion to suspend sentence for offenders of this class and put the offender in the care of the probationary officer, fixing a definite period of probation. At the end of this period the officer appears with his charge before the judge and presents a report. If favorable, the offender is discharged; if adverse, sentence is imposed."

In declaring the State's present parole law ineffective as to State prisons, and recommending the passage of a new one which shall be mandatory upon the courts and applicable to State prisons as well as reformatories, the Board says:

"Prisoners committed to indeterminate sentences would more strenuously strive by industry and good behavior to earn a parole while yet in prison. The greater benefit, however, would be after their release. The fact that they were on parole would operate as a restraint, keeping them from returning to evil associations and habits." Besides, the State would assist them in getting employment.

The total prison population of the State is 10,761. The report says it is essential to the success of the present industrial plan that there should be no industries exempted by the Legislature. No one industry shall be favored at the expense of other industries.

Among other recommendations the commission recommends the establishment of a State reformatory for male misdemeanants, the erection of a separate building for the confinement and electrocution of condemned men, and the employment of condemned men, and the employment of convicts in road-building in the new Palisades Park.—World.

Bro. JOHN S. YEATES died on the eighteenth of October, 1900, after a week of great suffering with that dreaded disease, hematuria.

Bro. Yeates joined the M. E. Church, South, when about sixteen years old, and lived a consistent life. July 16, 1895, he married Miss Elmonia Higgason, of Aberdeen, Miss., who helped him to follow the precepts of our Lord.

Bro. Yeates moved to Ruleville, Miss., four years ago, where he followed his chosen profession, book-keeping. He was secretary of our Sunday-school at Ruleville; never failed in his duty as such, and being gifted in song, he bravely led the children in the right path. It was the writer's privilege to be intimately associated with Bro. Yeates, and to administer unto him on his dying bed. All that skillful, loving hands could do was done for him, but still the reaper claimed him. When told by his physician that he could not live long, he calmly dictated to his loving wife and friends what he wanted done. He was ready and willing to go. Truly a good man, a tender, loving husband, a kind father, a true friend, a helpful Christian is gone.

Bro. Yeates' seat is vacant in our church on earth, and we sadly miss his presence, but we know there is "peace in his soul to-day," and that he will be there "when the roll is called up yonder." To the bereaved wife and fatherless little boys we extend our heartfelt sympathy, and bid them look to the Lamb of God, who says, "Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me."

May this dispensation of Providence be sanctified to their good, and make heaven more real to them since their loved one waits to greet them on "that happy, golden shore!"

W. F. WILSON.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Resolutions adopted by the Ruleville Sunday-school in memory of our beloved brother and secretary, J. S. Yeates, who died Oct. 18, 1900:

Resolved, That the death of our secretary has left an aching void—one that can never be filled. But our loss is his eternal gain; so let us strive to do the work of our Master as our brother did, that when we are called we can say as he said, "I am ready."

Resolved, That we, as a Sunday-school, try our utmost to imitate our brother in our works, for he could not have been more diligent, punctual, willing, ready and liberal to do our Master's work.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved wife and precious little boys, and point them to heaven, where their loved one is "waiting and watching" for them. May God's blessings ever rest on her and her children is the earnest prayers of our Sunday-school.

Committee: C. V. Cambell, J. E. Halstead, J. H. Rule, W. F. Wilson, Clarence Laughter.

Died at his residence of malarial fever, our dearly beloved brother, R. P. STEWART, aged about sixty-seven years.

Bro. Stewart professed religion and joined the church when comparatively young; was a very loyal Methodist, and the greater part of his life as a member of the M. E. Church, South, was a very zealous and consecrated worker in the vineyard of his Lord.

Bro. Stewart was a true, loving and devoted husband to the wife of his youth, with whom he had lived near half a century. He reared a large family of boys and girls. The dear deceased brother was richly rewarded by seeing the backslider reclaimed and the sinner happily converted, for whom he had so earnestly prayed during a revival season at Spring Hill just before his death. The blessing of a godly walk and conversation that inspires confidence in people of all ages and sex is something greatly to be desired by anyone. This was the happy lot of Bro. Stewart. Oh, how many sin-sick souls would go to him and say, "Pray for me." Hence now he has gone to his rich reward, and is there now watching and waiting for wife, children, relatives, friends, and his pastor.

W. B. PINSON, P. C.

Infant son of Rev. Meek L. Ward died Oct. 9, 1900, of "acute gastritis." This makes three children and a wife Bro. Ward has lost in three months. May Bro. Ward have the prayers, kind words and assistance of all God's people wherever he may go!

W. B. PINSON.

At eleven o'clock, on the morning of Sept. 11, we looked anxiously after our little WILLIE as he passed calmly out of physical life into the arms of Jesus, who has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Willie was the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Barron, of Pollock, Grant parish, La., and was born Dec. 21, 1891. How sad to give up such a means of pleasure and happiness as this baby son was to his parents. So oft their eyes will fall upon his vacant chair, his place at papa's side, his little bed, and a hundred things reclaimed for his. No less precious will be every word they can recall which Willie spoke, and especially will they dwell upon his last little speechee, and as the honey bee settles upon the flower and dwells to drink its sweetness, so Willie's family and all his friends will settle oft upon his sweet little life, and drink from memory's cup the stimulating counsels of his child-like innocence. About two months before the child was sick he sat one night on papa's knee, and told him amid tears and sobs that he was going to heaven, and earnestly entreated mama and papa to meet him there. He was so strongly earnest that from the time of that occurrence his parents have felt somewhat uneasy. In spite of medical skill he steadily sank, and nothing brought any relief. "We sorrow not as those who have no hope."

A FRIEND.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

When, in the course of the Divine Providence, a good and true man is taken from our church and community, it is but right that we pause and revere his memory, and by official action place on record our appreciation of his worth and an acknowledgment of our loss.

When our brother, W. D. PHILLIPS, fell asleep July 11, 1900, a good and true man went from his earthly to his heavenly home; therefore, be it Resolved, That in the death of W. D. Phillips the St. Helena circuit of the M. E. Church, South, has lost a faithful and efficient official member, he having been for a number of years steward and trustee, proving ever faithful to his trust.

Resolved, That we tender to his family our heartfelt sympathy, and pray for them and for the church of which he was so long a respected, trusted and loved member, the comfort wherewith God comforteth his people.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the Minutes of this Quarterly Conference, and published in the St. Helena Echo and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

By order of the third Quarterly Conference, St. Helena circuit, Louisiana Conference.

Mr. FRANK H. WOMACK was born in Smith county, Miss., Dec. 20, 1834, and after a long and painful illness passed from this life to his reward in heaven, Nov. 22, 1900. He married Miss Fannie C. Daniel in Smith county, Miss., Nov. 5 1867. Leaving the place of his birth, he moved to Sharkey county, Miss., on Deer Creek, about 1879, where he remained six years. He then came to Warren county, Miss., and two years after to Cayuga, in Hinds county, where he invested in property and remained till his death. On coming to Cayuga, Bro. Womack united with the Methodist Church, and became an active and useful member. Frequently was his voice heard in public prayer. For several years disease was preying upon his system, causing him much pain. The last days of his illness were days of intense suffering, but with strong confidence in God, and an abiding faith in Christ, he endured unto the end. Frequently he would ask us to sing and pray, and just a day or two before his death he exclaimed: "I do love Jesus! Praise the Lord!" The home is sad without him, but his bereaved wife and children know where he has gone, and it is their purpose to meet him. May the Lord comfort and sustain them!

W. H. LAWIS.

RALPH LINTON MARTIN was born June 9, 1898, and died Dec. 6, 1900, aged two years and a half. He was one of the twins, and said of himself, "I am mama's joy and papa's pet." Just a few days before he died he showed a fondness for music, and asked his mama repeatedly to sing, "Come to Jesus right now." This was his way of expressing it. The death angel called, and little Ralph went to Jesus "right now." For Christ said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." Hence, we know where he is; not on earth, but with Jesus in the home above, where all is peace and joy and love. Sorrow not, stricken parents, brothers and sisters, for little Ralph is at the beautiful gate, waiting and watching for your coming.

It is not good to speak evil of all whom we know bad, it is worse to judge evil of any who may prove good. To speak ill upon knowledge shows a want of charity; to speak ill upon suspicion shows a want of honesty. I will not speak so bad as I know of many; I will not speak worse than I know of any. To know evil by others, and not speak it, is sometimes discretion; to speak evil by others, and not know it, is always dishonesty.—Warwick.

Women Who Work

Nine out of ten women are afflicted with some of the common ailments known as female diseases. Among women whose employment requires them to stand on their feet or sit in the same position all day, not one in twenty-five escape these troubles. The average feminine constitution cannot, unaided, withstand the strain to which steady, trying work subjects them. The organs of womanhood are so delicate and finely adjusted that the inevitable result of constant standing, lifting, stooping or straining is displacement of vital parts. The disorder is usually slight at first, but soon develops into irregular or painful menstruation, leucorrhœa or falling of the womb. Wine of Cardui is the right remedy for female weakness. As such it is offered to you. Wine of Cardui will not perform miracles, but it will, if taken as directed, insure painless and regular operation of the menstrual function. It will drive out every trace of leucorrhœa, and will so strengthen the ligaments that falling of the womb will be an impossibility. Don't you think it would pay you to try a medicine with such a record as that? You can get a $1 bottle of Wine of Cardui at any drug store and use it in the privacy of your home.

WINE OF CARDUI

Townsend, Ga., May 18, 1899.
I have been in bad health with falling of the womb, weak back, nervousness and heart palpitation. At monthly periods I would be in bed suffering great pain. Lately I have been taking Wine of Carduf and Thedford's Black-Draught, and they have brought me wonderful relief. I have no pain, and do not stop work at the monthly period.

SELECTIONS.

It is easier to disturb that which is quiet than to quiet that which is disturbed.

There is a "too late" in life when the possibilities of the present are no longer possible.

Every Christian has a work of his own to do, and can not do that work through a preacher.

Bad men oppose the gospel because it interferes with their wicked schemes for making money.

The man who is not afraid of the displeasure of his fellow-creatures, but of God, is truly good and great.

Infinite toil would not enable you to sweep away a mist, but by ascending a little, you may often look over it altogether. So it is with our moral improvement—we wrestle fiercely with a vicious habit, which could have no hold upon us if we ascended into a higher moral atmosphere.

HONORABLE THOMAS B. REED

Has a most interesting article in this week's (Feb. 9) number of

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

The ninth Annual Meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society, Louisiana Conference, will convene in Ruston, La., March 14-17, inclusive. Each auxiliary is requested to elect delegates to same, and notify Mrs. W. K. Duncan, of Ruston.

Ministers cordially invited to attend.

PREACHERS' MEETING.

The regular weekly New Orleans Preachers' Meeting was called to order by Dr. W. H. LaPrade, the presiding elder, Rev. S. S. Keener, being absent. All of the city pastors were present except Rev. K. W. Dodson, Algiers, and gave reports of their charges.

Pastor Clifford, of Dryades Church, stated that his congregations were good, and he had received eleven persons into the church during January.

Rev. P. H. Fontaine reported best congregations since Conference, and one member received.

Pastor J. F. Foster has made a fine beginning in his new field at Burgundy. All lines of work are improving.

Rev. G. D. Parker, pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church, stated his congregations "never have been better." Had seven additions during January.

Pastor of Parker Memorial, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, reported the outlook in all departments of church interest good. Reported two additions.

Dr. LaPrade, of Rayne Memorial, gave a most interesting account of the rapid growth of his Sunday-school. Had two additions during January.

Rev. W. W. Drake, the pastor at Felicity Street Church, sounded the notes of progress in his charge.

The most interesting feature of the meeting was an address by Dr. Lambuth, Secretary of Board of Missions. The Doctor is just from our mission fields in Mexico. He gave a very hopeful account of the affairs in that hard field. The last year has been one of growth in membership. He reported three new churches built; the one in Mexico City would compare with best in the whole Republic.

NOTICE.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

The seventh Annual Conference, W. H. M. Society, Mississippi Conference, will be held in Natchez, March 28-31, 1901. The Conference has never had more than half representation, and in consequence delegates have been compelled to pay full fare. Will Auxiliary Societies elect delegates, provide expense fund for travel, and send names to Miss Florence Kern, Natchez? The trip need not be expensive if all the societies will send delegates. Miss Belle Bennett, president of the Home Mission Society, will be with us. Our treasurer requests that the amount specified in report of Finance Committee for publication of Minutes (5 cents a member) be sent by your delegate to Conference, or if delegate fails to come, forward by mail. When purchasing ticket, before leaving home, do not fail to secure certificate for return fare. Let each absent delegate remember she has made it harder for the delegate who goes.

ADDIE PURNELL,
Pres Home Mission Society, Miss. Conf.

A REMINDER.

The last annual Minutes of the Home Mission Society contains a request to every preacher in the Mississippi Conference to give one sermon during the year and a collection to the cause we represent. A marked copy of this resolution was ordered to be sent every preacher in the Conference. There have been less than a half dozen responses.

Brethren, we have aided eighteen of your number in making comfortable homes.

Our next Annual Conference will be held in Natchez, March 28 to 31. A number of applications for aid will be considered, and we must fail in some appropriations unless you give us one sermon on home missions, and one collection for the needy parsonages. Do not wait later than the third Sunday in February. Send collection to Mrs. T. B. Holloman, Jackson, and, if possible, come to Natchez, March 28 to 31.

ADDIE PURNELL,
President Home Mission Society, Miss. Conf.

THE GREAT NEED OF THE AGE.

BY REV. ELTON WILSON.

Pessimism is blind toward the best elements of the age. Enthusiastic optimism is blind in that it fails to discern the dangerous evils of contemporary time. Either extreme is unsafe. To destroy evil, it is first necessary to see it. He who shuts his eyes to all good goes out into the night, where all objects are wrapped in sombre blackness. The safe man is able to discern both the good and the evil in the movements of his age.

The new century is upon us, and her thinkers are making strenuous efforts to locate the determining tendencies of the age. It is of supreme importance to discover the bearings of the church in the conflicting movements of present-day thought. I am no pessimist, for I believe in the absolute triumph of the gospel. The discovery of a weakness is the silent expression of a need. I find one great need expressed in the life of the church of the coming century. It is the need of intellectual leadership of Christian men.

There were giants in Church and State in former ages; but this is the age of mediocrity. Popular thought has widened and deepened in all departments of knowledge. The spirit of an extreme individualism has increased, while the strength of safe and true leadership has been greatly weakened. Some may say that we have no need of leadership in this age of general intelligence. Such a position is false. It is contrary to all history. Every thoughtful man knows that the law of progress is the law of leadership. The practical life of the church in its forward and backward movements is determined by the strength of her leadership; and uplift in the thought-life of her leaders means a corresponding increase in the mastery of the church over the minds of men. If the thought-life of the masses should break away from the authoritative teachings of ministerial leadership, it would be a dark hour for the future. The careful student of present-day thought laments this tendency in all departments of life. The revolt of popular thought against lawful authority, in literature, social life, in the church, and in civil society, is a hazardous tendency of the times.

The hour has come, and now is, when the ministry must rise to the height of intellectual leadership. The leadership that is permanent in its results must go deeper than sociability and goodness; it must strike down until it takes hold of and masters the thought-life of the people. Never was there greater need of a doctrinal thought movement to settle the disturbed intellectual life of the people. Its center and circumference should be the Bible; a masterful movement of holy and invincible truth, devoid of superficial sensations and counting of hands.

The present generation lacks the deep, broad and solid grasp upon religious truth that characterized the builders of this Republic. The thought of the age is absorbed in the material facts of life. Salust, the Roman historian, two thousand years ago, in describing the evils of his nation, portrays the practical materialism of to-day. He says: "When the Romans had grown great by labor and righteousness, at length saw all nations subdued, and the world, both sea and land, at their feet, then fortune began to rage and to confound all things. First, greed of money, and then lust of power, grew rampant. Here was fuel which fed the flame of all evils, for the greed of money and the haste to be rich sapped the foundations of all faith, probity, and good morals, instead of the old virtues. The desire of wealth taught men insolence, harshness, the neglect of the gods, and general venality." Though this was written two thousand years ago, yet it seems like a magazine article of yesterday, describing the dangerous tendencies of our American life. Listen to the words of Bishop Candler: "All the nations which have risen and perished have died as suicides. And we do well to take warning. The disaster which threatens us is wrapped up in this very wealth which we vainly imagine is our invincible defense." Shall the tragedy of Roman history overtake us? Shall a wave of practical materialism destroy the national conscience and intellect?

The Twentieth Century Movement in behalf of our educational institutions is the groundwork of a grand achievement in uplifting the intellectual life of the leadership of the church of this new century. We can not build the religious life on any other foundation than intelligence. The Christian school is the nucleus of the staying power of the church; a sure bulwark against the irrational tide of materialism that threatens the intellectual and the spiritual life of to-day.

FREEDOM OR LICENSE—WHICH?

BY REV. J. A. MOORE.

Time was when censorship, and that in the name of the church, was exercised over the press. Tyndale's printing establishment must needs take an extensive itinerary to keep its whereabouts concealed long enough to get out an English version of the Sacred Scriptures.

But to-day, and notably so in America, we boast of the freedom of the press, and dwell with enthusiasm upon its power as a civic, economic, educational, social, and moral reformer. And no one denies that the press is an essential factor in securing every needed reform. The results already wrought out by this agency in the brief period of a few centuries appear largely in the marks that differentiate our civilization from that of the Dark Ages and of prior ages in the world's history. And, doubtless, the most prophetic dreamer has not yet divined what reaches of usefulness, what spheres of transformation, are yet to be entered and attained through the printed page.

But is it not true in this case, as in many others, that the one extreme follows hard upon the other? We resent the suggestion of restraint upon the free expression of any man who has aught to say and would be heard through the press. But do we not lose sight of the fact that freedom to be desired and to be a blessing among social beings is not absolutely without limitation? Rights, when exercised beyond the proper bound, become aggressions against the rights of others, and are, therefore, no longer rights, but offensive and hurtful liberties. Likewise, may not the freedom of the press be abused, and instead of yielding the good of which it is capable, become the instrument of untold evil?

It is undeniably true that some of the so-called family papers, both weeklies and monthlies, to say nothing of dailies, that are freely circulated among our homes, contain more than enough moral poison to outweigh every useful feature they may possess. The class of periodicals referred to contain current news items and standing advertisements that are wholly unfit for the home circle. Added to these periodicals, a flood of unsolicited papers and advertising circulars are poured into our homes through the mail service. Many of these are indecent to an alarming degree, and morally damaging in their tendency.

To say that these objectionable features of the press need not be read if not desired, is to offer no relief from the trouble. The impetuous minds of the young incline to inquiry and investigation. They find in popular print many things that are actually suggestive of vice, which things become to them a temptation and a snare. The fact that there is a popular demand for the sensational and the vile, while it may act as an opiate to the consciences of the venders of such articles as those described above, only adds to the seriousness of the situation. Shall a stone for bread be given the hungry, or gall for water to the thirsty, because he knows not the difference?

In the foregoing we have merely hinted at a few of the aggressions of the press against the rights of the reading public. Are these not real evils? Are they not, in fact, great evils? What can be done to secure a high-toned literature, a literature that avoids the very appearance of evil, for those who read? What can be done to secure our homes against indecency and moral poison in the form of reading matter?

Whether or not restriction can be placed upon a vicious press, and the abuse of its freedom be corrected, one thing is morally imperative: strict censorship must be exercised in regard to the reading matter that comes into our homes.

If this article succeeds in provoking thought, discussion, and appropriate action, its end will have been met.

LET US HELP THE ADVOCATE.

BY REV. W. W. WILLIAMS.

That so few of the Methodist people of the patronizing Conferences take the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is cause for much regret. All are agreed that the list of subscribers should not be allowed to remain at the present low figures any longer; but how to remedy the matter is a question that has given us much concern. What shall we do, and how shall we do it? is the question at every Annual Conference. We have "resolved" and "whereased" year after year, the District Conferences have talked much on the subject, and the presiding elders have exhorted in Quarterly Conferences, and pastors have taken the paper, and gone into the homes of the people, and begged them to subscribe for it—all of which has proven so near a failure that we have become almost discouraged. When we do get a new subscriber, at the close of one year the most of them ask that the paper be discontinued.

All this fruitless effort suggests to my mind that something is wrong, and I believe that if we could discover the wrong and right it, we could do better in the matter. Our people are a reading people, and must be reached in an intelligent way. I do not believe that the blame rests entirely on the pastors, for they love the cause, and know that a good church paper would help them to succeed better.

Now, brethren, has it ever suggested itself to you that some of the trouble might be found in the ADVOCATE itself. Now, don't let's jump on the editor first of all, but proceed to investigate more closely. Let us see what we preachers are doing to help.

First, much of the matter furnished by the preachers reads like cold criticism, and that in a sarcastic manner, which is not pleasant reading for the common public. Still others write as the most convenient way of exposing the imperfections of others. And others still use the columns of the ADVOCATE as a means to throw out a bait to tempt a discussion. The people who ought to be the constant readers of the paper have no taste whatever for such reading. I know of one good lady who has quit wielding the rod as a corrective for her children, but makes them read the ADVOCATE in lieu thereof. I myself visited a Methodist family a few days ago, and found lying on the center table three copies of the ADVOCATE untouched, with not even the wrappers torn off. The lady told me that none of her family would read the paper, and as she wanted something for them to read, she was taking the Youth's Companion and the Sunday-school Visitor. This put me to thinking.

Now, I want to make the following suggestions: Let the news column of the paper be increased to at least one page, so as to give the current news in a more satisfactory manner. The items are too short. Then fill at least one page with literary matter, always fresh and easy. A good bear story now and then would not come in amiss. I should think this department might be supplied by the young people now in our colleges. Why not let the young men in Millsaps and Centenary have a chance to cultivate their talents along these lines? I asked a young man from Millsaps something about the ADVOCATE, and he said that he seldom saw it.

Now, it seems to me that if the boys wrote for the paper, it would become very popular among them. Let us have a letter from Jackson, Miss., and Baton Rouge, La., containing news of interest to the people at large. They would afford pleasant reading matter for all. Then let the preachers have the rest of the paper to air their theology and sharpen their wits. Why not try this plan awhile; it will be a change, at least.

TEMPERANCE IN TENNESSEE.

BY REV. G. W. HANKS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We have great reason to congratulate ourselves on the work already done by the two Houses of the Tennessee Legislature. Mr. Peeler, a West Tennessean, introduced a bill which would have given local option to all the towns in the State not having 5,000 inhabitants. This bill failed in the Senate only for lack of three votes. This was a great victory, and probably may make local option the issue in the next election. Besides this, a large number of towns in different parts of the State have surrendered their corporation charters, and have been incorporated under the new law putting the saloon out of town. Among these that have gone dry are some of our school towns, notably McKenzie, the first one to go dry during the sitting of the last Legislature, and Martin a few days ago. Others, as Selmer, McNairy county, Hollis, Gates, and Sharon. Strong petitions are before the Legislature from Milan, Huntingdon, Lexington, Bolivar, and others. More than a dozen towns have already been cleaned out in Tennessee, and so far as we have seen, none that have had a strong petition has failed. With the United States Senate opposed to the "canteen," and our own State legislating as it has, we feel like taking courage and renewing the fight in Tennessee. We have met every argument that would seem to favor the saloon, such as "the loss of trade," "the increase of tax rate," "the increase of drink by means of jog lines," "the repudiation of bonded indebtedness in charge of corporation," etc. In the small town of Lexington, with a population of not more than 1,500 or 1,800, it is said that $25,000 per annum is spent for strong drink. This great sum is worse than lost to business. There is absolutely no benefit coming from the saloon, and men are now looking as never before to see what will pay. The saloon men are a kind of cast-off, dejected and brow-beaten crowd, largely without self-respect or any other sort of respect, so much so that it would be a great blessing to the men themselves, as well as to their families, to get them out of such disreputable business. Probably the saloon men would be the greatest gainers from a great temperance crusade, such as will come in Tennessee within the next two years. As it now is, they and their families are ostracised from society. Their children are discriminated against in their classes in school, and no teacher can have it otherwise. They and their families often stay away from church from this very reason. What shall we do but help them to throw off this incubus?

Lexington, Tenn.

A WORTHY CALL FOR HELP.

Bro. M. H. Honnoll was reported sick and permanently disabled, and was placed in the superannuated relation at the last session of the North Mississippi Conference. He died and was buried at Potts Camp, his last charge, a few days after Conference closed.

Bro. Honnoll, under premonitions that his disease was incurable, and that his family would be in need of a home, purchased and partly paid for one in this place last Summer. Immediately after his death Sister Honnoll came here with her family to occupy the home.

Bro. Honnoll had been for many months a great sufferer and helpless, taxing all the time and energies of the family to care for him, and causing them great financial burdens. Sister Honnoll had all her furniture to buy for her new home, and the expenses of the moving a family of eight. The children are all girls but one grown son and a small boy, and all the girls but two under thirteen years old.

Bro. Honnoll, like the majority of itinerant preachers, served faithfully hard charges, with meager financial support, and, with his large family, could not lay anything by for a crisis like this. Several of the children are yet to be reared and educated.

To meet all the necessary obligations, Sister Honnoll can not be prepared. Knowing the situation, I feel that there is no indelicacy in stating the facts, and asking the preachers and others to contribute something to help this needy and worthy family. I make these statements and this call without the knowledge of Sister Honnoll and family. Feeling fully satisfied the brethren would gladly have contributed to aid this family at Conference had the case been presented as others were, I feel confident they will do so now in answer to this appeal. I know the needs of this family to be all that is necessary to appeal to your sense of obligation and generosity, and the family is worthy from every consideration. I will receive and turn over to Sister Honnoll anything that may be sent to my care. Small sums will help, and will be thankfully received as well as larger ones, and will acknowledge the same in the ADVOCATE or otherwise.

For the information of those who may not already know, the family will not be recognized as claimants on the Joint Board of Finance till next Conference, and can get no help from it this year. This is a case appealing to every member of the church and its friends, as well as to preachers. Will not the preachers present this needy case to such of their people as may be disposed to contribute, and thus make up larger sums by a number of smaller contributions?

Q. A. OATS.

[In addition to the above, we have also received an earnest call from Rev. W. R. Williams, who is acquainted with the circumstances. We hope the call may be heeded, and that generous responses will be made.—ED.]

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, pastor, says, "Cold Water is at the front." That is a good report. Bro. Lipscomb will keep it there.

We find the following item in one of our distant exchanges: "Dr. Goucher, president of the Woman's College at Baltimore, recently delivered a very interesting address to the student body of Millsaps College on 'The Importance of Thorough Training.'"

The St. John's congregation, St. Louis, it is said, will build in the west part of the city the finest house of worship in the Southern Methodist Connection.

Rev. W. Q. Vreeland is building a church at Pensacola, Fla., which, when completed, will be creditable to him and those engaged in the work with him.

Mr. W. C. Everett, manager of the Branch Publishing House at Dallas, Texas, visited the Conferences in Mexico in the interest of the House. He is a busy man.

Winfield Memorial Church, Little Rock, has purchased a parsonage at a cost of $4,500. The congregation will also rebuild the chapel in view of a new auditorium at a future day.

Bishop Duncan is expected soon to visit the work in Arizona. We have nearly six hundred members in that territory, 247 of them being in Phœnix, which is prospering under the pastorate of Rev. R. A. Rowland.

The Barnes Hospital, St. Louis, so long contemplated, and for which nearly one million of dollars were bequeathed several years since, will soon be in process of erection. It will be under the direction of our church.

The postoffice address of Rev. W. G. Roberts is Bayou Chicot, instead of Washington. Bro. Roberts says: "I have been around my work except to one appointment. I think I will like the work well, as the people are so kind where I go."

Trinity Church, Toronto, Canada, has a Sunday-school of about seven hundred scholars, drawn from, perhaps, the poorest classes in Ontario, and yet the school gives more to home and foreign missions than any other in the country.

Rev. W. D. Matthews, of the Indian Mission Conference, says: "It is a mistake to keep a man in the presiding eldership until he is unfit for any other appointment, and the truth is, they can be kept there until they are unfit even for that."

The State Sunday-school Convention will be held in New Orleans, March 12-14. The International Sunday-school Executive Committee will be present and take part in the exercises. Programmes may be had by addressing Mr. R. H. Browne, 531 Natchez street, New Orleans.

"Charleston (S. C.) Protestants are opposing an appropriation to a Roman Catholic orphanage. The appropriation is unconstitutional and a plain misuse of funds. We wish success to the opposers—and this from no bigoted reasons." So says the Southern Christian Advocate.

Our pen slipped last week when we located Rev. J. A. Bowen at Verona. He would have gone there as readily as anywhere had he been sent, but his appointment was to Tupelo, where he is doing good. He has already received twenty-two persons into the church. May he continue to have success.

At the Missionary Conference, to be held in New Orleans in April, there will be a fine exhibit consisting of missionary literature, charts, curios, etc. The exhibit will be under the supervision of Rev. P. L. Cobb. The exhibit will illustrate the customs of pagan nations, their objects of worship, and their social and secular life.

"Dr. J. J. Lafferty, after years of editorial control of the old Richmond, has turned over its management to a committee representing the Virginia Conference, and henceforth it is to be the organ of that great body of Methodist ministers and laymen." According to the best of our knowledge and belief, "the old Richmond" has not been anything else than the organ of the Virginia Conference for more than a generation.

Glances at the World.

SUPREME COURT DECISION.

The Chicago Drainage Canal which was completed more than a year ago at the cost of millions of dollars, turns the whole of the sewerage of Chicago into the Mississippi river instead of the Lake, which has heretofore received it. This was an offense to St. Louis, which derives its main water supply from the great river. Supposing the citizens were in danger of having their water contaminated, the State of Missouri brought suit against Illinois and the Drainage Board. The case has just been disposed of by the Supreme Court of the United States, and sustains the contention of Missouri. The Mobile Register says: "If, as laid down in that decision, Chicago has no right to drain into the Illinois river because of the danger of affecting the health of the people who drink Mississippi water at St. Louis, every town on every river in the country can be enjoined from disposing of its sewage into the waterway. Clarksville can enjoin Nashville. Louisville can enjoin Cincinnati. Memphis can enjoin St. Louis. Selma can put an embargo upon Montgomery sewage. Moreover, the decision sets afloat the suspicion that waterways are all polluted, and we may not drink from any stream that has human settlement upon its banks; whereas, scientific opinion is that the water of these streams is perfectly healthy. The water of the Illinois has been analyzed and found to be free from noxious matter. A scientific commission of Bavaria long ago reported that the theory of disinfection of running streams by the water plants in the streams is well founded. Besides, there is dilution of the noxious material, settlement of it in progress down stream, and, in short, the water purifies itself so that a few miles below the point of discharge of a sewer the water is entirely free from any properties injurious to health. One thing is worth noting in connection with the Supreme Court decision. Doubt is expressed by the Chief Justice of there being any decree writable that will enable Missouri to restrain the Illinois corporation. If this is so, the only harm done by the decision will be in the inculcation of false ideas as to sanitation."

MRS. NATION'S VICTORY.

Contrary to expectation, Mrs. Nation, of Kansas, who has been leading a crusade against the open saloons, has gained a great victory. She had no authority in law for her course, nor was there any law against it. She faced a business that has no standing in court, because the saloon business in Kansas is not only illegal, but actually outlawed. This Mrs. Nation knew, and hence the boldness and openhandedness of her work. Her measures were extreme. They included not only the destruction of liquor, but everything in sight that could be destroyed by hatchets and hammers. Her work has been far-reaching in its effect. A few persons have assisted her in the work, and many who took no active part looked on and sympathized. Indeed, sympathy was very general throughout the State. Thus encouraged, Mrs. Nation became more determined, and this in turn caused the liquor sellers and officers of the law to foresee what was coming, and in towns and cities as yet unvisited by Mrs. Nation, saloons are closing. This is true of Topeka, the State capital, where, on the sixth, every joint closed, and the keepers promised the city and county officials to keep closed permanently. Perhaps what the Times-Democrat, of New Orleans, says explains the cause of action on the part of saloonists: "Mrs. Nation's methods called attention in the most striking manner possible to the violation of the law, and it shamed the officials into doing their duty. The very publicity given the crusade, the riots and disturbances caused by them, the wit of the crusader, and the applauding shouts of the mob, persuaded the officials and the saloon keepers that they must face the inevitable and obey the law." Thus the lawlessness of one righteous woman works a reformation among the lawless. Her methods may not be the best, but they have up to date proved the only effectual ones. May the good results abide!

THE ELECTION OF SENATORS.

The election of United States Senators by the various Legislatures becomes more and more difficult from year to year, even in those Legislatures which have a decided partisan majority. The party breaks into factions and deadlocks are the result. For two years past several States have been without full representation in the Upper House because of inability on the part of Legislatures to settle on a representative, and the Senate, following precedent, declined to recognize the Governor's appointees, holding that an appointment by a Governor after the Legislature fails to elect, is not filling a vacancy within the meaning of the law. At least one State has been deprived of representation, because of the use of improper methods in securing the election. Several States are now trying to elect Senators, but are unable. Delaware is in a deadlock, and so is Nebraska. Two are due from each State. As the difficulties increase, aggravated in some instances by the corrupt use of money, the idea of referring such elections to the people becomes more general. This might largely stop the corrupt use of money, but would not lessen the amount necessary to carry an election. Besides, it would bring about one more exciting contest, and add nothing to the honor and dignity of a seat in the Senate. This is a question of general policy, not a question of partisan politics. Let every man think for himself. Something should be done to put an end to the scandal and the wrangling in connection with such elections.

EXPENSE OF PENSIONS.

It is evident that the generosity of the Government in pensioning its soldiers is abused. Men are on the roll who have no business on it. Fraud, as the Commission has shown, is often practiced. Many cases "turned down" by the office are pushed through Congress as private pension bills. No reasonable objection can be urged against the pensioning of a veteran who is an invalid, or for any reason stands in need of help, but there can be no reason at all for pensioning thousands, many of them, doubtless, never having participated in any way in the war. The following extract from a leading paper of the North appears to be conclusive: "Twenty years ago the number of pensioners on the rolls was 250,802. The present number is 993,529. Thirteen years after the Civil War ended (that is, in 1878) we were paying for pensions less than thirty million dollars; the annual pension appropriation bill now before Congress calls for an expenditure of $145,245,230. Should that amount be appropriated, it would exceed the aggregate payments for pensions during the five years from 1879 to 1883, inclusive. Last year (thirty-five years after the end of the Civil War) 10,615 new claims were allowed. Were this money equitably distributed among those who fought for the preservation of the Union, there is no manner of doubt that it would amply provide for all the wants of those in need."

THE PEACE CONFERENCE.

The Peace Conference, a year or two since, at the call of the Czar of Russia, was not destitute of good results. The Christian Intelligencer says: "Its court of arbitration is fast taking shape, it has already a fixed and furnished place of meeting, the assent of enough nations has been received to give it authority to act, and when once it has begun the exercise of its judicial functions, war will be made next to impossible among the nations agreeing to accept its decisions." Emperor William of Germany, it has been thought, is possessed of a war-like spirit. No doubt he would quickly resent any insult to his flag, but that he is disposed to be aggressive, and to disturb the peace of nations, is not manifest. England and Germany are the controlling powers of Europe. The maintenance of their power and status largely depends on maintaining peace, and it is believed that Emperor William and the new King of England will follow the advice of good Queen Victoria, and try to preserve the peace of nations. For this let all good people devoutly pray.

What Our Editors Say.

WHAT WE NEED.

What we need at this time in the church throughout our patronizing Conferences is internal peace, and an aggressive and united warfare on the powers of darkness. The doctrinal differences that have divided brethren are likely to remain. Good men and true are found on each side of the dividing question. That mistakes have been made by both wings is freely admitted on all hands. A growing willingness is seen to agree on essentials, each side to credit the other with sincere motives, and to cease discussing these questions in the public prints—especially the Conference organ. The Central Methodist, as a Conference organ, can not afford to take sides, or to be divided against itself, on an issue of this character. It stands for the whole Conference, for all the brethren, and for everything that pertains to the work of our church in the Conference. Hence, it is for peace and love and righteousness and holy living, without censure or fault-finding or acrimony or bitterness. Christ and his church shall be its constant aim. In the prosecution of this purpose we have had to strike out some things that were offered us, and it would be well for our contributors to bear in mind that articles on certain well-worn controverted subjects will never see the light. Let us have peace.—Central Methodist.

THE FAULT-FINDING SPIRIT.

Criticism is a good thing in its place, but it may grow into a disagreeable habit. It then becomes known as fault-finding, a habit which worries your friends and makes you unhappy. There are some persons who can not enjoy a sermon for picking out the preacher's errors of pronunciation or grammar. Others are miserable during an outing because every person does not conduct himself precisely after their standard, while yet others destroy the peace which should prevail in the home by querulous complaints about almost everything. Such people are, of course, unhappy, and all because of themselves. It is best to be patient with the little shortcomings of your companions, when they are harmless. Then you will have more leisure to take the beam out of your own eye, and maybe get a foretaste of the happiness of true contentment.—Children's Visitor.

SHOULD KNOW HIS PEOPLE.

There is a sense in which a pastor should be familiar with his people, but it is in the high and sacred sense of pastor. In fact, his ministry depends to a great degree upon his success at this point. This means to know his people sympathetically, to love them, and help them at every point where help and sympathy are needed. His going into the homes of his people should be regarded as the "coming of a messenger," more than the visits of a mere friend or teacher. He is God's messenger, if he is anything to the people; and if he magnifies his office as a pastor, he will be loved and honored as God's messenger. In view of his commission and the message he bears, how dare he trifle with his Lord. He must be about his "Father's business" if he would command the attention of "the wise men." Let every pastor look to himself that he be not blamed; let him meet the requirements of the law, in both letter and in spirit, and study to show himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Not simply a student of books, but a student of all things pertaining to his work. The whole thing in a nutshell is, "As wise as a serpent, and as harmless as a dove."—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

A PREACHING LANGUAGE IN THE AGE OF PREACHING.

Ritualism is perishing from the earth with the dead and dying languages. As men grow in intelligence as well as in grace, they perceive the force of the statement that "God is a Spirit, and they who worship him must worship him in spirit and truth."

The English language is a preaching language, and this is the age for preaching. It is no time for genuflecting and pompous parade. That sort of pious palavering is medievalism. Such a puerility has had its day. The times of that ignorance, it is possible, God winked at; but he now commands all full-grown men to quit foolishness and get to work in downright, manful earnestness. Nobody but a puny parsonette who can not preach, and who must do something to pass away the time, is excusable for using the childish performances of ritualism now. But men who can understand the Bible and use robust English are expected to preach.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

NO TRUE LIGHT WITHOUT THE BIBLE.

In Bible lands some have broken away from Bible truth, and gone out in search for spiritual knowledge, but their minds have found only natural truth, and become entangled in the wilderness outside of religious certitude. It is pitiable to find how little they know of God and eternity and the soul of man. The natural tendency away from the light of Scripture truth is downward in national character, in society, in homes and hearts. The history of nations proves it, and the condition of the non-worshiping masses in our own country shows it. The most degraded people in all the world are tribes without the Bible and with almost no trace of religious ideas, and the lowest social classes in Christian countries are those who have no churches, no Sunday-schools, no worship.—Florida Christian Advocate.

MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.

Mr. Editor: The Missionary Institute of the Forest district closed here, Jan. 31, with a veritable Pentecost to preachers and people. It proved to be a very interesting session, and a blessing to all who attended. Rev. T. L. Mellen, our faithful presiding elder, after holding our first Quarterly Conference here Saturday and Sunday, opened the Missionary Institute at 2:30, Tuesday evening. Those present, who were on the programme, were Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, who read a most excellent paper on "Home Missions," and also preached at night a very edifying sermon; Rev. B. F. Lewis, who preached at 4 o'clock Tuesday evening on the great necessity of the "Endnement of Power from on High." After the sermon an altar service was held, and we all rejoiced because God was with us. Rev. J. S. Sanders read a paper on our mission work in China, and about the late troubles in that land. Rev. C. N. Guice read a paper on Cuba and the work there. Rev. T. L. Mellen (taking the place of Rev. P. D. Hardin, not present) gave us a strong sermon on the expansion of missions. Miss Sallie Smylie read a paper on the work of our Foreign Missionary Society, afterwards organizing a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Rev. J. W. Crisler (our pastor) preached on missions as related to social progress. Rev. W. M. Sullivan gave us a sermon on missions and commercial progress. The presiding elder closed with a rousing exhortation to preachers and laymen, which was full of good advice, and to which the Lord set his seal by the presence of the Holy Spirit.

I forgot to mention Bro. W. D. Dominick, who read an excellent paper, and Simpson Tubby (our Choctaw preacher), who gave us an interesting talk about his work among his people.

Everybody is very much pleased with our new pastor (Rev. J. W. Crisler), and we look forward at the beginning of this new year and century with brighter prospects for the future, expecting that the Lord will build up his church and prosper his kingdom in our midst, and in foreign fields where our missionaries are laboring.

May the earnest words of our presiding elder, spoken in his closing address, "All the collections in full, and a thousand souls for Christ," be realized and verified!

The names of other preachers who attended the Institute are as follows: Revs. J. H. Foreman, W. J. Dawson, J. E. Williams, T. H. Harrod, and E. B. Partin. E. B. Partin, M. D.

Hickory, Miss.

THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

There is much said in these days of the study of the Bible, and various rules are given for the best methods of study. This is as it should be, and almost any earnest method is to be commended. But is it not possible to read and even to study God's Word with no effect upon one's spiritual life? A man may devote a certain portion of time every day to reading the Bible, and wish to read to his soul's health. He endeavors to keep his thoughts upon and to understand the words he reads; and yet it is possible he may derive no benefit from the exercise. What is our object in reading the Bible? Jesus commands, "Search the Scriptures." For what purpose? "For they are they which testify of me." If we find not Jesus in our reading, it is in vain that we read.

A Sunday-school or Bible class teacher may write questions for his class, and they may be good of their kind, and yet he may impart nothing of Jesus' spirit to the class. The young people may learn to know the distance from Jerusalem to Jericho; the name and character of the Roman Emperor ruling at the time; the sects, the superstitions, the customs of the Jews, and yet leave the soul empty. They imbibe no practical knowledge of Jesus' usefulness, his courage, his compassion, his love for and sympathy with humanity. They do not learn how to live, how to be saved, or how to become fit for heaven.

We need to come to this great study in humility and looking to God for light. St. Paul's definition of light is the briefest, clearest, and the truest, "Whatsoever doth make manifest is light." In this way is Christ the light of the world. As light let into a room shows its condition, so the light of his spirit shows the condition of the soul, and, shining on his own written words, "makes manifest" their full meaning, and the soul is refreshed by bread from heaven.

Our greatest need is light whereby we may see ourselves. If we see not our ignorance, we can not improve; if we see not our sins, we shall not be able to see the condemnation that lies in God's Word for us; we can not understand the need of repentance. Such light shines from the sacred pages of God's Book.

Let us not hurry through any chapter, but meditate on each verse. Read it slowly again and again, dwell on each word, and take it in, and it is wonderful how the meaning and force will develop. Take St. John vii, 17. It may be read or studied somewhat thus: If any man is willing to do His whole will—is resolved to do it—seeks and discovers His will, and sincerely tries to do it—God will make plain to him what he can not know alone. Not only will he know "the doctrine," but he shall be taught what God's will is, what is contrary to his will; his conscience, made callous by sin induiged, shall be made sensitive, and he shall understand his sins, his temptations, and their antidote. He shall walk in the light.—Southern Churchman.

It is mockery to pray that your children may be gathered home in eternity while you do nothing to keep them at home in time.—Selected.

SPIRITUAL REST.

I went to an oculist the other day to beg for glasses that would keep my eyes from getting tired.

"My dear madam," the doctor said, earnestly, "the prescription for tired eyes is not a new pair of glasses, but rest."

"Of course," I answered impatiently, "but in my case that is impossible. I am obliged to use my eyes steady twelve hours out of twenty-four. Now, please don't say 'rest' to me again, but do the best you can to help me work."

The good man sighed. No doubt he was often persecuted with unreasonableness like myself, but I waited in silence while he considered my case.

"You live in the country, I believe?" he said, presently.

"Yes, in a small village; it is the same thing."

"Have you a distant view from your window?"

"Oh, doctor!" I cried, "if I could only show it to you!" And forgetting my business and his, I began to expatiate with an enthusiasm known only to the mountain-bred upon the glories of the Alleghany foothills from my back window and the noble Blue Ridge peaks facing my front door.

"That will do," the busy man interrupted me, smiling: "that will be better than glasses. When your eyes are tired following your pen or the lines of a book, go and stand at your back window or front door, and gaze steadily at your mountains for five minutes; ten will be better. You see what I mean? This will serve to change the focus and so rest your eyes, as walking up hill rests a man who has been footing it all day on a level."

I have profited daily by this simple prescription. Do not think, however, that I am giving you this as medical advice. How do I know what your eyes need? But to me has been given a daily parable. "Soul of mine," I say to myself as I stand gazing at old Jump Mountain, "are you tired of the little tread-mill of care and worry, tired of the smallness of self, tired of the conflict with evil, tired of the struggle after holiness, tired of the harrowing grief of the world, tired—tired to death of to-day? Then rest your spiritual eyes by a fair vision. Look up to the beauty of His Holiness; look upon that great multitude, whom no man can number, who stand in the presence of our Lord. Look at the dear ones who now share the many mansions with their Master and ours. Look away to the day, the promised day, when Jesus will come again in power and glory. Rest you, soul, by these far, fair visions."—Union Gospel News.

NO TIME TO BE A CHRISTIAN.

I say to my friend, "Be a Christian." That means to be a full man. And he says to me: "I have not time to be a Christian. I have not room. If my life was not so full! You don't know how hard I work from morning till night. What time is there for me to be a Christian? What time is there, what room is there, for Christianity in such a life as mine?" But does it not seem to us so strange, so absurd, if it was not so melancholy, that man should say such a thing as that?

It is as if the engine had said it had no room for the steam. It is as if the tree had said it had no room for the sap. It is as if the ocean had said that it had no room for the tide. It is as if the man said that he had no room for his soul. It is as if life said it had no time to live, when it is life. It is not something that is added to life. . . . Life is the thing we seek, and man finds it in the fulfilment of his life by Jesus Christ.—Phillips Brooks.

Never mind whereabouts your work is. Never mind whether it be visible or not. Never mind whether your name is associated with it. You may never see the issues of your toils. You are working for eternity. If you can not see results here in the hot working-day, the cool evening hours are drawing near, when you may rest from your labors, and then they may follow you. So do your duty, and trust God to give the seed you sow "a body as it hath pleased him."—Alexander Maclaren.

If we would bring a holy life to Christ, we must mind our fireside duties as well as the duties of the sanctuary.—Spurgeon.

OKOLONA, MISS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: This week's ADVOCATE received, and I see that you are at the wheel in the pilot house, and that the dear old boat is coming up stream bringing us the news.

Your exhortation to the preachers of the various Conferences read, and duly considered. Yes, sir; some of us wanted to have a paper of our own in Mississippi, but that speech of Dr. Black's knocked us clear out, and we reconsidered, and decided to stand by the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. We are going to do it, too. So you may send me a lot of sample copies, so I can go to work for the ADVOCATE. We of the Aberdeen district (as we boys used to say when playing marbles) are a long ways from taw, but we are going to shoot, hit or miss. So send on the samples.

The preachers of this district are all in shape, and, so far as I can learn, are doing well. Bro. Bowen has Tupelo by the forelock, and a down-grade pull. Morehead is in great favor with the people at Houston and Wesley. Raper has captured the good people at Buena Vista. The people at Prairie and Shannon are delighted with the Brown brothers. They never fail anywhere. Wilkinson is happy, and so are the people of Aberdeen. Verona has one of our very best men in the person of Bro. Oats. Verona is a good place to stop, after coming out of the Delta. Mt. Pelier is extremely fortunate in having J. Ritchey for this year. Ritchey was here some years ago, and one of my stewards remarked a few days ago that Ritchey was the best preacher that Okolona ever had, and that he was paid less, and treated the worst of any man they ever had. I advised him to send Ritchey a check for a few hundreds, and ask his pardon for not treating him better while here.

Okolona is doing considerably better than last year. We have received six members since Conference, held our first quarterly meeting, and raised the pastor's salary to $800. Our next District Conference will be held here, and we are expecting to have the pleasure of your presence. Bro. Woollard is a busy man, going all the time, looking after all the interests of the church. He has much to do. A district parsonage to build, and the money to raise to pay for it.

The rest of the preachers in the district are well, and moving off nicely so far as I have been able to hear. With best wishes for you and the ADVOCATE,

I am, Your brother,

J. A. LEECH.

FROM M'NUTT.

We came to this, our new charge, soon after Conference, after spending three very pleasant and—at least to us—profitable years in the tracks and in the associations of many good men on the Chester charge. A tender farewell to close friends there! We stepped into the footprints of able and active predecessors here, i. e., Futrell, Vaughan, Shipman, Jones, Price, Ritchey, and others. The Lord make me a worthy successor to such faithful laborers, whose names are as "ointment poured forth"! We were kindly received by this noble people, and complimented with many useful and pleasing evidences of welcome and appreciation—provisions of nearly every kind, including a "whole hog," canned goods and fancy goods for Christmas festivities, etc. These we very much appreciate. Such treatment goes a long way toward making up for the losses in moving and the inability to provide many things needful on account of expecting to move among our preachers. They warm and cheer the hearts of preachers' wives as few things else do. It should be encouraged.

I have made two rounds already, and find the people receptive and responsive. About forty dollars subscribed on the Twentieth Century Fund. More will be subscribed and all paid, I think, next round. Our charge is about ripe for building a new parsonage at Maryland, where a handsome new church was built last year. The old brick parsonage at McNutt still stands complete, but is for sale, as the people have largely deserted the town. One good brother has already pledged the framing timbers, so there need be no trouble in building at an early day.

The writer made a short visit lately to the homes of both Revs. J. S. Oakley and S. M. Thames, and found both Bro. Oakley and Sister Thames convalescent. May our heavenly Father completely restore them!

En route home from Winona, we encountered the genial and jovial Bro. J. R. Bingham, of Carrollton, whose heart was gladdened when spoken to of our efforts on his favorite charge—the Twentieth Century Fund. It is good to be with such as Bro. Bingham. "A cheerful spirit doeth good like a medicine," and so we were strengthened. More anon.

HARRISTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Bishop returned me to the Harriston circuit for the second year, and I was glad, and more so, because the people seemed to be glad. I would not want to stay if I thought the people did not want me. Our last year was not very successful for several reasons not necessary to mention. But we hope to make this a much better and more prosperous year. We want to renew our youth, and work as in former years, God blessing us. Pray for me and mine.

Our first Quarterly Conference met with Cane Ridge Church, and with it came our new presiding elder. We had a delightful quarterly meeting, and our presiding elder, Bro. T. W. Adams, endeared himself to us all. He gave us three strong sermons, good to the use of edifying, and the people were perfectly delighted with him. He also presides well. I am confident that the Bishop made no mistake in his appointment. We are expecting great things from him. May God graciously bless him, and the Natchez district, the Mississippi Conference and the church at large, and may this be the best of all the years in our history. May God also greatly bless the (our) ADVOCATE and its editor, and make him and it to greatly prosper. God bless all the people. "Amen."

A. D. MILLER.

Lorman, Miss., Feb. 1, 1901.

STARKVILLE, MISS.

Rev. R. A. Meek writes: "We have begun our third year here under circumstances apparently auspicious. This charge is one of the very best in our Conference. The people are cordial, kind-hearted, and religious. All the different departments of the church are in good working order. Our Sunday-school especially deserves mention. We have an enrollment of 200 pupils, and for the past two years we have led all other schools in the Conference in the amount contributed on Children's Day. The pastor here also has a fine field for seed sowing at the Agricultural and Mechanical College. This noble institution now has between 350 and 400 students in attendance, and when the Textile Department, the buildings of which are now being erected, is put into operation, the student body will be much larger. What a privilege and responsibility to preach to so many young men! Our first Quarterly Conference has already been held. Dr. Sullivan, urbane, scholarly, and saintly, was on hand, magnifying his office and delighting the large audiences that waited on his ministry. The stewards raised the pastor's salary, $100, thus making it $1,000. Our watch-night service was well attended and was a delightful occasion. Bro. W. W. Woollard was with us and made a fine impression. Starkville has the honor of being the home of the Rev. A. P. Sage, who is now a supernumerate, and whose declining years are beautiful beyond description. A sunnier, saintlier spirit the writer has never known. As Bishop Galloway said of the late Ex-Gov. J. M. Stone, 'There are not enough shadows in his transparent soul to hide a sinister thought.'"

FROM ALGIERS.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We have had quite a satisfactory reception by our people. On my return from Conference I found two awaiting my arrival very anxiously. My presence and a few words apparently made them very happy, as I pronounced the words, "Husband and wife." This was followed by four other couples. On Jan. 30 was the red-letter day for us. Through the efforts of the ladies of the church the parsonage was supplied with a new cook stove, and our little daughter was presented with a handsome baby carriage. Nor did the excitement stop here, for two marriages interposed to prolong it.

We hope to get more of our people to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

K. W. DODSON.

PARIS, MISS.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: We are moving off well on Paris circuit. We are planning and hoping for a successful year, and we have the circulation of the ADVOCATE included in our plan.

Our first Quarterly Conference has come and gone. Had a good time. Our beloved presiding elder, J. W. Bell, was with us, and gave us three excellent sermons. My people are delighted with him, both as preacher and presiding officer. Bishop Hargrove made no mistake when he made him presiding elder of the Grenada district.

Success to the ADVOCATE. Pray for us.

J. H. ROGERS.

ROCKY SPRINGS, MISS.

Rev. W. J. Ferguson writes as follows under date of Jan. 26: 'I have had a very fine beginning on my new charge, and the outlook for a prosperous and happy year is very flattering. We have all plans made and money raised to make some much-needed repairs on our old brick church at this point, which has been standing since 1847. The dear, good people here are very kind to and thoughtful of the preacher and his family."

FROM LAKE CHARLES, LA.

DEAR DOCTOR: Our work is progressing in this city. Good day yesterday. Congregations averaging better this year than last. We had three accessions on yesterday—all on profession of faith, and all were adults. We are trying to make Lake Charles one of the best appointments in the Conference—if indeed it is not already one of the best. Your brother truly,

R. W. TUCKER.

Blessed is the man whose home is a real refuge! who leaves his office, his business perplexities behind him, and when he opens the door and enters the house, enters the land-locked harbor. But the home ought not to be a refuge for the husband and the father only, but we who are husbands and fathers ought to make it a refuge for the wives and mothers as well. They have their cares also, and when we come to our homes we ought to come bringing with us such a spirit as shall exercise these cares and make home their refuge.—Rev. Lyman Abbott.

Tired Out

And she does not understand why. Her work used to seem so easy. You could tell her whereabouts as she worked by the snatches of song which now and again overflowed her happy lips. And now she can hardly keep up. Her head pains, her back hurts, and she feels entirely worn out.

What is the matter? The probability is that the stomach is disordered, the liver is not performing its whole duty. Poisons are accumulating in the blood, and unless these are removed, and the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition cured and strengthened, there is liable to be a serious illness. There is no medicine can equal Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for prompt help and perfect cure for diseases of the stomach and blood. It strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood, nourishes the nerves, and brings back the happy days of health, when life is all song and sunshine.

"I suffered ten months from a complicated case of liver complaint, constipation, indigestion, suppression of monthly function, and kidney disease, too," writes Miss Lula M. Brittle, of Ivor, Va. "I also suffered excruciating pain in my back and head. I am glad to say that six bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' three vials of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and two bottles of 'Compound Extract of Swart-Weed' cured me entirely. I gladly recommend Dr. Pierce's medicines to all sufferers."

TEACHERS' BUREAU
The Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has, under paragraph 115 of our Discipline, established a TEACHERS' BUREAU. The purpose of this Bureau is the advancement of Christian Education. We purpose to do our best to secure for the graduates of our institutions, and for other competent persons, positions in our schools and colleges; but we guarantee a position to nobody. Applications for positions will be furnished, upon request, with our application form, which will explain itself. Since the making of money is not the purpose of our Bureau, we will make our recommendations with the greatest possible care. Presidents of our schools and colleges, and Boards of Trustees seeking teachers, will do well to apply to us. The facilities of the Board for this work are unusual. We have a constituency, preachers and laymen, of one million and a half. We request the pastors throughout our Connection to advertise this Bureau, and to notify us of any vacancy in any school, secular or Christian, as soon as it occurs. By so doing they will greatly aid us in promoting Christian education. Address Rev. J. D. Hammond, Gen. Sec., Nashville, Tenn.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

1. All offers of premiums of books, etc., are withdrawn except those found on the fifth page of this issue.

2. From this date no receipts will be sent for money remitted on subscriptions. The moving up of the figures on the label will be regarded as receipt sufficient. If errors are made, we stand ready to correct them. If two or three issues pass before the label is changed, please do not get uneasy.

The man who feels that he is blessed with a greater amount of grace than his fellows, and assumes an air of superiority, is apt to be a hinderer rather than a helper in the work of a revival. If he is really a good man, and lives in the enjoyment of religion, he will esteem others better than himself, and try every day to grow as good as his fellow-Christians are supposed to be. On all proper occasions he will be the first man to bow in the congregation and make confession.

When a preacher, or other leader in public prayer, takes occasion to pray at people, or to lecture them for their open sins and shortcomings, it may be taken as proof that he has not sufficient courage to go to the delinquents and administer private reproof or admonition. If his object is to correct their evil ways, he is sadly mistaken if he thinks he can succeed by taking advantage of the altar or pulpit, neither of which was ever designed to shield a coward. A tender, personal talk in private might save them. They will be sure to resent a public rebuke.

During the first half of the last century large sections of our country, many of them well settled, were utterly destitute of religious advantages. If there was preaching at all, it was at a long distance from the majority of the people, and at long intervals. Such a thing as Sunday-school was unknown, and the Sabbath day, when not desecrated outright, was spent in an aimless and unprofitable way. Bishop Weaver, of the United Brethren Church, alluding to these facts in the Religious Telescope, says: "That old wry-faced pessimist that declares that everything is going to smash had better make himself familiar with the affairs of our country during the last sixty-five years." That is a little inelegant, but the admonition is in place. Men under sixty-five years of age can see the difference between now and then. Men who declare that former times were better than the present have not inquired wisely concerning the matter. They make the same mistake that the ancients did in the days of Solomon.

THE REVIVAL WE NEED.

We propose here to say a few words in regard to the revival we need, and which many of our most active and spiritually-minded brethren believe we are on the eve of realizing.

1. We need a deepening of our spiritual life. None are too religious—thousands are not religious enough. We bring no railing accusation against any. We neither charge deadness nor hypocrisy, but we do no violence to the truth by saying that there is too much formality in the church, too many members at ease in Zion. There can be nothing like a general move that will rouse sinners to a sense of danger as long as this state of things exists.

We do not mean to convey the idea that in order to a general outpouring of the Spirit, every member must be revived and become zealous. Experience, as a pastor convinced us long since, that if we wait for actual accord or unanimity in the church, we will wait in vain. The Lord will not deprive the many of a blessing because of the faithfulness of the few. Still it is true, "one sinner," especially a backslider, "destroyeth much good."

It does not stand to reason that any set of Christians can enjoy religion, or exercise any good influence over the world, who make no progress in the divine life. The life itself in such souls becomes stagnant, and decay immediately sets in. Are we going too far when we venture to suggest that the present cry for a revival grows out of the fear that many persons have only a name to live while they are dead?

Many of our members make no pretension to anything like an advanced Christian life. They are consistent, and, perhaps, live in the enjoyment of communion with God, but they count for little or nothing as evangelizing factors, because they are not active in the service. They will never see the necessity for personal service until their own spiritual life is quickened. Not until they realize their own danger will they see and be concerned about the danger of others. Possibly there are a few who think they are good enough, and have need of nothing. If so, they ought to be the first of all to get upon their knees. One who fights sin must be armed with something better than self-righteousness.

2. We need a revival that will deepen love for the church. What we mean by the church is not the particular denomination to which a man belongs, but the whole body of believers of which the various denominations are parts and representatives. Christ loves the church. It is his bride. He gave his life for it, and men who love Christ are bound to love his church, and their love for it should be only less than their love for Christ. And such it will be in all who are properly taught and genuinely converted. Much of the preaching of the day does not have this effect. On the contrary, the church is belittled and besmirched to such an extent that men are repelled and utterly decline to unite with it, to say nothing of feeling any degree of affection for it. Others, under preaching that minifies the power and influence of denominational ties and doctrines, unite with the church, but with the idea that one denomination is as good as another. Such members never develop any great affection for the church.

That there has been too much liberalism, especially in so-called great revivals, all who have respect for denominational life are bound to admit. The importance of doctrine, fellowship and communion of saints has been ignored. In some instances the essential doctrines of the gospel are not mentioned, let alone explained and enforced. Many seem to have forgotten, if they ever knew, that it has been through the church, divided as it is into sects, that the world, so far, has been enlightened and saved. The work could never have been done under the preaching of men too liberal to acknowledge allegiance to the church, or too cold-hearted to love it for Christ's sake.

We need a revival that will impress men with the fact that the church is a nursing mother, and develop in them an affection such as they cherish for nothing else this side of heaven; such affection as the captive Jews expressed in Babylon when they hung their harps on the willows, and declined to sing the Lord's song in a strange land: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy." Until this end is accomplished we may expect many of our revival services to be little else than religious hurrahs, and those who unite with the church to do so as a matter of convenience, and not of necessity.

The conditions of the revival needed are clearly expressed. "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. Bring ye all the titles into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." There must be earnest repentance and strong laying hold of God by faith. There must be fervent prayer and entire consecration—the giving of soul and body and estate to the divine service. Nothing short of such sacrifices will God accept. "O Lord, I have heard thy speech, and was afraid; O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years; in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy."

THE CHURCH NOT RESPONSIBLE.

It is true that "the management of the world's affairs was never specially entrusted to Christians," otherwise the Pope of Rome might be accorded entire justification for assuming to be the universal temporal ruler of the earth. Becoming a Christian and attaining high position in the church does not make a man the keeper of his brother's conscience nor responsible for his brother's conduct. As a Christian, he is no less a citizen and subject of the country in which he lives after conversion than he was before, and while his new life, and profession of allegiance to Christ, binds him to place himself always on the side of right, and in opposition to all wrong, there is nothing in his obligation as a Christian that holds him responsible for the evil state of things by which he finds himself surrounded any further than he is individually able to abate it. Even as a member of the church he counts only one, and is responsible for none save himself. To suppose differently is equivalent to holding one Christian responsible for all the evil in his community.

All the talk we hear of holding Christians to account for the wide-spread evil of the times is sheer nonsense. It is just as foolish to talk of holding the church responsible, for the church, as such, has no authority in the matter. The church can speak and advise, and this every evangelical church in the land has done, thus going as far as it is possible for churches to go. If the churches in America could abate the evils which afflict all communities, they would gladly do it, and in the shortest possible time. Not one of the many evils would be left. But as the church has no authority in itself to suppress any wrong, nor any authority to force its members in their individual capacity to follow any course of conduct, it is all a waste of time and strength to try to show that the church is responsible.

Nor are we so sure that the church, under existing conditions, could abate all evil-doing, even if it had the right. In our country all matters affecting the State or society in general are settled by public sentiment expressed at the ballot-box. Whether Christians of voting age, and otherwise eligible to suffrage, are sufficiently numerous to more than balance the forces of evil is a question. We seriously doubt it. And, on the assumption that they are sufficiently able to cope with them in point of numbers, it is not conceivable that Christians can enter the field and adopt the methods of politicians to carry their point. They would be ingloriously defeated. All that we can do as Christians is to stand in our places and resolve that, by the help of God, as individuals, we will give our influence, our time and our energies to the uplifting of humanity—to the spread of the light and truth of the gospel—so that evil men may see the force and beauty of truth, and be constrained to cease their evil doings and turn to good. This is what our Lord meant by putting leaven in the meal until the whole was leavened. It is what he required of his disciples: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father in heaven."

Nothing here said is intended to convey the idea that a Christian under no circumstances must join in efforts to suppress evil. There are times when he is obliged to do so, or be compelled to stand among those who advocate and practice wrong. This he can not afford. This he must do as an individual Christian, and not because he is committed to such a course by the mandate of the church. That would be to make the church responsible, which is not a fact.

UPRISING AGAINST DRINK.

If any enquirer desires "to get at the exact causes of crime, insanity, suicide, poverty, degradation, ruined homes, and wretched lives," he has but to study the matter in connection with the drinking habits of the people. He will not be long in finding out that the most prolific of all causes is alcohol. The danger is neither averted nor lessened by resort to light beverages, as wine and beer, except, perhaps, as to insanity and suicide.

Such is the alarming increase of crime and poverty, and the ills in general to which flesh is heir, that scientists have been aroused to the importance of a full investigation. This is specially true of Germany, which the advocates of the rum traffic have so persistently pointed to in proof of the harmlessness of mild alcoholic beverages, especially beer, which is the drink of the Fatherland and is consumed in immense quantities by all classes. The people there have looked upon beer as both food and drink, without ever considering its effect on their morals or health. They have, perhaps, never thought on the subject, but have gone on drinking their beer, and accepting their ills as a matter of course, and not as a consequence of over-indulgence in alcohol. But efforts are now being made to rouse the people to a sense of their danger, and it is affirmed that "the most powerful and most uncompromising advocates of temperance are scientists and physicians." German teachers have also joined in the effort to bring about a reaction against drink, and have formed a total abstinence association, and publish a total abstinence journal.

The doctors, it appears, first sounded the alarm, an eminent physician saying: "There run about in Germany hundreds of thousands of children with the germ of intemperance and the inclination to crime, whose heredity also involves disease of the nerves, epilepsy and imbecility." Another doctor, a professor in the University of Zurich, says: "Together with the worship of the golden calf, alcohol is the real devil of the nineteenth century. . . . . When the moderate consumption of alcohol becomes the habit of a people, it leads with mathematical certainty to intemperance, and thus to a gradual poisoning and slow, unconscious physical and moral degeneration of a nation." If such is a fact, who will undertake to say that the United States is not in danger? None are so blind as those who will not see!

HISTORY REPEATING ITSELF.

In a short paragraph of fifty-five lines the editor of a certain paper tries to expose the deformities and errors of Methodism. There are six statements that do not tally with the facts. He says: (1) "Ordinary Methodist members are not in the Methodist Church proper, but have their religious prerogatives in societies." (2) "The Annual Conference, the courts have decided, is the regular Methodist Church." Which Annual Conference of the Church, South, is the church? There are more than forty of them. (3) "The preachers-in-charge are made the legal agents of the Annual Conference to take care of the property." (4) The salary of the presiding elder "is to be paid by the societies, and it is assessed by the Quarterly Conference." (5) The Bishop "rules the presiding elders, the preachers-in-charge, the local preachers, the editors, the professors in church colleges, and the societies." (6) The salary of the Bishop "is also to be paid by the burden-bearing societies, and is assessed by the Conferences."

We have no objection at all to an honest and strong effort to show the falsity of Methodist doctrines and discipline. If they can not stand a fair investigation, they ought to be abandoned. But when one essays the task, he ought first to inform himself. We do not charge the said editor with willful misrepresentation. He does not understand Methodism as well as he understands the faith and practice of Baptist Churches. The editor can learn a great deal more than he knows concerning our church if he will study the Discipline, and some book that explains our doctrines and polity. Until then he should not be so free in making statements and criticisms. This sort of thing was tried forty years ago. History is being repeated.

GRENADA COLLEGE.

Arrangements are being perfected for the erection of an additional building on the campus of the Grenada College. It is necessary for the accommodation of the increasing patronage of the school. We are glad to note this sure evidence of prosperity, which is also testimony to the fact that the school is properly appreciated by our own home-folks. The building proposed is to cost ten thousand dollars. The good citizens of Grenada have generously donated half the amount. This indicates their purpose to stand by the school. The church could not consistently ask more at their hands. The remaining half the trustees expect to derive from the Twentieth Century Fund contributed within the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference. A large part of the funds is already in hand. The full amount, and more, has been subscribed, and the trustees have sent out an appeal asking subscribers to remit the sum promised to Rev. J. C. Park, treasurer, Winona, Miss. We hope subscribers will heed the call, and that the work will be commenced at once—and completed without a dollar's indebtedness. In this hope we feel sure the trustees, and all interested, will join us.

PERSONAL.

Prof. Carre, of Centenary College, spent Sunday last with his mother and friends in the city. He attended the Preachers' Meeting, Monday morning, and took part in the exercises.

The painful intelligence of the death of Rev. R. W. Bailey reached us on Monday afternoon. We have no particulars save that he died at Long Beach, Cal. This news will be a shock to his many brethren in Mississippi and Louisiana.

We thank Bro. J. F. Sourlock, of the Louisiana Conference, for a kind and brotherly letter; also for affectionate mention of our sainted father, whom he remembers much better than he does the editor. It has been a long time since we saw each other.

We are glad to hear of the good impression made by Rev. J. W. Bell, the newly appointed presiding elder of the Grenada district. He has been thoroughly tried in other important departments of the work—always with satisfaction. Nobody is surprised that he succeeds in his new work.

A note from Rev. B. T. Crews, Minden, La., informs us of the death of one of his faithful and efficient laymen, Hon. G. L. P. Wren, who passed away on the morning of the eighth. He loved his church and Lord, and his death is a great loss to his community. A suitable obituary will be forwarded in due time.

Rev. F. N. Parker, we are sorry to say, is still much indisposed. He was unable to fill his pulpit last Sunday. Rev. T. B. Clifford, pastor of Dryades Street Church, being relieved of duty by the presiding elder, Dr. S. S. Keener, occupied Bro. Parker's pulpit, both morning and evening. He reports good congregations at both services.

The Lake Providence Sentry speaks highly of Rev. J. E. Denson, who began his ministry at Lake Providence on the seventeenth ultimo. Large congregations greeted the new preacher, and he both pleased and edified his hearers. The prediction is that the year 1901 will be a prosperous year for the Methodist Church in that important field.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, pastor of Parker Memorial, is a zealous and active pastor. He has gathered one of the largest and most interesting Sunday-schools of our church in the city. In this good work he is ably assisted by the superintendent, Bro. A. F. Godat, who is much interested in the work. Bro. Atkinson is now making efforts to relieve his parsonage of a heavy debt.

Thursday, the seventh, was Bishop Keener's birthday. He was eighty-two years old. What a wonderfully preserved man he is. Only the physical man shows any signs of age. The mental is as bright and vigorous as at any time of his life. Less than three years ago he retired from the active duties of the Episcopacy, but he has not been idle. He has employed his pen occasionally for the benefit of the church press, but mostly for the benefit of the public in a more permanent way. He has written and sent out two books: Studies of Bible Truths, and The Garden of Eden and the Flood.

Dr. Julien C. Brown, once a member of the North Mississippi Conference, but now of the Little Rock, preached a notable sermon at Hot Springs, Ark., on Sunday, the third of this month. The subject was, "The Religious, Political, and Social Fraternity between North and South." We can not endorse all that Dr. Brown said in that sermon (if he has been quoted correctly), but he is, according to our hearing, easily the foremost of our younger preachers, and we are happy to know that he is succeeding so well at Hot Springs. His large church is often too small to contain the crowds that flock to hear him.

JACKSON DISTRICT NOTES.

At the late session of the Mississippi Conference the Jackson district was increased from seventeen to nineteen appointments, which gives us practically all of the four counties of Yazoo, Madison, Rankin and Simpson, and a part of Hinds. As soon after Conference as possible all of the pastors were at their places, and have all been kindly received. We trust that this is an omen of a great year for the Master and his church.

To date we have visited one-half of the charges on the first round, and, with one or two exceptions, there has been no disposition to reduce the salaries of the pastors from the figures of last year. This is not only commendable, but fair and right. In no instance were the assessments above the minimum as compared both with the pastor's needs and the ability of the charges to pay. Indeed, in most instances, they were just within the possibility of a close living. Up to the age of twenty-three my life was spent upon the farm, and during the most of my ministry it has been in the towns and cities. I have had the experience of trying to support a family on the circuit and in the station, and I hesitate not to say, that the average preacher finds it hard to make buckle and tongue meet over the usual assessment. When the average farmer adds to his bills what he produces on the farm, and which the pastor has to buy, he will find that his preacher has economized beyond what is well for one of whom full work has been demanded.

Considering its source, the greatest compliment I remember ever to have heard to the Methodist ministry was spoken by Mr. Ingersoll, who was reported as saying that "they do more work on less pay than any other class of men." How different this from the idea of some who have taken vows at the altar of the church and who profess love for Christ, and yet who look upon the preacher as little better than an object of charity and only a gentleman of leisure. To every steward who sees this I would urge a liberal support for his pastor. Put him above fear of suffering in his person and in his home, and thereby secure his best service. "There is that scattereth abroad and increaseth more and more," says the wise man, "and there is that withholdeth more than is meet and tendeth to poverty."

The district stewards met in the city of Jackson at the appointed time, and, after a decidedly interesting session, fixed the apportionments on the various charges. Some came with the one idea that their works had been over-assessed and must be relieved; but when the whole field was surveyed and comparisons made, all seemed satisfied that the distribution was about equitable, although some of the lighter works thought their portions too much for their people. The most interesting event of the occasion was a speech to the body by Bro. T. P. Barr, of First Church, Jackson, in which he took the position that there was not a work in the district that could not double the amounts levied if the stewards were only active. Suffice it to say, that Bro. Barr is not a theorist, but has for many years put into practice what he preaches. He was requested by the Board to write out and send his speech to the ADVOCATE for publication. The amount apportioned over the district aggregated $1,570, besides the salary of the presiding elder. This makes for the various Conference collections just one dollar per member on the district. Will not the pastors devise means for collecting this amount, and will not the members form some plan for paying that much? There is not one who can not within the twelve months lay by that much—two cents a week, ten cents a month.

It was our pleasure, a few mornings ago, to conduct the chapel exercises at Millsaps, our growing young college. While we sat and looked into the intelligent faces of more than two hundred young men and boys, we almost envied them their splendid opportunities. I am not an octogenarian by any means, yet I can see the great advance and improvement in the method of college work since my day, and Millsaps is in all particulars equal to any. The young man who fails of a liberal education in these walls has only himself to censure. The secretary of the faculty informed me that there had been fifteen additions to the roll since the holidays, and others are expected at the beginning of the second term. The contract has been let for the erection of the James Observatory, and with hopes of its completion by the approaching commencement. Why can not every preacher arrange to be present at these commencement occasions, and thereby get acquainted with the institution and its work?

We are glad to note your clubbing rates as announced in the ADVOCATE, and surely no one can complain at your prices. Every member should subscribe for the ADVOCATE. If the failure to read the church paper means spiritual death, then truly are our "people destroyed for lack of knowledge" if the figures in our patronizing Conferences are to be taken as correct. We hope for a marked improvement at that point, and if you keep up to the standard which you have thus far set, the paper will be well worth its price in any home. May your numbers increase.

Pardon me, Mr. Editor, for consuming so much of your space.

Fraternally,

ANOTHER GENEROUS GIFT TO WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

Whitworth Female College is the recipient of another liberal donation. This time it comes from that generous hearted layman, Capt. J. F. Powell, of Yazoo City, Miss., who gives $500 to endow a scholarship. This is timely. It is a practical expression of the abiding interest Capt. Powell has in the education of the girls and young women of our State, and a tangible manifestation of the faith he has in the institution which is the beneficiary of his benevolence. A few more gifts like this would enable the college to provide the necessary facilities for doing a work for the young womanhood of our State, which has hitherto been largely neglected by all of our schools for girls.

Are there not others who will follow this noble example of Capt. Powell, and lend a helping hand in the great work Whitworth is called to do? Money given in this way possesses an abiding element—a staying quality. It is like a spring of crystal water; it refreshes everyone who drinks, and yet flows on to cheer others. No one makes a better investment of his money than the man who puts it into his own mind, or in that of another. The best endowment a parent can bestow upon his child is a liberal education. It is better than money or lands. It bestows an equipment for usefulness in life, out of which may come all that is implied in material wealth and mental happiness.

Would that more of our men of means would plant some of their money in Whitworth College, that the present and following generation of girls in our State might be fitted for a useful and noble womanhood.

Any one desiring information with reference to endowing a scholarship may obtain it promptly by writing to Revs. A. F. Watkins or M. L. Burton at Brookhaven, Miss. B. F. JONES.

To the Delegates and Alternate Delegates from the Mississippi Conference to the General Missionary Conference in New Orleans, April 24-30—

DEAR BRETHREN: By an oversight our delegation was not organized at Brookhaven. As my name appears first on the list, and the president of our Conference Board of Missions suggests, I write to ask all of you (delegates and alternates) who are planning to attend the Missionary Conference to write to me at once and advise me of your intentions and also to express your views as to whether I or some one else should make arrangements for our entertainment while in New Orleans. If we go together, cheaper rates can probably be obtained. Write me at once.

Yours faithfully,
T. L. MELLEN.

Attention, Delegates!

Reduced rates to the Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Convention, which will meet at McComb City, March 28-31, inclusive, have been granted by the following railroads: The Illinois Central, the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley, the New Orleans and Northeastern, the Alabama and Vicksburg, the Mobile and Ohio, the Louisville and Nashville, and the Gulf and Ship Island. All of the above railroads, except the last mentioned, will sell tickets on the usual certificate plan. That is, delegates and visitors must purchase regular one-way tickets to McComb, and at the time of said purchase must procure from the agent a certificate that full-fare has been paid going. At McComb your certificate is to be signed by Rev. Jno. W. Chambers, by order of convention, and on its presentation to ticket agent he will sell you a ticket for the return passage at one-third of the regular one-way rate. The only condition on which reduced rates will be granted is that fifty delegates attend the convention. The Gulf and Ship Island railroad will grant reduced rates, but in a different way from the certificate plan; information to be obtained from the agent when ticket is purchased.

Brethren, it would be a shame to have less than fifty delegates and visitors present while one thousand are entitled to a seat. It is as much the duty of the preachers and delegates to attend the convention as the Annual Conference.

Brother Sunday-school Superintendent, see to it that your school elects its delegate next Sunday, and that the delegate comes with you to McComb in March.

Brother Presiding Elder, stir up your preachers occasionally about the convention, and if they have not got the money to pay their transportation, lend it to them and come along yourself.

Dr. Atkins will be with us during part of the convention. Other representative men from abroad have been invited.

Do not forget to forward Bro. Chambers the names of all who purpose attending, in order that homes may be provided.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

REV. THOS. H. DORSEY, Arcola, Miss.
EDITOR.

A letter from Bro. R. A. Tucker, at Guntown, brings the following good news: "I have just organized a League at Guntown, with about thirty members; prospects good for a fine League. T. S. Green, president, and C. E. Rice, secretary. I left a fine League at Strongs, which I organized when I first went there two years ago."

Rev. Jno. M. Moose, of Gunnison, writes us that he is just about to organize a League at that place. We are glad to hear this bit of news. No pastor can afford to be without a League where it is possible for him to have it. Our young people are helping to move the world one way or the other. We must use them in capturing the world for Christ.

Every month we learn that our Leagues are doing something worthy for the Orphans' Home at Water Valley. A fine work that.

We are in receipt of Vol. I., No. 1, of the Mississippi Leaguer, official organ of the State Epworth League of Mississippi; Prof. H. A. Hayes, State League president, editor. It is a first-class little paper.

Let us get ready for the International Epworth League Conference in San Francisco in July.

MAIN STREET, WATER VALLEY.

The Water Valley Itemizer gives the following short account, together with the programme of the Epworth League Rally Day Service at Main Street Church on Sunday, the twentieth ultimo: "It was a great success in every way. The church was tastefully decorated in the Epworth League colors, yellow and white, and the League motto, 'All for Christ,' in green was hung across the chancel. The church was crowded with an appreciative and sympathetic audience. The programme was well rendered. The recitation by Miss Laura Belle Harley, a sweet little maiden of four years, won the audience. Miss Trotters' solos were exquisite. Miss Josie Leverette read a fine paper on the Work of the Junior League, and the League voted to have it sent to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE for publication. At the conclusion of the services Rev. W. S. Harrison made a touching appeal for the Orphans' Home, and $11.60 was raised. This was $1.60 above the assessment." Well done for Main Street! We hope to find room for the essay of Miss Leverette at an early day.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

Two remarkable books have recently been published by Sir Edwin Arnold, entitled respectively "The Light of Asia" and "The Light of the World." The hero of "The Light of Asia" is Gautama. We can not tell whether Gautama is a real, historical personage, or the highest oriental ideal of morality impersonated. However that may be, the hero is a powerful oriental prince, who became so oppressed with the ignorance and misery of his people that he abandoned his throne and wandered away into the wilderness, there to discover by meditation, if possible, a cure for the ills of humanity. The result of his solitary reflections is the message which he brings to man on the subject of religion. That there is some truth and some good in the teachings of Gautama none can dispute.

We call the religions of the East false religions. But we must not be so narrow as to think them altogether false. A recent learned writer has published a book entitled "The Distinctive Messages of the Old Religions." Each great religion has brought some message to man. Each has made a contribution to the light and life of the world. There is truth in Buddhism and Brahmanism. Confucius has given help to his people. The religions of ancient Persia, Greece, Rome, and the German nations have their merits and their messages worthy of consideration. Let us give them their due.

But, after all, Jesus has included in his message to humanity all the good that can be found in all others, and much more. They taught some truth; he is the Truth. The truth which they gave was partial and one-sided. The truth which he brought is universal and perfect. Did they speak of God, of man, of sin, of righteousness, of happiness, of death, of life, of immortality? He spake of all these in such a way as to leave nothing to be added.

The hero of Edwin Arnold's "Light of the World" is Jesus, the only begotten Son of God, who dwelt in the bosom of the Father before the world was. He felt so keenly the ignorance, sin, and misery of humanity that he left the glory which he had with the Father and came to the earth, not merely to meditate in solitude and pray, but also to teach in public, to resist temptation, to set a perfect example before the eyes of men, to die on the cross that sinners might receive forgiveness, the knowledge of God, and everlasting life after death. The poet has wrought out the story with dramatic force and beauty, but "The Light of the World" needs no dramatic decoration or poetic fire to heighten the illumination. All other lights are dim and pale. "The Light of Asia" does not shine across the sea. But "The Light of the World" shines brighter than the noonday sun. He throws a friendly ray on every possible pathway of man, illuminates the valley of the shadow of death, and flings his beams of splendor on the golden gates of Paradise.

He is not the Light of Asia alone, nor of Europe alone, nor of America alone, but of all continents, of all men. He is the Light of the world. Other lights are growing dimmer, but this is increasing in splendor every year. His beams are more widely disseminated to-day than ever before. He shall continue to shine on till the whole world shall rejoice in his light.

The teachings of Jesus have been severely criticised. They are still criticised by Hebrew rabbis, pagan philosophers, and infidel scholars, but the criticism is rather a compliment than otherwise. They tell us, not that the moral standard which Jesus set up is bad, but that it is too good; not that it is too low, but too high. They say that no man has ever yet been able to measure up to it, and there is no hope that the world will ever reach it. It is too high for frail humanity.

A physical standard may be too high, because material things are subject to narrow limitations. An intellectual standard may be too high, because the intellect has its limitations. But a moral standard can not be too high, for there are no boundaries to the possibilities of goodness. Jesus did not accommodate his moral standard to the frailties of human nature, for if he had done so, it must needs have been an imperfect standard. It must have been a variable standard. It must accommodate itself to the changing condition of men and nations. But the standard of Jesus is the same for the men of his own generation, of this generation, and of all generations. Let men advance as much as they may for the next twenty centuries, they shall not rise above this standard. They shall not go beyond it and leave it behind. We shall need no new standard, no new teacher, no new gospel. It is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. Jesus is the Light of the world.

SELF-DENIAL.

Self-denial is the denial of self in the very form in which self most delights. A man who likes power or pre-eminence or adulation may endure toil, weariness, and even persecution with secret satisfaction if thereby he wins admiration and influence. There is no self-denial in all that toil or weariness or persecution. There is such a thing as spiritual pride. A person may even be proud of being thought extraordinarily and peculiarly devoted to God. When such a person spends much time

To produce the best results in fruit, vegetable or grain, the fertilizer used must contain enough Potash. For particulars see our pamphlets. We send them free.

in reading the Bible or religious books, or keeps in seclusion as if lost in meditation about holy things, or talks sweetly about the presence of God and communion with him in public and in private, there may be a deep and unseen satisfaction in all this apparent consecration, because people look on and admire such piety, such devotedness. And if such is the case, there is no self-denial; there is only spiritual pride and gratification, because self in its favored taste is pleased. A stream of thoughts sometimes passes through the mind while we are at prayer in our secret devotions: thoughts about our duties in the church, in the Sunday-school, in the mission and its work: thoughts about our brethren in Christ, how we ought to act differently toward them, be more kind and loving, or patient and humble; and before we know it we are away off in remote parts of the earth from our prayers, the heart has really been silent from its petitions before God, silent in its communion with God, while thoughts which we did not recognize to be at all sinful have swept a veil between us and the mercy seat. Sometimes these thoughts are injected by Satan, who hates above all things to see a Christian praying; but sometimes they are also traceable to a form of selfishness; the center of the thought is in some way or another a perfume in the nostrils of self. As a rule, it may be set down to be a fact that a Christian who is given to much wandering of mind when engaged in secret devotion is not living the real life of self-denial; self in some form is filling the heart and ready to take even the perfumed incense of prayer and swing the golden censer before its own deep idolatry.

How often we listen to testimonies that breathe nothing but self! Even when it is positively denied that the glorifying is not of self, but of God, there is evidence of the devil's own deceit in making the soul believe this while reveling secretly in self-satisfaction. How many times our resentment of injury and injustice is fired by our own vanity and unwillingness to be crucified with Christ in the death of self. Not only in the seat, but on the platform; not only in the hearer, but in the leader, this same spark appears. Evident to others, evident, alas! to our gracious Savior and Lord; but concealed from ourselves. How much we try the divine patience; how much we all lack of the Savior's real spirit of denying of self! Meditation on this subject should lead us to watch all uprisings of self, in our spirit, in our words, in private and public devotion, in council, in church, in testimony, and to hear the Master's voice, "Deny thyself, or thou canst not follow me."—Mission Bulletin.

START AT THE BOTTOM.

Two boys left home with just money enough to take them through college, after which they must depend entirely upon their own efforts. They attacked the collegiate problems successfully, passed the graduation, received their diplomas from the faculty, also commendatory letters to a large ship-building firm with which they desired employment. Ushered into the waiting-room of the head of the firm, the first was given an audience. He presented his letters.

"What can you do?" said the man of millions.

"I would like some sort of a clerkship."

"Well, sir, I will take your name and address, and should we have anything of the kind open, will correspond with you."

As he passed out he remarked to his waiting companion: "You can go in and leave your address."

"What can you do?" was asked.

"I can do anything that a green hand can do, sir," was the reply.

The magnate touched a bell, which called a superintendent.

"Have you anything to put a man to work at?"

"We want a man to sort scrap-iron," replied the superintendent.

And the college graduate went to sorting scrap-iron.

One week passed, and the president, meeting the superintendent, asked:

"How is the young man getting on?"

"Oh," said the boss, "he did his work so well, and never looked at the clock, that I put him over the gang."

In one year this man had reached the head of a department and an advisory position with the management at a salary represented by four figures, while his whilom companion was maintaining his dignity as "clerk" in a livery stable, polishing harness and carriages.—Selected.

Temperance.

The Rev. A. P. Doyle, general secretary of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America, in a recent address, said:

"It is the opinion of many men of experience and foresight that, as the years go on, there will be an increasing need of a vigorous crusade. The brilliant and restless activity of modern life which has placed the English-speaking races in the lead of modern civilization has had as one of its waste products the vice of intemperance. We continue to live and work at high pressure, and the fierce strivings of mercantile life generate a strained vitality and overwrought nerves, which in their turn demand the stimulus of alcohol to whip up their dragging energies. Our modern ways of living generate the excessive use of intoxicating drink. So, while drunkenness continues to be prevalent, there will also be a necessity for the existence of an extraordinary remedy for social disease. This extraordinary remedy is the practice of total abstinence.

"Moreover, there is an all-powerful and far-reaching American institution which has for its main purpose the developing of a taste for alcohol. It is the saloon. Where there are so many saloons, and consequently such fierce competition, they can not all thrive unless they deliberately set to work to develop a taste for alcoholics. There are methods peculiar to the trade which have for their direct purpose the cultivation of the drink-habit."—Selected.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

MRS. MATTIE NEAL was born in Muncie, Ind., Aug. 19, 1859; was married to Mr. John Neal, March 17, 1881; was converted in 1886 in Meridian; professed sanctification in October, 1894, and died after a lingering illness, in which she was a great sufferer, Oct. 16, 1900, at the home of her son-in-law, Bro. T. C. Harmon, of Meridian, whose wife was her only child.

An ex-pastor, Bro. B. F. Lewis, speaking of her in our church the day of her funeral, used language so illustrative of her life that I shall quote from him:

"Her life has been before you for a long time; many of you knew her intimately, but there are four epochs in her life which should be mentioned, some of which will not be forgotten when many of us have passed away.

"First. When the great fight was begun in this city some years ago against the open saloon, Sister Neal stepped into the front ranks to wage a war against this giant evil. Though frail of body, limited as to strength of endurance, yet by prayer her energies never flagged, her strength never failed, until the victory was won, and the last saloon was closed.

"Second. When this (East End Church) was conceived in the brain of the lovers of Methodism, and birth was given to the thought, she came to the front again, and gave the best energies of her life to this enterprise, from the laying of the first brick until May, 1893, when it was completed, and the officers assuming the debt, it was dedicated to God.

"Third. This epoch concerns herself alone. From her own testimony, it was just there where she is lying to-day. She sought for and obtained the sweet experience of entire sanctification. This was in the Fall of 1894. You could see the depth and richness of that experience for yourself, and she ever rejoiced in it.

"Lastly. Note her translation. Patient, unmurmuring, resigned, trusting, she waited, and when her Savior called she was ready, and with the response of a child to the call of a father, she lay down this mortal coil, and went up the shining way to meet him."

We were always strengthened by our visits to her as pastor, when we saw the power of God's grace sustaining her in her bodily pain, and keeping her cheerful and happy till the end came. More loving attention was never given any mother than was given her by Bro. Harmon and his wife, as well as the three little grandchildren who anticipated her wants.

D. P. BRADFORD.

MRS. TRUDCHEN HYER AIKEN, daughter of the late Dr. W. F. Hyer, of Meridian, was born in Marshall county, Miss., Nov. 11, 1871. She professed faith in Christ and joined the M. E. Church, South, in her fifteenth year, under the pastorate of Rev. E. H. Moon, at Holly Springs, Miss. June 1, 1893, she was married to Charles V. Aiken, of Meridian, Miss., and with him moved to DeSoto, Miss., in October, 1895.

The writer of this sketch knew Sister Aiken for the past four years, during which time he served her church at DeSoto as pastor. He always found a warm welcome in her home, and she was always ready to perform any duty and make any sacrifice in which her church was to be built up and her Lord glorified. Our beautiful new church at DeSoto, erected last year, is a living monument of her zeal and earnest efforts to glorify God. How mysterious that she should be taken so early in life! A letter from one who knew her worth contained the following: "Bro. Ferguson, I never knew anyone who developed more rapidly in the Christian graces for the past few years than did Sister Aiken." The last day of the old year, Dec. 31, 1900, she "fell on sleep" in the home of her mother at Jackson, Miss., whither she had gone to spend the holidays. She only suffered a few days of pernicious malaria, and did not apprehend death, as her mind was wandering for two days before her gentle spirit passed away from earth with the old year. Her remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Jackson, Jan. 1, 1901; Bishop Galloway, assisted by Rev. M. M. Black, officiating. May the dear Lord comfort the broken-hearted husband and the two precious little daughters who are left to mourn their irreparable loss in the once bright and happy home!

HER PASTOR.

Died at the home of her father-in-law, E. E. Hammett, near Campti, La., Mrs. CLEMMIE HAMMETT, wife of Roger Hammett, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Allen. She was born Jan. 13, 1878, in Cass county, Texas; was married March 1, 1892 and departed this life June 23, 1900. She was converted and united with the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of Bro. Lewis A. Reed, at the Flavis Springs Camp Meeting, in August, 1892, and ever lived a true and faithful Christian. She was one of those Christians who believed that we are not only saved by faith, but our union with Christ is vitalized and maintained by good deeds and holy living. She, with her husband, consecrated all to Christ, and gave a tenth of all to his cause.

Sister Hammett, during the last years of her life, was a great sufferer, but was ever patient and uncomplaining. A short while before her death her husband took her to an infirmary in Shreveport, and had an operation performed, but it was of no avail, and she, conscious of this, hastened home to die among her loved ones. In a few days, surrounded by them, her pure spirit took its flight to the God who gave it, leaving a dear husband and sweet little girl, with two sisters, one brother, a host of friends, and her husband's family, "who loved her dearly," to mourn their loss. They expect to meet in the Father's home above.

T. S. R.

JOHN C. JONES was born in Marlborough county, S. C., Feb. 10, 1839, and died near Bolton, Hinds county, Miss., Nov. 21, 1900.

Bro. Jones came to Mississippi in 1856, and in 1859 was married to Miss Margaret L. Smith, of Westville, Miss. Eleven children blessed this union. His wife and nine children survive him.

At the beginning of the Civil War, Bro. Jones enlisted under Capt. Banks, in Company F, 39th Mississippi Regiment. He was in the siege at Port Hudson, served through the Georgia and Tennessee campaign, was captured at Nashville, Tenn., and remained in prison at Camp Douglas, Ill., until peace was declared.

Bro. Jones' father was a local Methodist preacher, and in the church of his father he lived and died. His familiarity with the Bible and with Methodist doctrines and usages gave evidence of careful early training and of devotion to the cause of Christ. He was a good citizen, a good neighbor, a kind husband and father, and a deeply spiritual Christian. In his last illness his sufferings were intense, but his death was triumphant. He died the death of the righteous.

L. CARLEY.

JOHN H. STEEN TATE, son of Zachariah and Margarette Steen Tate, was born May 3, 1829, in Union district, S. C. He came to Union county, Miss., with his father in young manhood, and was married to Miss Amanda Tiger in 1858. He professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Mt. Olivet in 1869, under the preaching of Bro. J. W. Luter. He remained an honored member of the same until Dec. 6, 1900, when the summons came, and he passed peacefully away to his reward. The writer visited him several times during his lingering illness, and at first he seemed to dread death, and said he wanted to remain with his family, but he finally became resigned to God's will. He leaves a host of friends, a faithful wife, and five loving children, whom he asked to meet him in heaven. May they realize that their loss is his gain, and strive to meet him there! "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

His pastor, J. B. RANDOLPH.

W. J. BROWN, SR., departed this life for eternal rest, Jan. 5, 1901.

Among the beautiful pictures that hang on memory's wall is one of "this white-haired old saint" and the dear "little mother" sitting up in the front pew in the house of God. But now his place is vacant; he has answered the roll-call on high, and for one whole month he has dwelt in the glory land. His feet grew so weary down here, and so he went to sleep, and the first Sabbath of the new century was spent in the "beautiful mansion above." The eye dimmed by age awoke to see the King in his beauty, and resting in the shade of the Tree of Life, close by the great white throne, he waits for the home coming of the dear ones.

It was said of a beautiful young woman beside her coffin that "wherever she went flowers grew in the path behind her, and the air was sweeter when she had passed through a room." This was only a poetical way of saying that she scattered kindnesses wherever she moved, and that even her presence was a benediction. This is a beautiful ideal for every young woman, and it is not impracticable. A life of unselfish love really is it.—Selected.

Women Who Work

Nine out of ten women are afflicted with some of the common ailments known as female diseases. Among women whose employment requires them to stand on their feet or sit in the same position all day, not one in twenty-five escape these troubles. The average feminine constitution cannot, unaided, withstand the strain to which steady, trying work subjects them. The organs of womanhood are so delicate and finely adjustrd that the inevitable result of constant standing, lifting, stooping or straining is displacement of vital parts. The disorder is usually slight, at first, but soon develops into irregular or painful menstruation, leucorrhœa or falling of the womb. Wine of Cardui is the right remedy for female weakness. As such it is offered to you. Wine of Cardui will not perform miracles, but it will, if taken as directed, insure painless and regular operation of the menstrual function. It will drive out every trace of leucorrhœa, and will so strengthen the ligaments that falling of the womb will be an impossibility. Don't you think it would pay you to try a medicine with such a record as that? You can get a $1 bottle of Wine of Cardui at any drug store and use it in the privacy of your home.

WINE OF CARDUI

Townsend, Ga., May 18, 1899.

I have been in bad health with falling of the womb, weak back, nervousness and heart palpitation. At monthly periods I would be in bed suffering great pain. Lately I have been taking Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught, and they have brought me wonderful relief. I have no pain, and do not stop work at the monthly period.

MAGAZINES.

The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine is a superb monthly—the only thing of its class published in the country. It is what its name indicates—a Methodist magazine, illustrated For many months past the editors have been running a History of Methodism, which alone has been worth more than the subscription price of the magazine. The February number is full of interest, and, like its predecessors, profusely illustrated. Published monthly by the Methodist Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo. Price, $1.50 a year.

Dr. Grace Peckam Murray, a well-known and authoritative writer in regard to children's diseases, begins in the March Delineator a series of four valuable chapters dealing with The Child. The first article speaks of The Child at Home. Every mother should read these articles as they appear.

Wherever the retaining of a servant is a difficult matter—and in what home is it not?—interest should be felt in the article in the March Delineator by Prof Ellen H Richards, of The Massachusetts College of Technology, entitled The Servants We Do Not Keep. Of course, the final word on the servant question will never be uttered, but every woman with servant troubles, at least, wants to know the trouble of others, and how, in some measure, they overcame them.

Thomas F. Millard, the war correspondent, sends from China a remarkable summary of the international conditions prevailing there at present, and a very shrewd analysis of the part played by the various armies and the representatives of their governments. Mr. Millard is the first man to make a proper allowance in his writing for the very biased statements of the "foreign resident" in China. He also fully reveals the campaign of revenge and plunder which has been promoted by the Germans, and shows how they have been making cruel expeditions against a people who have shown no resistance whatever. Mr. Millard also shows how fortunate are the United States in escaping from the whole difficulty, and how honorable their attitude has been. All this, with much more interesting matter, will be found in Scribner's Magazine for February. Single copy, 25 cents. Address, Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

We are glad to see the interesting and patriotic design of the publishers of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, in offering each month to their readers a cover design reproduced in the original colors, from some famous painting which commemorates some crisis in their history. Every reader will have his own opinion of what subjects such a series of pictures should be composed, but we believe that the first eight stepping-stones of American history, which Leslie's Monthly has selected, will meet with general approval. The list is: Declaration of Independence, Surrender of Burgoyne, Surrender of Cornwallis, Washington Resigning His Commission, Battle of Lake Erie, Battle of Chapultepec, Monitor and the Merrimac, and the Emancipation Proclamation. As the last forty years of our history embrace many events, the relative importance of which is still open to dispute, the editors of Leslie's Monthly have promised to make their choice of the four concluding pictures of the series by a vote of interested readers. If any of the readers of the ADVOCATE have any choice, and would like to express it, let them address Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, New York.

It was not many days after the successful prosecution of a cab-driver, who had overcharged a poor servant girl, that "Mark Twain," speaking after dinner at the St. Nicholas Society, but in no "after-dinner" mood, praised, with a solemn face, the people of New York for their patriotism, as exemplified in the present excellent city government—which government, by the way, is a stench in the nostrils of civilization.

It looks as if a humorist had come to the rescue in one city of the republic, at least. It may be that his unescapable sarcasm will not only plague the enemy in the pending fight in New York, but will stir up the good citizen as he dreadfully needs to be stirred.

It is a promising sign of the present awakening in the metropolis that the two men at the moment most active in the attack on bad local government (though in different ways and from different points of view) are that good citizen, Bishop Potter, and that excellent critic of public morals, "Mark Twain." It would seem that the common enemy has after him the man who prays and the man who jokes—and while he evidently regards the combination as dangerous, it is difficult to tell which he fears the more.—The Century.

Fill up the void spaces of your time with meditation and prayer.—J. Mason.

A VISIT TO MEXICO.

BY H. M. DU BOSE, D. D,
General Secretary Epworth League.

MR. EDITOR: I em just now leevving behind me the land of Hidelgo, and am thereby reminded of my promise to send the ADVOCATE a letter. I have made e fairly complete tonr of the Repnblic, spending about a week in each of the two principal cities, and seeing many other of the more important centers, and hesides vast reaches of most fertile valleys, lofty table-lands, and pictnreeqne monntain-chains. Also, es an ematenr archæologist, I visited, in pnrsnance of a long-formed plan, a nnmber of prehistoric rnins and monuments of entiqnity, the chiefest being the rnined Toltec city of Teotihnacen, which is believed to have been founded in the sixth centnry of the Christian era, and which I do not donbt represents a civilization which flonrished in Mexico and Central America many centnries before that time, carrying the Toltec or Nahnah races back to a thousand years before the birth of Christ. It wonld be pleesing to me to give the entire epace allotted to this letter to en acconnt of the pyramidr, the teocallis, and monuments of this, as I believe, oldest rnin and most ancient seet of life in the western hemisphere. I conld more then teke np this space with a description of the two hundred relics in stone end terra cotta, including en exquisitely carved sphinx, which I hed the good fortune to secnre from these rnins end bring away with me to the Stetes. These clearly conspire with the larger monnments to connect the bnilders of this prehistoric city with the ancient Egyptians of the times entedating the reign of Rameses the Great. But however great en antiquarian interest might ettach to this, I am persnaded that yonr readers will generally care for observetions on the modern state of Mexico.

The tranformetion of this greetest of the Latin-American republics hes jnst fairly set in. For exactly three hnndred yeers the land was snbject to Spain, end dnring thet time the spirit of its native peoples was bnt little elevated above the conditions of their Toltec and Aztec ancestors. The old paganism gave place to the only less idolatrous perversions of mediæval Romanism. During the three hnndred yeers of her ownership of Mexico, Spain is said to have carried across the seas to the coffers of Iberian kings an everage of thirty millions of gold and silver annnally, all digged from the hills of this, the land of traditional peonage and poverty. What was not transported over seas went to bnild and adorn gorgeous and pagan-like chnrches and cathedrals, to create monasteries, sectaries, and church-buildings, and to maintain a favored class who held the original populations in absolnte physical and spiritnal bondage. Mexico literally went to seed on chnrches dnring these three hnndred years. The helpless peons who continned, and even now, for the most part, continne to live in miserable jacals of straw and cactus leaves, are entoiled as slaves to rear magnificent chnrches to a nnmber that fairly makes the senses reel. In one city of twenty thonsand people I observed from six to a dozen churches, not one of which conld be bnilt and fnrnished to-day for less than from one hnndred thonsand to a quarter million of dollars. And these temples overlook a poverty and wretchedness only thinly veneered with the accidents of a secnlar wealth. We hazard the statement that the ecclesiastical wealth of the city of Gnadalajara alone, if properly appraised, wonld equal the entire church property of either one of the two leading Protestant denominations in the cotton States. An American gentleman estimates the money value of the cathedral of that city alone at fifteen millions of dollars.

One can not wonder at the long history of poverty and ignorance of the common people of Mexico when these facts are taken into acconnt. A native judge of the high court of the State of Jalisco—a man who has thrown off Catholicism and has become an ontspoken advocate of Protestantism—told me frankly that his mind was first turned to Protestantism by considering the fact that while the priests of Rome sought to keep the people in ignorance, the Protestant missionaries sought to lift them np. He is only one of thonsands who are being similarly attracted to Protestant ideas.

The most significant incident which I noted during my whole tour was that at the dedication of our beautiful new church in the City of Mexico—the Church of the Messiah, and, by the way, the handsomest Protestant building in Mexico—a poem of great merit was read by Senor Jnan de Dios Peza, a member of the Mexican Congress, and the poet laureate of Mexico. This gentlemen has one daughter, who is a nun in Spain, and another whom he has put into Miss Norvell's school in Mexico, and has expressed his willingness that she should become a Protestant, so radical has been his change of ideas in recent years. At the same dedication service two daughters of Gen. Meir, of the Mexican Army, sang in the chorus, while his wife, but recently an intolerant Catholic, sat in the third pew from the pulpit. Gen. Reyes, commander-in-chief of the army, and the destined successor, as I heard, of Diaz in the presidency, sent a notice of his purpose to attend the service, but was prevented, preemnably through some official call. A chorus from the National Conservatory, a high and classic State institution, contributed to the dedication music of the first Southern Methodist Church in the capital of Mexico.

If I have not too enthusiastically read the signs, a break of the higher and cultured classes to Protestantism is imminent in Mexico. The government of Mexico is liberal and tolerant, and is in the hands of the before-noted cultured classes. A vast majority of the officials are strongly anti-Catholic, though a more conservative policy toward the Roman Church is noted in recent years. Juarez, the restorer of the liberties of Mexico, was a Protestant and a Mason. He originated the policy of confiscation of church property and of the repression of the priesthood. But Rome still hopes to regain her old ascendency, and even dreams of a restoration of the empire of Charles V. With every favorable turn or incident, the old spirit of arrogance reasserts itself. It is unlawful for a priest to wear his frock in public, but gradually the law is being set at naught. I saw the Bishop of the diocese alight from the railway at Solis, clad in canonicals, and the populace, to the number of several hundred, prostrated themselves at his feet, or otherwise showed a superstitious reverence for his person. No Protestant eye should be shut to the enormity of the task of evangelical Christianity in Mexico. Long years of labor remain before the veil can be lifted from the vision of its benighted millions, but the promises of success multiply. Deliverance comes.

The Leagues at home will be glad to hear of the progress of their work in the States of Mexico. It is everywhere recognized by both the missionary and the native preacher as the right arm of strength. The native Leaguers are intelligent, industrious, and faithful, and the work is growing. Our mission schools are centers of League activity and growth. In Miss Case's school at Guadalajara, and in Miss Norvell's wonderful school in the City of Mexico, I found the League co-extensive with the school attendance. Noble workers are those young men and young women to be who go out from amid these happy surroundings. At the League rally, held at the session of the Central Mexican Conference in our new church, fully four hundred young people and their friends attended, and listened with profound attention to the address of the General Secretary. At the Conference at Guadalajara much the same experience was had, except that the Conference was a joint one of the Leagues and the Endeavorers. The League is worth all it has cost the church, if only for the service it has rendered the work in Mexico. And so I finish my visit of a fortnight to this interesting country with the feeling that I have had a vision, and that Mexico has fully entered upon her new era of enlightenment, and that Protestantism is about to reap the fruits of long sowing and waiting.

Laredo, Feb. 13.

"GILDEROY" TALKS OF MRS. NATION.

I have been watching with intense interest the movements of Mrs. Carrie Nation in Kansas. I can not say that I approve her methods, but I do glory in her success. I doubt if her husband approves her course, if she has a husband, though he may have died of drink long ago. If she has sons, they hardly approve, but her sons may have gone to the grave by way of the "joints," or "blind-tigers," as we call them in Mississippi. If she has lost husband and sons in this way, I do not wonder at her rage and the madness of her methods. I am sorry for her, and I sympathize with her. She seems to be having success, and nothing succeeds like success.

The men of Kansas appear to be just like the men in Mississippi, about enforcing the law and having the law enforced. They are helpless fellows; they can't do anything; they don't know how, or make out like they don't. They don't try or, at least, they don't try hard. They don't know where the blind-tigers are, and don't know how to catch up with them. If one is caught, the men sign a petition to the court to deal gently with him. The men, nearly all of them, believe in moderation and mild moral snasion in dealing with blind-tigers and whisky-joint managers.

If a rabid dog or a mad bull were loose in any one of our towns or villages, the men would all know what to do, and they would do it at once. They would get the women and children off of the streets, and they would put the rabid animal out of the way. Blind-tigers and joints can run all day and all night, and the men deplore evil, but do not know what to do.

Some of the men know where the joints and blind-tigers are, and they know what could be done and what ought to be done, but they don't do it. They are afraid of injuring business, of losing trade, of building up a rival town where whisky is sold. This is an artful, but false suggestion of the devil. Some men, some members of our churches, are more concerned about making dollars than they are about saving boys. If they can bag the cash, all the boys can go to the bed. Their own boys and their neighbors' boys know where the joints and blind-tigers are, and while their fathers are counting the cash, the sons are sipping the poison-one juice.

It was just this state of affairs in Kansas that made the work of Mrs. Nation possible and necessary. The men would not act, or did not act, and so it was left to a woman to kill the rabid dog and chain up the mad bull. If the men of Kansas do not like her methods, they have the legal way in their own hands. Anyway the men have been waked up before the burning house tumbled in on them. Some men are hard to wake. It requires a cyclone or an earthquake to arouse them. If Mrs. Nation can get the men of Kansas aroused, she will have done a great work. They ought not to have left this work for her to do, and they have no right to blame her methods unless they are willing to do this work.

I have met a few men in Mississippi who, like myself, sympathize with Mrs. Nation, and rejoice in her success. The large majority of our men think she is out of her place, is doing an unwomanly thing, or that she is crazy. The large majority of our women, our mothers, daughters, wives, sisters, glory in the courage and work of Mrs. Nation in Kansas, and hundreds of them, who are sad and heart-broken over drunken or drinking sons, husbands and brothers, wish Mrs. Nation would come to Mississippi and kill out a few of our blind tigers with her famous hatchet. Our men could do this if they would, but they don't do it. Our women may have to arm themselves with hatchets and do for our blind tigers what Mrs. Nation is doing for Kansas joints.

They don't went to do this, and they won't do it if the men will be manly men and see that the law is enforced. It breaks the hearts of our women to see their husbands, sons and brothers going down to ruin through these dens of infamy that are outlawed on our statute books. I could not blame them if they were to rise in revolt. GILDEROY.

LIQUOR SELLING IN MISSISSIPPI.

EDITOR OF CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: I note that it is stated in the report of the North Mississippi Conference on temperance "that there are only about seven or eight counties in the State where whisky is sold legally;" and that "it is our firm conviction that the day is not far distant when our State will be rid of this terrible evil."

There are now thirteen "wet" counties in Mississippi, as follows: Adams, Hancock, Harrison, Issaquena, Jackson, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Quitman, Tunica, Warren, Washington, Wilkinson. Of these Hancock, Issaquena, Jefferson, Tallahatchie were once "dry." This report I have from the Secretary of State's office, therefore deem it correct, though I am told by the clerk of the latter county that it was never dry until the election last August.

While I concur with all that is hopeful in the report above referred to, I very much fear we are slipping back" in our temperance record. About five years ago there were only nine "wet" counties. Social habits in the larger towns of late seem to become more convivial, if report is true, and the record of the jug trade at Christmas time was truly awful. Jugs blocked the railway platforms in such numbers as to be commented on by travelers. At one little town, of not over seven hundred inhabitants, the day before Christmas was sold $800 worth of drinks at one of its two saloons. In a place, too small almost to find, two miles distant, one saloon at the same time sold $600 worth, and its other saloon sent out jugs to the amount of $2,500, it is said, within the five days before Christmas. What must have been the figures of sale at Natchez, Vicksburg, Canton, Aberdeen?

Thirteen "wet" counties are practically defying and annulling prohibitory law in sixty-two "dry" counties; the minority of one-sixth setting at naught the great Christian majority (five-sixths), that has by its vote outlawed the liquor traffic. There is ample protection against the "blind-tiger," which is everywhere over the State, in the Dinsmore law, but men do not or will not enforce it. When W. C. T. U. and other women try to secure writs for its protection, the men—even temperance men of their families—tell them, "Yes, you'll have me brought home to you dead some day!"

What remedy is there for all this except in State prohibition? It would at least dry up our thirteen "wet" spots.

In my judgment, the very worst, most demoralizing thing we have in Mississippi is the apathy with which men who have voted out the saloon quietly submit to the blind tigers, for if these Christian temperance men maintain a conspiracy of inactivity, in whom is there hope?

THE SOUL'S IDEAL.

The beauties of heaven, like the beauties of nature, are only revealed to the eye that hath vision. We dwell in the midst of undiscovered beauty. The beautiful is but the garments of deity. The beautiful is only seen through the intelligence and appreciated through the soul. God and nature are only beautiful to man. The beasts have no conception of beauty. Man alone, who can study nature, and see nature's beauty, can love nature. The heart loves nought but the beautiful, whether it be real or imaginary; hence the object of all love is beautiful. The soul has its ideal, and worships at no other shrine. Christ is "the fairest among ten thousand and altogether lovely;" hence the innumerable hosts of worshipers. As Christ's character was his "garments wherewithal he was clothed," so is our character our garments. Character, like cloth, is tested by the wear. Character is always true to its self. Men is what he is; he may deceive for awhile, but finally "the cloven foot will out." Character is what we are. Reputation is what others say about us. Character is vulnerable, yet it defies the powers of earth and hell. Character belongs to us; we make it just what it is, and can do with it just as we please. Reputation is vulnerable, yet it is in the hands of others, and they can do with it just as they please. Generally character and reputation go hand in hand. If a man is good, his reputation is also good, and vice versa. Where there is no love there is no law; where there is no law there is no obedience. Loyalty is the highest expression of law. Anarchy is the child of hate. To be just and wise requires an earnest effort; to be a fool is to reverse this—the latter is accomplished without effort. A self-conceited man sees his ideal of man in the mirror. Humility is the true guardian of greatness and wisdom.—Pacific Advocate.

The colored sunset and the starry heavens, the beautiful mountains and the shining sea, the fragrant woods and the painted flowers, are not half so beautiful as a soul that is serving Jesus out of love, in the wear and tear of common, unpoetical life.—F. W. Faber.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The M. E. Church has organized three churches in the Philippines. Thus Protestantism takes root where the seed are well planted.

Rev. E. A. Tilly, a member of our missionary force in Brazil, is in the United States, and just now is doing good work around Bristol, Tenn.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, the great missionary to the submerged tenth of London, has accepted the presidency of the Temperance Crusade Movement in connection with the Free Churches.

Rev. L. C. Craig, for several years a member of the White River Conference, located last year. Recently he has taken another step: withdrawn from our ministry and membership, and organized an independent Association of his own called the Church of Christ. He has gained about as much as the man who left the Church of Christ and joined the Christian Church.

In answer to inquiring brethren, we will say: The Minutes of the Mississippi Conference are not published at the ADVOCATE office. Please write to the secretary, Rev. J. A. B. Jones, Gloster, Miss.

Rev. J. W. Chambers, writing from McComb City, Miss., says: "McComb City Methodism is getting ready for the Sunday-school Conference. We anticipate a great meeting, and trust that you will be able to favor us with your presence."

In far-away Meridian, Idaho, Rev. J. M. Turner has been blessed with a revival; forty-nine conversions and thirty-five added to the church. At last accounts he was engaged in a gracious work at McMelen, with signs of success.

Under the very shadow of the Vatican, Protestantism flourishes. Bishop Vincent, of the M. E. Church, recently dedicated a magnificent building, the Young Woman's College in Rome. His visit to the city made a profound impression.

The demand for larger and better quarters for our church at Alameda, Cal., is imperative, and the pastor, Bro. McWhorter, has taken steps to build a new church. He has interested his leading men, and hopes to have the building ready by the coming Conference.

It is said that "a case is being tried in a Spanish high court in Madrid, Spain, brought by Senora Ubao to recover possession of her daughter, who was spirited away to a Jesuit convent during her sickness. Two thousand anti-Jesuits are interesting themselves in the case."

The Raleigh Christian Advocate says that the new library building at Trinity College, in North Carolina, the gift of Mr. J. B. Duke, will be, when finished, the finest building of its kind in the Southern States. It will be fitted and equipped for a library of 100,000 volumes. The State Library contains only 20,000 volumes.

The organ of the Holston Conference says: "Representatives of Holston's Board of Education recently had a meeting in Main Street Methodist Church, Bristol. A preacher was appointed in each presiding elder's district to specially represent and help to push the Century Movement for Education." Holston is always to the front.

From private sources we learn that another of our important churches in the Los Angeles Conference is soon to go on the "free list." One by one the shackles are being broken, and daylight and liberty are ahead. Churches all out of debt and no more taxes to pay, what ought we not accomplish in our domestic mission work?—Pacific Advocate.

We are under obligation to Rev. G. W. Bachman for copies of the printed Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference. The work, both editorial and mechanical—the one done by Bro. Bachman, and the other by the News Job Office, Jackson, Miss.—is creditable. Persons desiring copies will address Bro. Bachman at Winona, Miss.

Rev. D. W. Carter, of the Holston Conference, and superintendent of our mission field in Cuba, recently dedicated the first Protestant Church on the island of Cuba at Matarasa. The Havana Post gives a long account of the interesting ceremony. There were present many American military officers and civilians, besides some of the most prominent Cubans.—Midland Methodist.

The ladies of Centenary Church, Richmond, Va., have established a "coffee house." They propose to serve it by the cup, with a sandwich, or sell it by the pint, quart, or gallon, to those who desire to use it at home. This will, doubtless, keep many a poor fellow from the saloon, and the hot coffee will be much better for him than liquor, and a great deal cheaper. Coffee houses might be established in all our cities with profit.

THE CUBAN CONSTITUTION

Another delicate matter our Government has to deal with is the pacification of Cuba. The trouble now is concerning a suitable constitution. The question of independence is a settled one. The United States is committed, and can not honorably deny the island what has been promised. But questions involving the issues of the fight for independence and self-government the United States will determine. The Cubans are now trying to frame a constitution, and many intelligent men are of the opinion that so far the Americans have not manifested that degree of statesmanship necessary to self-government. In some points the constitution is regarded as fatally defective. We presume not to speak with assurance. The Brooklyn Eagle, which thinks the Constitutional Convention has been in too much of a rush, advises as follows: For how large a number the Eagle speaks we do not know. We quote not to endorse, but to show the trend of thought. The Eagle says: "As the policy of Cuban politicians is to go fast, that of American statesmen should be to go slow. For men to carry a copy of our constitution in their pockets and a little American flag in their hands does not in them the self-government mean. For self-government is the only cure that will not be a curse to Cuba. The country is the judge of the fitness of it—not Cuba—and conditions are what this country's judgment of the fitness will depend on, not our intentions. The genius of the country to allow to the people of Cuba government of their own contrivance and consent will not be broken; but it must be government; the contrivance must be wise; the consent must be intelligent as well as free. We owe to Cuba as well as to the world, for which we are responsible to Cuba, the duty of seeing that what ought to be is secured there, and that what ought not to be shall not be secured, merely because the movement for it has been crushed as in this instance."

THE TALKING CHINAMAN.

Minister Wu, the speech-making Chinaman, is likely to get into trouble on account of the use from one of his orations. He was invited recently to a public dinner at which Gen. Otis was to be the guest of honor. He declined the invitation. This he had a perfect right to do, but he seems to have stepped beyond the bounds of propriety in giving his reasons for declining. He very frankly and bluntly said that he could not sit down to a table with Gen. Otis, because, while Military Governor of the Philippines, he "committed an egregious error and did great injustice to the Chinese by introducing the Chinese exclusion act, which has stirred up race prejudice and done harm to those islands." This was virtually a criticism of the administration at Washington, for Gen. Otis acted in this matter, as he did in all matters of any consequence, under the immediate orders of the head of the administration." Other foreign ministers have rendered themselves odious for offenses no greater than Mr. Wu's, and he, like them, may be sent home against his will. This mistake, like others that Mr. Wu has made, may, as the Times-Democrat suggests, be overlooked by the authorities "probably for two reasons: (1) on account of the minister's general amiability and intelligence, and (2) because of his possible unacquaintance with the customs of this country. But he will have to mind his p's and q's in the future, or he will be sent home. For minister here are in readiness of the sort given here—that is to say, of course, good here—would not be taking in consideration of them. If, therefore, Wu continue to represent China at Washington, it will be in courtesy of the President and by the mercy of the very right."

THE DUTY OF THE PUBLIC PRESS

The settlement of religious questions in the Philippines seems to be in easy matter. The issues on the one hand, under the treaty between the United States and Spain, and the people on the other are to be reckoned with. The issues seem determined to most of us, and the people are desirous of getting out of their rule. The Presbyterian, looking at the matter, has this to say: "Our Government will have trouble with the issues if it does not recognize them. While it is known them the natives who regard them as the embodiment of Spanish despotism will not only be dissatisfied, but continue resistance. It was possibly ignoring and oppression that started and deepened opposition to Spain's domination, and back of the present insurrection is the fear that the people's old oppressors will be entrusted in their possession and become once more supreme. Roman Catholicism does not relish giving up its fat estates and special prerogatives in those distant islands, yet it must, if there is to be a permanent solution of the public school question as well as of the issue pertaining. Religious freedom and civil rights must be recognized if we are to maintain a wise, just and humane administration in harmony acquired by the Treaty of Paris. Protestantism must have equal recognition there with Rome. There should be no entanglement of affairs which violates the principles of constitutional liberty as they obtain under the flag of the United States."

THE SITUATION IN CHINA.

The negotiations for peace between the foreign ministers of the powers and the Chinese envoys are dragging along as before. The point that is causing the trouble and delay just at present is the matter of the punishment of the princes who instigated or took a leading part in the outrages committed on the foreign ministers and foreign residents. One day fifteen, other days twelve, is the number of princes whose execution is demanded by the powers; and it is probable that the smaller number, twelve, is correct. Two of the number anyway have already met death; and the chances are that a compromise will be reached with regard to the punishment of two or three of the others. All things considered, it will be astonishing if the negotiations do not last into and through the Summer.—Times-Democrat.

SNEAK LEGISLATION.

In the army reorganization bill just passed by both Houses of Congress, it was specially provided that officers of volunteers who served in the line should be eligible to promotion in the staff departments. This was according to the desire and purpose of the Secretary of War and the committees from the two Houses having the bill in charge. The bill met the hearty approval of the higher officers. For final adjustment it went to a Conference Committee. In this committee the bill was changed, and the purpose of the Secretary of War and the committees in charge was defeated by inserting a clause which shuts the door to all promotion from the line to the staff departments. Under the operation of this clause, which was put in the bill in the interest of a few officers of the line who prefer the staff, the most valuable material for staff officers in the line will be debarred. It does seem that such unwarranted interference with legislation ought to be exposed, and it appears that a few persons and in the interest long to matter have influence enough to prevent it. The army is demoralized enough already. The true interest of the service demands that the line of promotion from the line to the staff departments shall remain open

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT.

DEAR BROTHER BOSWELL: All the preachers of the Brookhaven district are now at their posts, and are hard at work, full of cheer and full of conrage, a loyal and consecrated band of men. Our motto for this year of grace is, "All assessments paid in full, and a thousand souls for Christ." Yours cordially,

B. F. JONES.

Feb. 8, 1901.

FLORA, MISS.

Rev. Geo. H. Thompson: "We have been kindly received at Flora, and the prospect is brightening. Brownsville Church has been transferred to the Edwards circuit. We have improved our parsonage to the amount of one hundred dollars, and are now planning to recover the house and add a new room. Bro. W. E. Harris is behind the enterprise, and that guarantees success. Blessings on the ADVOCATE and its editor."

HARPERSVILLE CIRCUIT

EDITOR ADVOCATE: I have completed my first round and started on the second on the Harpersville circuit (formerly the Hillsboro circuit). The people have received me cordially, and express great satisfaction that I was sent to serve them (as they had to give up Bro. O'Neal, whom they loved very much). I have eight churches to serve; have traveled 207 miles; made twenty-five pastoral visits, preached eleven sermons, and married two couples. I hope to have a good year. Pray for me.

Your brother in Christ,

IRVIN MILLER.

Feb. 7, 1901.

FROM LEAKSVILLE, MISS.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: At our last Annual Conference I was eagerly listening at the names of, first, one appointment, and then another, as they were being called out by the beloved Bishop, and the names of the different preachers were called out as pastors of these appointments, and I began to wonder at the immensity of the work that was to be done, the number of souls that would be saved, the amount of good to be accomplished. What a grand and glorious work we are all engaged in! Then the question arose with me, Are we prepared for the work? or, in other words, Am I prepared for the responsibility that is on me as a pastor? My! my! what sadness comes over me when, after all, some people seem determined to go to ruin in spite of all our warning, praying, and the quoting of the many promises to the sinner, if he will but turn and seek the Lord. Brethren, let us pray; pray for me, that I may be better equipped for the work of my blessed Lord and Master.

In the judgment of the Bishop and his cabinet, they saw fit to return your humble scribe to the same work for the second year, which, of course, I accepted with pleasure. I returned to my work, arriving on Saturday before the first Sunday in January, after swimming "Dog River," coming out dry-shod, arriving at Bro. Calvert Breland's about one o'clock. Then, walking a distance of nine miles, I made it to Leaksville, and made haste to get ready for my first Sunday appointment, at which time I was greeted by a large congregation. I have finished my first month's tour, and I find everything in fair shape for a good year again. I am planning for a better year's work than last.

On Feb. 2 and 3 our presiding elder, Bro. Guice, was with us in his usual power, and did some good preaching, notwithstanding he was troubled some with a cold and sore throat. The hearers expressed themselves as being delighted with such good sermons. The Lord bless him, and make him a great power in the land for good.

The Quarterly Conference was very well attended. The stewards agreed to make the preacher's salary $300, which is a little better than last year. We raised the Bishop's Fund in full—$4. The stewards reported at this Quarterly Conference for preacher in charge and presiding elder only $8.75. So you see we preachers—if all are like this one—are not hoarding up great piles of money, as some falsely accuse. I guess we get more than we deserve, anyhow.

The Lord bless the editor, and help him in his arduous labors. Pray for me. W. L. BLACKWELL.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

GREENVILLE, MISS.

Rev. S. B. Myers, our pastor at Greenville, Miss., writes as follows: "The work moves off nicely, and we could ask for no more cordial reception than was given us by this charge. Congregations are fine, and the prospect for a good year is encouraging."

DURANT, MISS

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I will give you a few dots from Durant, North Mississippi Conference. We held watch-night service, and collected $65 for the Twentieth Century Fund. Since Conference our people have settled a parsonage debt of about $550, and have raised the assessment for their pastor to more than ever before, and their custom is to pay everything in full, which, you know, is gratifying, to those concerned at least. Our Sunday-school and prayer meetings have taken on new life. Fine congregations wait on the ministry of the Word. Some join the church nearly every Sunday, and the people say they expect a successful year. The Lord grant it to us. The people love to say kind things about Bro. Augustus, who has just closed a four-years' term of service with them, and is now presiding elder of the Holly Springs district. We enjoy the ADVOCATE, and wish you much success.

Yours in the Lord,

J. H. SMITH.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Rev. J. A. Parker writes: "We are almost out of debt at Marksville, and will soon be ready for a dedication. Our people built a neat, commodious house of worship there three years ago, but no organization was effected till last Fall. Debt demoralizes all it touches. We are getting straight now, and hope for success."

BOYCE, LA.

Rev. D. E. Kelly writes: "The people of Boyce gave us a most cordial reception. I have been in my new field only one month, and while I have had various domestic duties to look after, and the weather yet bad, I have made 78 pastoral visits. The outlook is bright for a happy year's work for our Lord."

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

Rev. J. D. Harper, presiding elder, writes as follows: "I have nearly finished one round, and find the pastors hard at work, and planning for a year of successful labor in the Master's cause, and, despite bad weather and some other hindrances, have made a good beginning, and we expect a general advance on all lines of church work. Success to you and the ADVOCATE. We will push the canvass for subscribers."

FROM BUNKIE, LA.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: The church at this place has been wonderfully blessed. The Rev. C. B. Stronse has just concluded a very successful meeting, and several new names were added to the roll of the army of the Lord. I do not see how people in full possession of their senses can sit, time after time, and listen to the powerful exhortations of this wonderful man, and not see the danger of their position, and be constrained to change from a life of sin and misery to that life of joy and peace which only a clean conscience can bring. This earnest and zealous man is giving his whole life to the service of the Master. The good he has accomplished in the town of Bunkie and the surrounding community can never be fully known and appreciated, because he has sown good seeds that will bear rich harvests for years to come.

We have a good, thriving Sunday-school, with a large and appreciative attendance, owing to the earnest and intelligent effort of our superintendent and teachers. We have prayer meeting every Wednesday night, but I can not say that it is a great success. There is a lack of that zeal and earnestness that characterizes the Sunday-school, and is such a factor in its success. There is some good material here, however, and I feel hopeful that we will succeed in enlisting the interest of the good people, and that the proper effort will be made for the establishment of a good, live prayer meeting.

FRED.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT PREACHERS' INSTITUTE.

The Preachers' Institute for the Meridian district was held at Enterprise, Feb. 6 and 7, in compliance with the summons of the presiding elder, Rev. G. A. Guice.

Notwithstanding the unpropitious weather, it was a delightful and profitable occasion; and the few brethren who did not, or could not, attend have no idea how much they missed; not least among the enjoyments being the royal entertainment provided by the people of Enterprise.

The programme, as published in the ADVOCATE, was carried out, papers being read, addresses delivered, and free discussion indulged in. But the most enjoyable feature of the meeting was the 'Question Hour," introduced on motion of Rev. H. M. Ellis. During the first hour of each session, any brother was at liberty to put any practical question to the body, and such subjects were discussed as: "The Apportioning of Time to Study and Pastoral Work," "What Books to Read," "What Is Pastoral Visiting?" "What Are the Ethics of the Ministry?" etc.

The following brethren preached with much acceptability and profit: Revs. J. M. Weems, R. H. Barr, J. T. Nicholson and F. B. Ormond.

The institute was an unqualified success, and our thanks are due to Bro. Guice for calling it, and for taking steps for its perpetuation by appointing a committee on programme for next year.

A. T. BELL, Secretary.

If a man has fixed his happiness on anything lower than the stars, less stable than the heavens, less sufficient than God, there comes a time, sooner or later, when it passes from him, or he from it. Do not venture the rich freightage of your happiness in flimsy vessels. If you do, be sure that somewhere or other, before your life is ended, the poor, frail craft will strike on some black rock rising sheer from the depths, and will grind itself to chips there.—Alexander McLaren.

"The best club a man can join is composed of himself, wife, and a little child." Amen to this bit of sentiment and sense put forth in connection with a remarkably valuable series of papers on "The Family," read at the recent Connecticut General Conference.

No man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, pure, and good without the world being the better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of this goodness.—Phillips Brooks.

RISKS

Are run by every woman who has household cares. It is so easy just to run out of the warm house into the fresh air, to pin a piece of lace to the clothes line. It is also easy to take cold in doing so. Then perhaps comes suppression and kindred evils. Whenever there is any disturbance of the normal womanly function Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription may be relied upon to re-establish perfect health. It is strictly a temperance medicine, containing no alcohol or whisky, neither opium, cocaine nor other narcotic.

"Several years ago I suffered severely from female weakness, prolapsus and menorrhagia, and used 'Favorite Prescription' with splendid effect," writes Fannie Shallen, of Washington, Iowa. "Glad I have not needed it for a few years past but if I should have a return of the old trouble would surely try 'Favorite Prescription.' I have recommended it to a number of my lady friends. I always tell them to try a bottle and if they are not benefited by it I will pay for the medicine. In every case they have spoken in praise of it."

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Consistent with its policy to constantly improve its service, the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad is now relaying its track between New Orleans and Slidell, a distance of twenty-nine miles, with new steel rails, weighing seventy-five pounds to the yard.

The entire line has been ballasted in the most approved manner from end to end, and, notwithstanding the increased price of steel, two-thirds of the entire mileage has been relaid with 75-pound new steel rails, and the balance of the line will be relaid as rapidly as the material can be procured.

These improvements are not only an indication of the prosperous condition of the property, but an assurance of safety and comfort to travelers.

The entire Queen and Crescent system, of which the New Orleans and Northeastern forms a part, is now a thoroughly up-to-date system of railroads running the very best equipment in the most modern style.

TEACHERS' BUREAU.

The Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has, under paragraph 615 of our Discipline, established a TEACHERS' BUREAU. The purpose of this Bureau is the advancement of Christian Education. We propose to do our best to secure for the graduates of our institutions, and for other competent persons, positions in our schools and colleges; but we guarantee a position to nobody. Applications for positions will be furnished, upon request, with our application form, which will explain itself. Since the making of money is not the purpose of our Bureau, we will make our recommendations with the greatest possible care. Presidents of our schools and colleges, and Boards of Trustees seeking teachers, will do well to apply to us. The facilities of the Board for this work are unusual. We have a constituency, preachers and laymen, of one million and a half. We request the pastors throughout our Connection to advertise this Bureau, and to notify us of any vacancy in any school, secular or Christian, as soon as it occurs. By so doing they will greatly aid us in promoting Christian education. Address Rev. J. D. Hammond, Gen. Sec., Nashville, Tenn.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1901.

We hope the good sister who corrects her disobedient children by making them read the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has found that the punishment entirely meets the ends of justice, and will keep the rod always in easy reach, provided she does not borrow it of her neighbor. Such an instrument of punishment ought to be paid for in advance at regular rates. The price of the ADVOCATE is two dollars a year, and cheap at that, if it helps a good mother to rear her children.

The amount of poverty and misery in a great city on account of drink is unknown to the outside world. Much of it is brought about by what men call moderate drinking. Thousands of clever people labor under the delusion that liquor in some form is necessary to health, if not to their existence. They begin moderately, but never learn where moderation ends. And liquor used even moderately will consume all the profits of an ordinary wage-earner, and before he is aware of it, both his profits and the money necessary to his family living are sunk in the tills of the liquor dealer. He would have been better off had he given his money to the flames.

Dr. W. F. Crafts, the active Secretary of the Reform Bureau, is now seeking to influence Congress to withhold appropriation to the coming St. Louis Exposition, or World's Fair, except on condition that the gates are closed on Sunday and the sale of liquors excluded. As a matter of course, a howl is raised, and it is noised around that if such conditions are imposed, the death knell of the Fair will be sounded. A beer-drinking community, it is said, "must have beer." Alas! that is true, but the drinkers are not obliged to attend the Fair to get it. There will be plenty close by to satisfy all demands. If selling beer and keeping open on Sunday are necessary to the life of the Exposition, let it die.

The War Department, according to news from Washington, has issued an order to carry into effect the law of Congress in regard to the sale of liquors at army posts, military reservations, etc. The order holds officers commanding strictly responsible for enforcing the law. We wonder what Attorney-General Griggs was doing that he did not nullify the law by interpretation. It is no clearer or more positive than the law enacted by the last Congress. We rather suspect that Mr. Griggs and the beer brewers have seen a hand-writing on the wall that they did not see a year ago. Public sentiment still holds sway, and forces even high officials to do their duty.

LET BROTHERLY LOVE CONTINUE.

If such an exhortation had not been necessary, the inspired writer would not have directed it to the Hebrews. The supposition is that, as Christians, they were in love one with another. They loved as members of the same family, and felt fully identified with each other's interest. We do not understand that the identity of interest was such as necessarily required a community of goods, but it is certain that in the early days of Christianity the membership thought it necessary to the general welfare to put their property at the disposal of the church. This was best accomplished by selling it and giving the proceeds, which they did not hesitate to do. This, though not enjoined, was a practical demonstration of their spiritual kinship—a kinship stronger than the tie of blood.

Observe, this sale of property, and putting of the proceeds into a general treasury, was because of the prevailing distress. The Christians were not only poor, but they were persecuted. The only way to do was for the stronger to help the weak. How long this practice was kept up is not stated. We naturally infer that when conditions changed the necessity for the general distribution ceased. At any rate, it was not kept up. But the love for each other as brethren never grew cold. It could not, unless first they ceased to love Christ.

Brotherly love is manifested in several ways. One way is by standing ready always to help each other—if need be, to make sacrifices for this purpose. God requires a man to place everything he has on the altar—not only his body and soul, but his estate. This latter is necessary to the spread of the gospel and the relief of the poor. God does not see fit always to use the whole amount of a man's possessions. But he demands its surrender, so that in case it is needed it may be forthcoming. He always needs and calls for a portion; sometimes he calls for and takes all. And one of the sublimest evidences of brotherly love is found in the readiness of good men to surrender all in case of need. One who fills his life with good deeds has nothing to regret when disaster or death overtakes him. Job was as happy in the midst of his poverty and suffering as he had ever been in the height of his prosperity. The reason was, when he had riches he used them for the good of his fellow-men. He was "a father to the fatherless, and made the widow's heart sing for joy." He "washed his steps with butter." It is not so with churlish and uncharitable men. In times of trouble and adversity they repine, and charge God foolishly. No pleasant memories abide with them. They are destitute of brotherly love.

Another way of showing brotherly love is by "preferring one another in honor." This spirit is the very reverse of that which prompts a man to take "the highest seat at a feast," or to push himself to the front in place of a better qualified man. The divine injunction is: "Let each esteem others better than himself." When this feeling enters and possesses the soul, the man stands ready to give honor to another and to take for himself a less honorable place. Destitute of the spirit, he is ambitious and place-seeking, and will sometimes carry his point at the expense of his brethren. If he fails, he becomes envious and jealous, often sour and censorious, thus showing disappointment and bad temper to his own hurt and hurt of the cause of God.

If among one class above another there should be a greater show of brotherly love, it ought to be among preachers. But, alas! as there were strifes and contentions, and envyings and jealousies among the Corinthians, so there is to-day among preachers—not to a great extent, we are happy to believe. But as one dead fly spoils a whole pot of ointment, so one unhappy and ambitious preacher can make a whole body offensive. This is the case when a man, by any sort of manipulation, takes the place of a brother or secures it for a friend, or, failing to carry his point, shows the temper of a man of the world.

We have heard of cliques and rings in Annual Conferences. We never belonged to anything of the kind—never attended a meeting that had the semblance of a ring. We can not even certify that an organization of that character ever existed in any Conference, but we do know that good brethren often indulge the idea that the influence of certain men is exerted against them, and that they are the victims of discrimination. They feel that they are not treated as brethren. No man should indulge such a feeling without the clearest proof. If any are guilty of such unbrotherly conduct, let him put himself in the place of his less fortunate fellow, and know how it feels to be worked against in secret, and then let him repent. Let us continue in brotherly love!

THE MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Missionary Conference, to be held in this city in April, will be the greatest meeting ever held among Southern Methodists. It will be second only in importance to the organization of Episcopal Methodism in 1784. The coming together of one thousand delegates and more, besides invited guests, is something to arrest the attention of the whole church, and to cause every man to cry out, Why such a gathering? The indication is, considering the massacre of so many missionaries in China, and the threatened expulsion of all foreigners from the land, that the Holy Spirit is working mightily in the church, and seeking to prepare the people of God for the conquest of the world to Christ.

The prophecy of men, the wish being father to the thought, to the effect that mission work among the heathen would cease, has failed. Among Southern Methodists the first indication that faith in the work had not ceased was seen in the increase of collections in some of our Conferences. The next was in the purpose of the church to "come together for to consider this matter"—to survey the whole field, to hear from the representatives of every department, and to determine the condition and needs of each. The results will be far-reaching. The church at home and the heathen abroad will feel the effects. Let every member pray for the Conference.

Of course, men who have most knowledge of the work will be present and give the Conference the benefit of their observation and experience. If any who are expected to be present and to take part in the work fail to be on hand, it will prove not only a disappointment, but thwart, in a large measure, the purpose of the Conference. The gathering will be incomplete without the presence of Bishop Wilson, fresh from China; without Bishop Hendrix, who has not been long from Brazil; without Bishop Key, who has just finished his round of Conferences in Mexico. The whole church will be disappointed if Bishop Candler, with his Georgia enthusiasm, should fail to come and stir the body in the interest of Cuba. Besides these, missionaries who have worked and suffered will be here to tell the tale of struggle and triumph for themselves. And famous men, and noble women not a few, from far and near, who know "what Israel ought to do," will be here to advise and exhort and stir the church.

How can any man, appointed delegate to such a meeting, stay away if he has health and strength sufficient for the trip, and can bear his expenses without embarrassment? The honor of membership in such a body and the profit to be derived should inspire every one to make a sacrifice, if need be, to fill his place. New Orleans is a good place for such a gathering, and the weather during the month of April, unless it is exceptional, will be all that anybody can reasonably ask. Let us get ready, and may the Lord, as of old, send upon us the promise of the Father.

DO SOUTHERN PEOPLE KNOW THE NEGRO?

If the only negro that the Southern whites are acquainted with is the "ante-bellum negro," as is claimed by a correspondent of the New York Christian Advocate, then indeed is their acquaintance with the race very limited, for only a few of the old-time negroes remain. Since the war the negroes have increased from about six millions to ten millions. The great majority now, as then, live in the South, and are entirely dependent on the Southern whites for employment. The negro who owns his home and is not under the necessity of looking to white men for land to work, or for employment in one form or another, is an exception. In towns and cities many own little homes on the outskirts or the back streets, but even these would be perfectly helpless but for employment by white people as porters, teamsters, cooks, and day-laborers in a dozen different lines of work. Under the circumstances, to say that the Southern people are not acquainted with the negro of to-day is little less than marvelous. At least one-half of the Southern people now living know nothing of the negro as he was before the war. It is the present-day negro that he knows—and he knows him to perfection—not only his nature and habits of life, but his good points and his weak ones. And he knows how to deal with him.

Maybe it is a fact that Southern whites do not know the negro aristocracy—perhaps the only class of negroes that Northern people are well acquainted with. But these are by no means representatives of the race. They do not belong to the common people. They hold themselves as much above the ordinary negro as the white millionaires do above their poor next-door neighbors. Now and then, as it is among the whites, a few are found striving to elevate their fellows. These come together in conventions and conferences, from long distances and vast areas of territory, but not in great crowds. Some of our Northern friends visit these conventions, hear the speaking and the singing—both of high order—and from these conventions form their ideas of the negro race as a whole. They are miserably deceived.

The negroes are harmless and inoffensive — the best-humored people on the earth, easily satisfied, but as a class are thriftless, and where not positively lazy, always need some one to direct their energies. If they could be kept from under the influence of whisky and boss-politicians, they would give the country no trouble.

If Northern correspondents who visit conventions would get out into the country and learn something of the colored brothers and sisters as they are in their cabins, they would not write as they do. They would find that the Southern whites know the negro of to-day as well as their fathers knew the ante-bellum type.

CONTEMPT FOR LAW.

Dr. Gilbert, of the Western Christian Advocate, Cincinnati, is justly indignant over the burning of the negro in Kansas, and takes occasion to call attention to the reckless disregard of law which he says "portends anything but good for our nation." In this we quite agree with him, but when he says "there has been no conspicuous breakdown in the machinery of our courts," and that "it can not be truthfully alleged that judges and juries have failed to do their duty," we beg leave to differ. So far as punishing lynchers is concerned, we feel free to say that judges and juries can not punish them until the machinery of the courts is put in motion and brings the lynchers to trial. This everybody knows the machinery can not do. "Before hanging there is catching," and before catching and holding there must be proof beyond reasonable doubt. But in Kansas there are other forms of lawlessness which the machinery of the courts could have stopped long since had it been put in operation. We allude to the open and notorious nullification of the prohibitory law of the State. This it seems neither judges nor juries, nor sheriffs nor constables, nor district attorneys ever gave any thought. Certainly they made no attempt to arrest and punish the nullifiers. If we are not mistaken, lynchers are inflamed with liquor. And we would not be surprised some day to learn that the Kansas mob was fired by whisky brought into the State and sold contrary to law. Whether so or not, the State authorities, from the highest to the lowest, cognizant of the disregard and violation of the law, have closed their eyes and allowed the vendors of liquor openly and flagrantly to show their contempt for the law. The peace, honor, and law-abiding spirit of the land is to be maintained by punishing law-breakers. But if one class is allowed all liberty, we need not be surprised if other classes guilty of greater crimes claim exemption from the penalties of the law. When law-breakers of all kinds come to know that their crimes will be punished, contempt for law will cease.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

A movement to establish and endow a chair to be known as The Students' Chair of Biblical Theology and English Exegesis in Vanderbilt University was begun in 1895. The promoters of the enterprise have steadily worked at it all along, but not with that success which it deserves. Dr. Tillett, Dean of the Theological Faculty, has recently sent out a circular showing the amount of cash and pledges up to date. The cash amounts to $10,965; cash and pledges, including interest, $24,966.65. This amount is totally inadequate. Much more ought to be contributed forthwith. Mr. Samuel Cupples, of St. Louis, has agreed to give $50,000, provided the church at large will raise $100,000 additional by June, 1902. It will be seen from these figures that the church must raise more than $75,000 in order to secure the amount promised by Mr. Cupples. Whatever is given between now and the first of January, 1902, will be counted on the Twentieth Century Fund. Surely the church will respond to the call. We can, and we ought to raise the money.

AN EXCITED CITY.

At this writing New Orleans circles, commercial and social, are in a great fever—one to make money, the other to have fun. The Mardi Gras festival is on. Protestants, in common with Roman Catholics, take a lively interest in it, not because of any religious significance, but because the social and business interests are so united that what concerns one, concerns all. Crowds of people come from all sections, and perforce every merchant and all who trade must take part and secure a share of the harvest. The crowds are good natured, and the fun is said to be immense. Trade is swelled for a few days, but it is doubted by some intelligent citizens whether, in the long run, the city gets pay for the trouble and expense in preparing for the show. Railroad and street car companies, hotels, restaurants and saloons are the chief beneficiaries. The churches derive no benefit at all. The festivities tend rather to demoralization than to the lifting up of the spiritual life of the people. We doubt if the Romanists themselves derive any spiritual benefit from the Carnival. The forty days of Lent which follow may possibly result in restoring the spiritual tone of the revelers. As to that we can not say. We are sure, though, that the days of the Carnival, and the few weeks just in advance, are not favorable to growth in grace.

PERSONAL.

Rev. G. D. Parker, pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church, was unable on account of an attack of grip to fill his pulpit Sunday evening last. His place was supplied by Rev. C. D. Atkinson.

We beg pardon of Sister L. A. Flowers for prefixing "Rev." to her name a few weeks since in the ADVOCATE. She wrote a good article, and knowing no better, we simply inferred that it was written by a preacher.

Sunday last was quarterly meeting occasion at Parker Memorial Church. Dr. Keener, the presiding elder, was in place, and preached an excellent sermon at the morning hour. The congregation was both pleased and edified.

We thank Rev. N. G. Augustus, presiding elder of the Holly Springs district, for an invitation to attend the District Preachers' Meeting. We shall make an effort to be on hand. We would like much to mingle again with old friends.

We have received a cordial invitation, accompanied by a complimentary ticket, to attend the Seventeenth Session of the Florida Chautauqua, at DeFuniak Springs, which opens Feb. 14, and closes April 2. The programme indicates that the session will be full of interest.

A letter from Rev. E. S. Lewis, of the North Mississippi Conference, brings the sad intelligence of the affliction of his wife. We trust, under the skillful treatment of her physician and the blessing of God, she may be speedily restored to health. Bro. Lewis is doing well in his charge.

We had a pleasant visit last week from Bro. R. A. Magruder, of Hattiesburg, Miss. He is an intelligent Christian gentleman and much interested in the work of the church. He is staying a while in the city, hoping to recuperate his health, which has not been good for some weeks.

Rev. W. D. Burroughs, of the North Mississippi Conference, was in poor health a great part of last year. We have notes from two brethren informing us that he is still feeble; indeed, that he was quite sick last week, but had improved somewhat. Let us all remember our brother in prayer. May the great Head of the church spare his valuable life!

We had the pleasure of meeting, on Monday last, Dr. T. J. Upton and his son, of Amite City. The Doctor was suffering some from the effects of the grip, but otherwise well and in good spirits. He reports everything around Amite as quiet, and that there has been no such excitement in the town and immediate vicinity as reported in the press dispatches.

We learn through private sources that Rev. T. W. Dye, presiding elder of the Durant district, is doing fine work. He is acceptable both as an officer and preacher. Bro. Dye's friends abroad will not be surprised at such news. He is one of our very best preachers, polished, strong, evangelical. He is a defender of the faith that the church is not afraid to trust.

OUR BISHOPS.

The fiscal year of our Bishops ends on the 1st of May, and we then make a final settlement with them for the year. They need the whole of their salaries to meet the legitimate and necessary demands upon them, and could it not be conveniently paid by the church? Ours is a loyal church, which loves and honors its chief pastors, and takes only pleasure in supporting them and the widows of deceased Bishops. The Conferences are all over, save one, and the preachers are in their fields of labor; we ask them, respectfully and kindly, to collect amounts assessed for Bishops' salary, and forward to the Treasurers of their Joint Boards of Finance, that they may send to us. We are expected to settle with all claimants in monthly installments, and it will require money to do that. Brethren, excuse the urgency of our appeal. Treasurers of Joint Boards will please remit all moneys now in their hands.

A CHEERING NOTE FROM HOUSTON.

MY DEAR DR. BOSWELL: The Houston and Wesley charge consists of three churches—Houston, Wesley and Houlka. In name, if not in its present form, it is one of the oldest charges in our Conference, running far back into the past century. The people are intelligent, cultured, social and moral.

The membership of our church here will compare favorably with the membership in any of our better charges. Houston is the county site of Chickasaw, and is easily one of the best interior towns in the State. While it is inaccessible and difficult to get to and from, once reached, it is a pleasant place to live in.

The people here have received us graciously, and in many ways continue to express their appreciation of and kindness to us, far more, possibly, than we deserve.

The last eve of the old year the parsonage was visited by a large donation party. Much, and quite a variety, of goods were brought by the smiling, happy children, young and old people. Our language is too feeble to express adequately our appreciation of the kindly, thoughtful spirit of the friends bursting out in this spontaneous way. God bless them every one. At half-past ten o'clock the entire party repaired to our church, where we enjoyed an old-time watch-night service. Some of our hearts were strangely warmed. Yes, it was good to be there. Our Official Board has very kindly and generously increased the pastor's salary one hundred dollars over last year's assessment. Our first quarterly meeting, recently held, was a success. The pastor reported ten additions to the church—several of these on profession of faith; the organization of a teachers' institute for the Sunday-school at Houston, which promises much good to the whole church. Our presiding elder, Bro. Woollard, had previously impressed himself favorably on the people, and in this last visit not only held what he had already won, but easily broadened and intensified it. He preaches well and serves the church faithfully.

In the name of our conquering Lord, we claim the victory.

LETTER FROM ST. LOUIS.

I have received letters from two friends in Southern California—one resident at Longbeach, on the sea-coast, and the other at Pasadena, in the same county. Both mention the death of Rev. R. W. Bailey, of the Mississippi Conference. From the letters I gather the following facts: He was reared in that section where his father's family now reside. More than ten years ago he was pastor of the Southern Methodist congregation in Pasadena, and was highly esteemed by the people whom he served. He transferred to the Mississippi Conference several years ago, he having married a lady from that State, whose name I do not have. Within the past year he went, by medical advice, to Colorado with his wife and two children, and where he was also attended by one of his sisters. Lately it was deemed best that all should go to his parental home at Longbeach, where he died Feb. 9, a week after his arrival there. His ailments were consumption and heart trouble. His body was to be buried at Wilmington, five miles from Longbeach, where he had lived in his younger years. The letter from "The Beach" speaks in exalted terms of the sisters of the deceased preacher, who had been specially kind to the sick son of the writer from that place. Ten years ago my wife spent a Winter at Pasadena, saw and heard much of Bro. Bailey, and has often spoken of him in high terms. On his way to Mississippi he called upon us at our home in St. Louis. My wife remembers him as an accomplished young man, always bright and cheerful in the social circle, and of much promise as a preacher.

P. A. JOHNSTON HOME FUND.

Previously reported	$11
Mrs. G., Lexington, Miss.	3
Rev. G. A. Guice	5
Total	$19

This much-needed fund is coming in slowly. Several of the brethren have informed me that they expected to contribute to this sacred cause, but I suppose they do not feel the necessity is immediate, and that any time in the near future will do. This may, or may not, be the case. It is possible that demand for payment may be made any day, and Bro. Johnston has not the $225—still due. He is very feeble, but full of faith in God and in the church, and it is sad to see the grand man perplexed over the title of a place to rest in the evening of his life.

NOTICE.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension of the Mississippi Conference will meet at 2 P. M. in the First Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., on Wednesday after the second Sabbath in March. The following constitute the Board: L. S. Jones, president, Port Gibson; A. F. Watkins, secretary, Brookhaven; T. A. Holloman, treasurer, Phœnix.

For blanks write to A. F. Watkins; to remit money write to T. A. Holloman, and for any information write to L. S. Jones.

We would urge all our preachers to bring the work of this Board prominently before their people.

DISTRICT STEWARDS.

BY N. A. MOTT.

Being a district steward, and somewhat familiar with their duties and responsibilities, I have formed some strong convictions along some lines on which I think district stewards fail, and think possibly a discussion of the subject in the ADVOCATE may be productive of good.

The chief duty with which district stewards are charged is to fix the salary of the presiding elder, and to apportion it, and the other assessments levied on their district, among the several circuits and stations. To do this equitably and justly, and with an eye single to the glory of God and the advancement of Christ's kingdom, should be their aim and prayer. They should so plan and so levy the assessments that no cause will suffer more than another, and that no assessment will be paid in full at the expense of another. The district stewards have no discriminating powers when it comes to the assessments on their district. It is their business to see that all of them are treated fairly. Of course, the ideal district is where all the assessments are paid in full. That a vast majority of the districts are always short is a matter of regret. That part of the blame for such a state of affairs lies at the door of the district stewards is what I contend.

A study of the reports of the various charges and districts in the Minutes of the different Conferences, so far as I have ever seen, reveals a curious state of affairs. There you will find the strongest churches, taking what is assessed for the pastor's salary as a basis, paying a larger percentage to the presiding elder and one or two favorite assessments, than they pay to others while the weaker churches are assessed lighter on these and heavier on the other assessments. If you take what is habitually paid on the pastor's salary as a basis, instead of what is assessed, the difference on some of the assessments is startling. If you take the financial standing of the different churches as a basis, the difference is yet far more startling.

Now, what is the cause? I have never attended a meeting of the district stewards but what some good brother would pull out a scheme for the assessments. Another good brother in the secret would at once move its adoption, and should anyone venture a protest, the friends of the scheme say: "Sh-h-h-h! If we don't adopt this, we will be kept here all day." Several of us have to spend two nights and a day and several dollars to attend the meetings, and it is discouraging to the stewards to attend, and is neither gratifying to our vanity nor soothing to our feelings to have the business all cut and dried for us, and to hear such an excuse for rushing it through. The only gratifying thing about it so far is that I have always had a good dinner after being ruffled in the meeting. The ladies (God bless them!) have always seen to that. Sometimes a brother protests against his assessments, but, then, what is he going to do? But few stewards have arrived at that state of grace that, after his assessments have been fixed by the master of ceremonies, will voluntarily offer to raise them.

I know of one instance where there was an increase of more than $200 on the district, including a raise in the presiding elder's salary, and the scheme raised the assessments on the strongest church in the district only five dollars, but nearly every other church was raised from ten to twenty dollars, while the assessments of some circuits that had been weakened by losing a church was left the same. I love and esteem this church and this brother, and I only mention the incident to illustrate the way the stewards sometimes do. But this scheme brought forth protests, when the brother made an excellent speech, worthy of a better cause, belaboring the stewards of the churches, and saying there was no church or circuit but what could bring up their assessments in full if they would. Of course, this was meant for the weaker churches, because the stronger ones always brought up their assessments in full. And yet the country circuits pay more in proportion to their wealth and the amount of service rendered them than the city churches do.

Now, what is the remedy? It seems to me that the only remedy is for the district stewards to study the problems they have to solve. It seems to me that they should take a statesmanlike grasp of the subject, instead of trying to unload, and to so plan as to bring up as nearly as possible all the assessments on the district. No charge should be overloaded, nor should any church shirk its just share. I don't think the district stewards should interpret that text, "In honor preferring one another," to mean to give the other fellow the largest share of the assessments.

In the February number of the Review of Missions is an interesting symposium on the best plans for bringing up the missionary assessments in full, by the presiding elders who brought up a full report from their districts last year. The presiding elder of Birmingham district, Ala., states that the first thing he did was to get the district stewards to make an equitable assessment of the amounts to be raised on the pastoral charges, and that it took him two years to do this. This shows that it can be done, and can be done with the other causes as well as the missionary.

Brethren, you who will have the honor of being district stewards another year—get together in the love of Christ, show an unselfish spirit, study your districts well, and please do not pull your little schemes. They are unsound in principle, unwise in policy, and are prolific of many ills from which our church now suffers.

CIGARETTES.

Every parent should send 10 cents to Dr. J. S. Hill, of Greenville, Texas, and get a copy of his new pamphlet on "Cigarettes, and Other Forms of Tobacco Using." Every boy should read this little book, for the reason if he uses cigarettes, he will stop their use, and if not, he will never commence smoking them. This booklet will be of great value to all who use tobacco in any form. Get it.

"LET US HELP THE ADVOCATE."

BY A MILLSAPS STUDENT.

The letter of Bro. W. W. Williams, of Grenada, Miss., in last week's ADVOCATE under the above caption, was terse and timely, though the idea of parents inflicting punishment on their children by compelling them to read the ADVOCATE is something new under the sun to this student. I have been a constant reader of the ADVOCATE from my childhood; I inherited the fancy from parents who were readers of it from ante-bellum days, and no doubt were among its first and best friends. In fact, the ADVOCATE was one of the valued fixtures of the household, and I owe much of what I am, and of what I expect to be, to its influence over my life. Though many are the times when I would scan its long, lank, lean columns and find nothing that would interest me. Perhaps it was my misfortune and not the editor's fault.

I think we should have a page for "Items from the Field," and have it full of letters "from the boys," giving a synopsis of their work, the results of their labors and their plans for the future. Nothing is hardly more interesting to me, or affords more pleasure, than to read an "Item from the Field" from any of my old pastors, and learn how God is honoring and blessing their labors. The great trouble that has been with this particular page in the past is, the editors would get in the midst of a "Sahara" for items or notes for their column, and would appropriate the "Items from the Field," and boil them down to nothing, and all the contributor would see of his item would be a three or four-line note acknowledging the receipt of same, and that Bro. So-and-So had completed a new church, or was convalescent, or had just closed a revival meeting, etc. When the time would come round for Bro. So-and-So to write up his "Items from the Field" again, he would beg to be excused; consequently this feature of the paper has badly run down. Let all the pastors write short sketches from their charges once a month, or once a quarter at least, and revive the interest in this feature of the paper and thereby "help the ADVOCATE." What the average busy reader wants is a variety of short, spicy, snap-shot letters from all over the Conferences, boiling over with items of interest and highly flavored with a vein of pure, godly consecration. I will be glad to hear from the college boys, as Bro. Williams suggests, and will take great interest in reading their bear stories or anything they may see fit to write.

Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup never fails to cure throat and lung trouble. Physicians recommend this wonderful medicine. 25 cts.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Many accounts for subscriptions and advertisements are due the ADVOCATE. It is important that these accounts be settled as soon as possible. We hope every brother who knows himself to be indebted to the paper will not delay a day. Some of these accounts are long past due. The money is needed. Brethren, one and all, please respond.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty four hours: a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys: if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble: too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

TEDDY'S HOME MISSHUN.

BY IDA B. COLE.

"O dear!" said Teddy, the minister's six-year-old son, "I wish I could be a misshunnurry, and go 'way off, and come home and tell folks about the heathen and cholera and jungles and ocean and everything."

"When you are a man you may," replied his father, "but at present you had best be a home missionary, and do a boy's work for Christ at home."

Callers interrupted the conversation, and Teddy, full of eagerness, ran over to the livery-stable, whose proprietor was a great friend of his.

"No, Mr. Stubbs, I don't want to ride the horse, nor sit in the buggy and hold the whip. I want to see you on some very 'portant business."

"All right," said Mr. Stubbs, amused at the dignity of his tiny guest. "Come sit on my knee, and tell me what's the matter."

"No, I'll sit here and you there, just like men do."

"All right, little chap. Now, what's up?"

"Mr. Stubbs, did you hear Mr. Sayce tell 'bout the heathen, and how he made 'em good? Well, I want to be a misshunnurry like that, but papa says I must be a home misshunnurry first. Now, what does that mean?"

And the child leaned his chin on his fat little hand, and looked inquiringly into Mr. Stubbs' face.

"Your papa's 'bout right. There's 'bout as many bad people here as in foreign countries, I guess, and missionaries are needed just as bad."

"What shall I do, and where shall I begin?"

"You might fix up this church row they're having over the dance they had the other night. Old Mis' Farnsworth was up to see your pa yesterday. She told my wife about it this morning. You see, she's always seeing the mote in other folks' eyes, and she's got such a big beam in her own that she's blind to her own faults."

"A beam in her eye!" exclaimed Teddy, "I never saw that, Mr. Stubbs. I just thought she squinted."

"She's got a squint in her brain, as well as in her eye."

"Why, this town's chock-full of cases waitin' for a missionary. There's Tom Sykes just coming out of that saloon now. In many respects he's good-hearted, and one of the best men in the world, but drinks like all possessed."

Teddy sat still for at least three minutes—an unusual occurrence.

"Guess I'll begin with Mr. Sykes," he said, rising. "I suppose I'll have to talk to them like mama did the day I runned away."

He entered the grocery timidly.

"What is it, little man?" asked the grocer in such a kindly tone that Teddy's spirits rose.

"Please, Mr. Sykes, I'm a home misshunnurry."

What made the words come so hard, and that queer little lump in his throat?

"A missionary! Then I suppose you've come to take up a collection. Ha, ha, ha!"

Teddy felt like crying. To be laughed at was almost as bad as being drowned.

"Please, Mr. Sykes, I'm a real misshunnurry, to make people good, and I wanted to tell you that to drink whisky is bad, my papa says so; and Mis' Sykes is having her heart broked, and I don't want you to any more."

"Did any one tell you to say that?" asked the grocer, crossly. "Who sent you here?"

Teddy was frightened at the unexpected turn. To be scolded was worse than being drowned, he thought.

"Why, Jesus sends misshunnurries, you know. He sends the foreign ones, and of course, he sends the home ones, too."

As the man looked into the earnest little face, with its wistful blue eyes, another face came to him—another pair of blue eyes, now closed on this world and from his sight. He could not be angry with the child.

"If she had lived, I'd be different," he said to himself.

"I know your little girl feels awful bad about it," ventured Teddy. "I would if it was my papa."

The grocer's strong arms lifted the child from the stool, and held him close to his breast.

"Oh, don't," panted Teddy; "people don't do that to misshunnurries; I'm sure Mr. Sayce wouldn't let 'em."

"Go your way, child. God bless you! I'll think over what you've said."

"Thank you. I'm going to see Mis' Farnsworth now."

"Are you? Well, lad, you tell her that Tom Sykes will quit drinking when she leaves off gossiping."

"Thank you," said Teddy. "I hope she won't hug me," he thought as he walked on; "it makes me feel like a baby, am I a sure-enough misshunnurry."

Mrs. Farnsworth was at home. Teddy wondered why he felt so "choky," just as if there was no air to breathe, he told his mother afterwards.

"Mis' Farnsworth, I'm a misshunnurry, and I've come to see you about your squint and your beam."

"About what?" exclaimed the lady in surprise.

"You see, I'm on a home misshun—to make folks good, and Mr. Stubbs said I better see you, 'cos you had a squint in your brain."

"He said that, did he; and what else did he say?" she inquired in an enconraging tone, well calculated to draw the child out. "Did he say anything else, dear?"

Teddy grew confidential.

"Oh, yes 'm; he said you was trying to pull a stick out of Belle Burton's eyes, and you'd got an awful big beam in your own; and that you'd better wag your heels instead of your tongue."

Mrs. Farnsworth sat upright in her chair; her cheeks were red and her eyes were flashing with anger. Teddy had never seen her look like that, and he felt half afraid.

"Mebbe it's only her eyes hurting," he thought.

"And Mr. Sykes—I went to him first, and he said that he'd stop drinking when you stopped gossiping—I think that's the word."

"Well, I never!" was the answer. "Teddy Raymond, I'll take you straight home this minute. Your parents must know this at once, at once!"

Awed by her commanding tone, Teddy followed, feeling that something was wrong with his "misshun."

On reaching the parsonage they found Mr. Stubbs. Mr. Sykes had told him of the proposed visit to Mrs. Farnsworth, and the liveryman, feeling his joke had been carried too far, sought the minister to make amends, if possible.

"Well, parson," said he, "they say open confession is good for the soul, and, as we're all here, we might as well clear up matters."

Teddy was sent from the room. Mrs. Farnsworth turned to Mr. Stubbs, and in her wrath gave him what she commonly termed "a piece of my mind."

Her auditor laughed in a most aggravating manner.

"Now, look here, Mis' Farnsworth, I said every bit of it, and I'm glad I did. I don't uphold dancin'; if I was a church-member, I'd be savin' sinners, and not making 'em; but all the dancin' ever carried on in this town ain't done the harm your tongue has. Do you remember Nannie Brown? —used to go to Hobart's a good deal; was poor and wanted to learn music, an' Hobart said he'd teach her free gratis: an' you thought 'cos she was pretty he must have fell in love with her, an' you told it, and the folks that was jealous of Nan's beauty and her voice told it after you, an' by and by somebody said 'twas so. Mis' Hobart heard of it: that was enough for a jealous woman like her; she was all fired up over the stories, every one of 'em was traced to you—but you couldn't reason with her, and she left her husband. Nannie Brown's over there in the graveyard, died of a broken heart—couldn't stand up under it—an' you started it an' kept it up till she was dead, an' then you sent a bunch of roses to her funeral.'

With that he left the house abruptly, his whole frame shaking with anger.

The poor woman covered her face with her hands, and sobbed piteously.

"Let us pray, Sister Farnsworth," said the minister gently.

The scene which followed was too sacred for curious eyes: there are moments in the soul life too solemn for description.

It is five years now since Teddy's home "misshun." He never undertook another, for fear of parental discipline.

There is a happy home over the little grocery-store, and a man true to the memory of a little one in heaven.

"What in this world has changed Mrs. Farnsworth so?" one day asked a lady of another. "She used to be so uncharitable, always looking for flaws, suspicions, and so gossipy. Now she is so gracious, and not a person dares breathe a word of gossip in her presence. I never saw anything like it."—The Advance.

BEGIN NOW.

Sometimes children think they can't do any good until they grow to be men and women. If you should say to your right hand, "I'm not going to use you now while you are small; I'm going to wait and save all your strength till I grow up, and then I will use you a great deal," do you know what would happen? Why, the hand that hung at your side would not grow; it would get so weak and small that when you became a man you couldn't use it at all. Something like that happens to our hearts when we think we can put off loving God and doing good until we grow up.

We must begin now to do what little we can, if we wish to be strong when we grow up.—Sunbeam.

A LESSON IN COURTESY.

Nicholas I., Tsar of Russia, was the type of an absolute autocrat. The succession of terrible wars which clouded his reign did not tend to soften his disposition or to render him less imperious. But rough and harsh as he was, Nicholas had a measure of chivalry in his disposition. He would not tolerate, under any circumstances, an insult offered to a woman.

As the Tsar was driving through the streets of St. Petersburg, he caught sight of an officer of [illegible] with an old [illegible] whose hands were [illegible] pre-[illegible]

The [illegible] was quite mindful of the august witness of his act, and was rather pleased when, a few hours later, he was summoned to the imperial presence.

Nicholas soon undeceived him, and in the presence of a dozen courtiers cut him to the quick with his indignant reproof.

"Enough!" said Nicholas, finally. "You will walk up and down that corridor all night, and every time you turn you will say, in a loud voice, 'I am a puppy! I am a puppy!'"—Youth's Companion.

If we would feed the fire of our prayers with the fuel of God's Word, all our difficulties in prayer would disappear.—Torrey.

SOME STARTLING STATISTICS.

It is often wondered why and how the beer-makers of this country are able to control legislation, and influence voters as they do. On the face of it, it seems strange, and hardly to be accounted for, even on the ground of the immense capital involved in that industry. When, however, one realizes that each brewery is as it were, connected with every other brewery in the United States, their great power is no longer a subject for wonder. The means by which they are thus connected is the United States Brewers' Association.

This association numbers one thousand members, and controls a capital of $300,000,000. Each man is alert in the interests of his trade, is in close touch with the political sentiment of his region, and is always ready to devote himself and his money to the furtherance and aggrandizement of the beer-making society.

The manager of the literary bureau of the association fixes the amount of capital invested in breweries in this country at $163,788,903. When to this is added the other property of the brewers, in real estate, stock and chattel mortgages, received from their impecunious customers, $300,000,000 is surely a fair estimate of the capital controlled by this association.

One of the richest and most influential of the brewers is said to have a capital of $6,000,000 invested in breweries in Milwaukee alone. Thirteen hundred beer-making and handling establishments is an appalling number, when one remembers that all the beer made is drunk; 35,000 men are employed in these establishments. The wages received annually by those men amounts to $29,000,000. The annual cost of making the beer is $65,000,000, and its product is valued at $183,000,000.

It will thus be seen that this is one of the largest industries in this country of ours, and, in view of these figures, its great power is not surprising.—Christian Observer.

MRS. KATE BROWN LEGGETT.

Mrs. Kate Brown Leggett, wife of the Rev. J. T. Leggett, of the Mississippi Conference, was born near Woodville, Miss., Jan. 31, 1864, and died in Hazlehurst, Miss., Nov. 28, 1900. She was the daughter of the Rev. Thomas W. Brown, of the Mississippi Conference, and of Mrs. Mary Brown, who awaited her on the other shore. She received a remarkable home education from her parents and her grandmother, Mrs. Still. Her home in Wilkinson county, where seven sisters and three brothers received a training combining a high grade of mental culture—including a thorough classical course—instruction in truly spiritual Christian life, and a knowledge of domestic duties, will ever live in the memory of friends and relatives as a glowing monument to the sainted invalid mother, the cultured and devoted grandmother, and the noble father, who is still one of the loved members of the Conference.

Kate Brown was lovely in person and character, and her beautiful and unselfish life proved the great value of her early training. In her girlhood she was admired and beloved by all who knew her. She was converted and united with the church when quite young, and lived in full consciousness of salvation until her death. On Aug. 5, 1891, in Woodville, surrounded by a few of her relatives and friends, she was married to our Bro. Leggett. The prayers that then went up to the throne that God would bless those lives just become one, was surely answered, although he gave them only nine short years in which to walk the path of life together. Shortly after her marriage I was with her at a little gathering, a ladies' prayer meeting, and the talk she gave telling of her great desire to be useful as a preacher's wife, and the prayer which followed in which she so sweetly consecrated her life anew to the service of the Master, and prayed that she might be a blessing and a help to her husband, linger with me among my most pleasant memories. How these hopes were fulfilled can be testified to in every charge where they labored, for although surrounded by household cares common to a preacher's wife, and with little children claiming her love and attention, and receiving the tenderest care and instruction, she yet found time for church work, the missionary society and all other arms of woman's work feeling her touch of encouragement and energy wherever she went. It is from her heart-broken husband that I learn most of that life for which such prayers were made, and I hope he will pardon me for quoting from his letter. He writes: "A more beautiful life I have never known than has been her's for the past nine years. Her faith, so unwavering, and simple trust have been a rebuke to me in my despondency. So regular was she in private prayer that the children, missing her, learned to say, 'Mama is in the parlor praying.' In her own handwriting, on the margin of the leaves of her Bible, are found these words (with many others similar): 'Father, into thy hands I commend myself;' 'Teach me thy will, and help me to do it, is my constant prayer;' 'Lord, help me to serve thee with my spirit in the gospel of thy Son.' Taking up her Bible, your first impression would be that some one had been studying it with reference to the presentation and defense of its truths, and the more you would peruse it, the more you would feel that impression, so well marked is it. She would pray in the church, by the sick-bed, or anywhere else that prayer was needed. Her death, like her life, was beautiful. Two days before she died she called me to her bedside, and said that she would die (I could not believe it), and that she wanted to talk with me about the future of the children and of myself. The day that she died she said that she was ready to go. She called the children up and kissed them, and told them to be good and meet her in heaven. She asked us to sing, 'I have read of a beautiful city.' She was perfectly consolone up to a few minutes before passing away."

We can not know why she should be taken when her work seems to us not ended; when her husband and five little ones, her father, sisters, brothers, and her church could so little spare her; but, as the Master had need of the ointment when his best friends thought it but waste, so he had need of this treasured spirit, and the vase was broken for him, and because we see not his meaning, shall we question his motive and plan, and murmur at our sorrow, when it was given by his hand? "The shadow, Father, is our own;" she walks in paths of light. Savior, give us the faith by which she walked, and help us to redeem the time for we know not how soon we may be called. And help us, Savior, to pause in our grief to rejoice with her, remembering "how beautiful it is to be with God."

MRS. E. W. FEATHERSTUN.

STEPHEN ELMO LANCE was born in Louisville, Texas, Feb. 6, 1869, and died in Poplarville, Miss., Jan. 19, 1901. When ten months old his mother moved with him to Alabama, and when he was ten years old she (now Mrs. Pope) moved with him to Quitman, Miss., where she has since lived, and where he was reared. He was a most loving, obedient and dutiful son; educated almost exclusively by his mother, who taught in the public schools. He attended Cooper Institute part of one session. Possessing a brilliant mind, he early became well educated. He could easily have been fitted for college and university work. After teaching for a few years in the public schools, he came to Hattiesburg in December, 1894, where he was employed in the store of J. S. Turner and Company. He proved so efficient and reliable that Bro. Turner decided to start him in business, which he did in December, '96, at Poplarville. From the start he succeeded beyond expectation, and soon bought out the business, and continued to run it successfully.

On Dec. 15, 1897, he was married to Miss Lenora McInnis, daughter of Hon. and Mrs. K. McInnis, of Hattiesburg, Miss. To them was born one son. The loving, broken-hearted mother, with this precious child, and his own devoted mother, who was justly so proud of him, and other loved ones, mourn their loss.

He joined the church at the age of nine years in Alabama. His highest delight was in the church. He had high appreciation for Christianity. He rejoiced in Methodism, and was specially proud of his own home church. He was a most active member of the Building Committee of this church, and it was a glad day with him (Sept. 2, last) when Bishop Galloway, whom he, with his wife, delighted to entertain on the occasion, dedicated this stately, magnificent building.

Bro. Lance was a liberal supporter of all of the institutions of the church; was a good steward, was the efficient teacher of the senior Sunday-school class, and an active League worker. He was specially fond of music; had large musical gifts, and took great delight in the choir. If he had been spared, he would have become one of our most prominent laymen, and would have figured largely in the councils of the church.

Appreciation for him was attested by the presence at his funeral of one of the largest concourses that ever attended a funeral in this section, the large church being filled to overflowing, and the vast multitude in solemn procession following his remains to their last resting-place; the Knights of Pythias contributing to the impressiveness of the occasion.

After testifying to his abiding faith in Jesus as his Savior, his last words were, "It is well."

B. S. RAYNER.

MRS. CLARA FELDER (nee Williams) was born July 29, 1875, and died Dec. 5, 1900.

Sister Clara dedicated her life to Christ and joined the Baptist Church in August, 1891. On Feb. 3, 1896, she was happily married to John Henry Felder. In the Summer of the same year she united herself with the Methodist Church at Topisaw, where she lived a faithful, consistent Christian life till her death.

Sister Clara will be greatly missed by the church and the community, but most of all she will be missed in the home, where her godly influence was shed upon her loved ones, and her love and devotion reflected in all she did. She told her husband that she was ready and willing to go, and she requested that we should sing at her grave that beautiful song, "Meet me there." She leaves her husband and two sweet little girls, with many relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. May they find comfort in the fact that she has crossed over to live with other loved ones, and to be with Jesus and the redeemed, God and the angels!

HISTORY OF METHODISM.

"A Divine Standard in Methodism."

By John W. Bonsell, D. D. Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn. 75 cents.

This is a work the like of which should have been written many years ago. Every Methodist, particularly every young Methodist should know something of the history of the great denomination which is a single century has moved to the first place among Protestant bodies. The matters written by the great authors who have made their mark in Methodism are, however, too voluminous for popular reading, and there has long existed a demand for just such a book as this from the pen of Dr. Bonsell. In very condensed form is presented all the main facts in the history of Methodism, and gives a birds-eye view of the growth of that church from the days of Wesley to the present. Whether Dr. Bonsell's book will be appreciated is a question that can not now be answered, but certain it is that the Methodist who fails to place this book in the hands of his family misses a great opportunity.—So. Luth. Christian Advocate.

We send the above book, with the New Orleans Christian Advocate, one year for two dollars, cash, both to new and old subscribers.

AN EXCELLENT BOOK.

"Sam Williams: A Tale of the Old South," by W. B. Harman, is indeed a pleasing book, and should be in every Southern home. The book whether intentionally or else is a most excellent answer to Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

The author is intensely Southern, "to the manner born," whose simplicity of style, charming grace and purity of diction is engrossing from the beginning. The book, as it claims to be, is a portrayal of the three distinct classes which existed in the South before the war: the slave owner, "the po' white trash," laboring whites, and the slaves themselves. The fast-disappearing dialects of the two latter classes peculiar to the ante bellum days are interspersed throughout the book. The story carries the reader through the Civil War, and there is just enough comedy, tragedy and romance depicted to add to its fascination. There is nothing portrayed to give offense either side of "Mason and Dixon" line, and all along the reader is impressed with the truthfulness or reasonableness of the narrative. If what the author wrote is untrue, he possessed the pleasing qualities of making them appear as facts.

The Northern idea of "Southern oppression," and the maltreatment of the slaves by the slave owners, is effectually punctured in their treatment on the plantation of the father of "Sam Williams," and on the plantation of adjoining neighbors.

The "free negroes" of to-day are nothing like as happy and contented as this book represents them to have been in slavery times. They have also deteriorated in morals, and are nothing like as well supplied in food and clothing. Southerners who still believe in the righteousness of the "Lost Cause" will find in the book many evidences of correctness.

FRIARS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The report of the Philippine commission is emphatic against the restitution of the friars to the position which they formerly held, or even their return to their parishes as incumbents. The commission reports that "a return of the friars to their parishes will lead to lawless violence and murder, and the people will charge the course taken to the American Government, thus turning against it the resentment felt toward the friars." The feeling against them is largely due to the political powers which they exerted under the old regime, and which they made instruments of oppression and extortion. The many valuable buildings in various cities, and the 403,000 acres of lands which have been held by the friars in the name of the church, are believed by the people to be properly public property, inasmuch as they were purchased or erected with the people's money. But for the provision in the treaty of Paris the United States might simply declare all such buildings and lands public property, save in cases where the religious orders could establish a just equity. But it is not likely that this will be done, and the next best plan, according to the commission, is for the United States to purchase these lands, and such buildings as are or could be used for schools, and sell or rent them on easy terms to the people. A complication is here introduced by the announcement from Rome that the Pope will require the friars to turn over to the church any sums received from sale of church lands, rather than allow them to retain such money to establish themselves anew in Spain or elsewhere. Mr. Edwin Wildman says that the friars now in Manila are carrying on an active campaign to secure their reinstatement, are circulating tracts and periodicals bitterly attacking the Americans, and are in every possible way working against our interests. Notwithstanding these facts, and the emphatic recommendations of the commission, it appears to many at home that the present administration will probably content itself with declaring religious liberty and asserting a policy of non-interference in the church affairs of the Filipinos. The marks of favor shown to Archbishop Chapelle, the Pope's legate, by government officers have already given rise to the suspicion in the Philippines that the United States will support the friars.—The Standard.

ADMIRALS SAMPSON AND SCHLEY.

Our readers will remember that ever since the destruction of Cervera's fleet the friends of Admiral Sampson have been persistent in claiming for him the honor of that achievement. The sole ground on which the claim is based is the fact that he was commander-in-chief of the squadron that did the work. That nobody disputes. It may be also that Admiral Sampson planned the method of attack in case Cervera endeavored to escape. But the fact remains that he was miles away at the time, and never in gun-shot range of the Spanish vessels. Schley was commander in the absence of Sampson, and actually directed and led the fight. This fact entitles him to the chief credit, and the American sense of justice will never allow him to be deprived of the honor. Nor will they consent to the promotion of Admiral Sampson over Admiral Schley as a reward for services rendered in destroying the Spanish fleet. In view of the controversy which has broken out afresh, the New Orleans Picayune is led to say: "Whatever merit there may be in the contention of the Navy Department that Admiral Sampson, as commander-in-chief, was entitled to the chief credit for the sinking of the Spanish ships, although he was not personally present, the American people will never consent to the rewarding of an officer who was ten miles away from the scene of the fight at the expense of an officer who was in the thick of it, and actually directed the American ships during the battle. The contention that the commander-in-chief always merits the highest rewards is not historically correct. Although Nelson won the principal credit and the greatest rewards for the victory at Copenhagen, he was not the commander-in-chief of the British fleet engaged, but merely a subordinate. The position was precisely the same as in the case of Sampson and Schley. As Nelson won renown and honors because he actually did the work, so also Schley should receive the highest honors and rewards, because he, and not Sampson, was actually present and directed affairs when the ships of Admiral Cervera were destroyed."

THE SITUATION IN CHINA.

The trouble in China seems to be far from settlement. This is to be regretted, not so much because the difficulties depress trade in various countries, as because of the prospect of war. China, which some time since agreed to peace negotiations, has been exceedingly slow to sign the treaty and carry out her promises. It began to look as if China was making an effort to deceive the powers, or to repudiate her agreement altogether. On this account the German commander, Count von Waldersee, announced that he intended to send an expedition to conduct fresh military operations in the interior of the empire. He invited other foreign commanders to join him. It is thought in certain circles that the commander's announcement was intended as a bluff. But whether so or not, the announcement, according to dispatches, had the effect of bringing the Chinese court to terms, and it is now reported that the demands of the powers will be complied with. We are glad to note that our government is opposed to further hostile expeditions at this time, and has cabled Minister Conger instructions to that effect. "This action was taken by the State Department after the Cabinet discussion had developed the attitude of the administration. The State Department officials decline to make public the text of the note. However, it was said to be in perfect accord with the policy already developed, and to make manifest the deep conviction of the United States Government that these proposed hostile expeditions are in violation of the rights of the individual parties to the peace negotiations. The United States Government will continue to deal with the other powers through their diplomatic agencies, ignoring the suggestion that the ministers at Pekin have no control over the military forces stationed there, and, carrying out the same theory, General Chaffee will act in thorough harmony with any suggestions made by Mr. Conger."

BUYING AND SELLING VOTES.

The buying and selling of votes is all too common. It is evidence of a state of corruption. No good man will offer to buy a vote; no good man will sell one. A vote is intended to represent the honest convictions of the one who casts it, even though the measure voted for is partisan in its character; but if a man will sell his vote, there is no telling what his convictions are, if indeed he has any. Such a man can not be trusted. If he is a member of a legislative body, he is a dangerous man. If he can be bribed to vote against a good measure, he can not be expected to vote against a bad one. What a corruption fund will do in the way of bribery is just now being illustrated in the Tennessee Legislature, if reports are true. The Memphis Commercial-Appeal says: "Over in Nashville a syndicate has been formed to present quite a number of bills. These bills are not intended for passage, but they are intended for revenue only. The Peeler Bill (a bill to extend the benefit of local option to towns and cities over 2,000 inhabitants) was brought in in good faith, and it was defeated because it was intended to be defeated, and Mr. Peeler know nothing of it. Other bills will be brought in for the same purpose and for the same end." When the Peeler Bill was under discussion money was used, it is said, and it is thought that enough votes were influenced to defeat it. The evidence of corruption was so strong that a Committee of Investigation has been appointed, and the matter will be probed to the bottom. It ought to be, and if Honored Senators are guilty of selling their votes, they ought to be sent to prison, and there learn by hard labor how poor and honest men earn their living.

THE MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

BY REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, D. D.

The assembling of this great body, to consist of not less than a thousand delegates, will tend to produce at least two important results.

First, the M. E. Church, South, will thereby demonstrate and intensify her faith in missions. Recent momentous occurrences have shaken the faith of some honest believers in missions, and have almost or quite destroyed the feeble confidence of a considerable number whose interest in the cause was always reluctant and ready to perish. No man, nor body of men, can succeed in so difficult an undertaking as the spreading of Christ's gospel among the heathen without an unfaltering faith in the righteousness and feasibility of their purpose. To doubt is to insure failure; to believe is almost to guarantee success. Nothing good is ultimately impossible. If God has given the heathen to his Son for his possession, China is included; yet there are some who think that the recent uprising against foreigners in China, the slaughter of the native Christians and of the missionaries, should stop all efforts to Christianize that vast empire. In this crisis we seem to hear the voice of the Savior as he sorrowfully exclaims, "O fools and slow of heart to believe;" "There shall be wars and rumors of wars, but the end is not yet."

"Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord, and against his anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us." (May this not be applied to many of the chief rulers in China at this time?) "The Lord shall have them in derision. Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure. I will declare the decree, Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

The recent great struggle in China will culminate in guarantees of good faith and the permanence of the open-door policy. The gospel will be more extensively preached in China within the next twenty-five years than it has been in all the centuries of the past.

In the second place, the effect of the Conference will be the distribution among the people generally of at least a thousand men and women aflame with missionary zeal, who shall go forth as torch-bearers to lead the hosts of our Israel from the darkness of unbelief to the light of hope and joyous victory. Two-fifths of the delegates are to be laymen, and many women are among the number. Information will be spread, enthusiasm will be kindled, money will flow into the Lord's treasury, and the church will address herself to the evangelization of the world with a hopeful energy which was never hers before. The lack of money is the great drawback to the success of missions, and lack of intelligent appreciation of the cause keeps back the contributions of thousands who ought to be helpers. The more general dissemination of missionary information through members of the Conference can but kindle the zeal of the church to an extent never before known.

THE BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT.

BY REV. ELTON WILSON.

The baptism of the Holy Spirit is the great need of the new century. The gift of the Spirit does not lessen in any degree the necessity for intellectual leadership. All of the apostles were men naturally endowed with a high order of intellectual force, though but few of them had college diplomas. The Apostle Paul, apart from inspiration, was endowed with a massive intellect that enthrones him as one of the royal kings of the thought of the centuries; yet this mind of the first magnitude says: "I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power."

It is an insult to the wisdom of the Holy Ghost to suppose that he is magnified through inadequate preparation, or through culpable ignorance. The great error is made just here. One class underestimates the value of intellectual equipment; another class fail to recognize the necessity of spiritual power. This is due to confusion, which fails to make the broad and inherent distinction between intellectual power and spiritual power. Intellectuality is not spirituality. If mere intellect constituted spirituality, then the agnostic Huxley, the skeptical Hume, the deistical Voltaire, the atheistic Hobbes were the most spiritual of men, which all know is not a fact. The two spheres of power are distinct in thought, though one in reality. The psychical sphere of the soul includes intellect, emotion, and will. The pneumatical sphere is the transcendant department of personality, where the Holy Spirit comes into man's life, breathing upon him the breath of eternal life, awakening the soul into conscious spiritual vision, until it realizes that it is filled with the Holy Spirit. The psychical consciousness takes knowledge of and draws the elements of sustenance from the material world and its forms of life. The pneumatical consciousness lives with God through the Spirit. From him flows its life; he is the source of its power; it is love and life and invisible power coming through Christ. This spiritual or pneumatical power of the Holy Spirit upon the human soul operates through the media of intellect, emotion, and will. The more perfect the medium of expression is, the greater is the manifestation of power. This is why men like Paul, Whitefield, Edwards and Wesley were men of such marvelous power; the two elements were in due proportion. They not only possessed great spirituality, but the intellectual medium of expression was great and well trained. The manifestation of the Spirit is determined by the inferiority or perfection of the mental life of men. "For we have this treasure in earthen vessels." We should not neglect the perfection of these psychical vessels of the Holy Spirit.

Again, we should not underestimate the absolute necessity of the Holy Spirit, "in whom we live and move and have our being." For the final purpose of the gospel is not intellectual, but spiritual. The essential power of the gospel does not reside alone in power of mind, but in the Holy Ghost operating through the power of mind. Without the Holy Spirit all is in vain. 'He who spake as never man spake," with that holy, simple eloquence; whose matchless influence has dominated the flying centuries, felt inadequate to proclaim the undying message of truth, until he stood beneath the opened heavens, and saw the jeweled light flash from the throne, and felt the tide of divine inspiration anointing him for his holy work. If there is any one distinctive element of power in Christianity, it is the power from on high, the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Through thirty centuries there stands forth one vast successive line of seers, prophets, priests, apostles, and holy men—all emphasizing the necessity of the Holy Spirit operating through the church, the body of Christ. If Christianity rises to the height of her world-wide mission in the morning of this new century, she must return to God upon bended knee, and, with contrite spirit, gaze upward into those eternal heights until the endowment of power from on high is realized. The Holy Spirit keeps watch over the march of the centuries and the onward conquests of the church, and it is through his church that he reaches forth the arms of power, gathering individuals, nations, peoples and empires within the bosom of historic Christianity, that shall conquer the world for Christ through the light and power of God.

Of seventy thousand young men in American colleges, it is said "thirty-eight thousand are church members, and over five thousand are candidates for the Christian ministry." This speaks volumes in favor of Christian education.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Dr. Gross Alexander will discuss "Our English Bible, and How to Use It," at the coming Epworth League Convention in San Francisco. Dr. Alexander is professor of Greek in the Biblical Department of Vanderbilt University.

Dr. Tillett is quoted as saying that Vanderbilt University will get only about 3 per cent. of the Twentieth Century Fund, instead of 20 per cent., most of the amount contributed having been specially directed to local institutions.

Dr. Collins Denny, now connected with Vanderbilt University, is spoken of as the successor of Dr. Payne, who has resigned the chancellorship of Peabody Normal College at Nashville, Tenn. A more suitable man could not be found.

Randolph-Macon College has just entered upon the seventy-first year of its existence. The anniversary of its opening was celebrated on Feb. 3, the services being conducted by Bishop Granbery and Dr. W. G. Starr, the president.

The dispatches report that Mrs. Deems, widow of Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems, who went from the Methodist Church in North Carolina to the pastorate of the "Church of the Strangers," in New York, died Feb. 3, 1901, aged eighty-four years.

Dr. W. H. LaPrade, Educational Secretary of the Louisiana Conference, in a statement recently made, says: "Returns from the Twentieth Century Fund, Louisiana Conference, are not all in, but I have sufficient information to place the present amount at $17,350."

Our Sunday-school at Monroe, La., under the superintendency of Bro. Geo. D. Sanders, has contributed fifteen dollars towards the purchase of a home for Mrs. M. H. Honnoll at Varona, Miss. Has any town in the North Mississippi Conference of the size of Monroe done as well? May this generous donation prove an inspiration!

President Warren is authority for the statement that from 1784, the date of the organization of Methodism in America, to 1884, the Methodist Episcopal Church founded one educational institution for every five months of the one hundred years. This, we suppose, does not include the institutions founded by other Methodist bodies, nor those of the Methodist Church, South, founded since the division in 1844. The record is remarkable.

Rev. J. B. Culpepper is conducting a meeting in Walnut Street Church, Louisville. The Central Methodist says: "Immense congregations have attended each night, and on Sabbath night many were turned away, and many stood through the entire service. At this writing it is thought that at least seventy-five have been converted, and many others reclaimed, while many more have drawn closer to God. About fifty have applied for membership."

We have received the Second Year-Book of the North Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Board, edited and published by Rev. G. W. Bachman, Sunday-school Agent and Conference colporter. "This publication," says the editor, "is designed to aid in the promotion of Sunday-school work in the North Mississippi Conference." It will be found admirably adapted to that end. It contains the report of the Conference Sunday-school Board, and the Annual Report of the General Sunday-school Editor and Secretary, Dr. James Atkins. It gives also a report of last year's "Children's Day," showing what was done on that day. Bro. Bachman does not say that the book is for general distribution, but we suppose anyone can get it by writing to him at Winona, Miss.

What Our Editors Say.

THE SPIRIT OF POWER.

We preachers and people now need to get down in the dust, and with an importunity that calculates on no abatement, and with a faith that takes no denial, cry to God until he sends forth the Holy Ghost into our hearts. Then the mighty tides of holy impulse, like unto the day of Pentecost, will come over our hearts and over our people. We need to plead for his "quickening," saving power. Coming as in the olden time, he may demand surrenders we do not wish to make, he may impose duties we now shrink from discharging, and require sacrifices that now seem beyond our power. It is almost certain that he will do all of this and more, but what are these things—our culture, our ease, our notions and our inclinations—when to surrender them brings light to the darkened, rectitude to the debased, life to the dead? What of sacrifice, however complete, or pain producing, if it have compensation in the holy fires that refine our natures, purify our spirits and lighten the realms hitherto unseen by us? What of hard duty if it have compensation in the fellowship that is divine? Oh, for a church humbly seeking this power to come upon it! Oh, for a ministry conscious of its weakness and "doubly destitute" by reason of fruitless toil, that is willing to rest on this mighty power, and that does rest nowhere else!—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

EXHORTATION.

A preacher who is an intelligent and diligent teacher, and a ready and earnest exhorter, is a solid builder. Exhortation is no less important than teaching. Teaching is the seed-sowing, exhortation is the harvesting. The one instructs, the other persuades. The great majority of sinners are already convinced, but the great difficulty arises in attempting to instruct them before they have been persuaded to accept Christ. Exhortation is almost a "lost art." The men among us who are ready and powerful in song and prayer and exhortation are few indeed. When have you delivered or heard an earnest exhortation except on revival occasions? Thousands who resist the arguments and conclusions of the sermon, unconditionally surrender under the influence of the exhortation. Men who seek for lost souls, should plead much with them to be reconciled with Christ. Exhortation to some extent may be a gift, but in a larger measure it is but the expression of earnestness and solicitude. How earnestly and eloquently a mother pleads for the life of her condemned son! There is an awful burden on her heart. When a like burden is realized for lost sinners, exhortations and pleadings prevail. If you would have a fruitful ministry in winning souls for Christ, cultivate much of the spirit and art of exhortation.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

A PATHETIC SIGHT.

There is nothing more pathetic than the sight of a young man going away from home to make his own way in the world. It is never entirely certain that he will succeed. At best he has a terrible gauntlet to run. Snares and pitfalls are set for his feet on every hand. The world, the flesh and the devil are all against him. It is a struggle from start to finish. No wonder that the gentle mother whom he leaves behind him wears now and then a sad face, and prays a little more earnestly for him than usual. No wonder that the father, who has not been as accessible and companionable, perhaps, as he ought to have been, finds himself feeling a deeper concern than ever before. Blessed is the boy who carries with him the memories of a happy home, and who knows that, come what will, there are hearts that will not cease to love him till they cease to throb. The recollection of his earlier years, and the assurance of this present sympathy, can not fail to increase his strength in every conflict.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

STRIKING AT THE ROOT.

Charlotte is now enjoying a diversion in the form of a discussion between a Presbyterian preacher and the mayor. The former, in a sermon last Sunday, deplored the existence of a large number of gambling hells in Charlotte. He attributes the blame, not to the police, but to the central authority. He says that backbone is lacking in the make-up of the highest authorities of the city. Of course, the mayor replies in caustic language, and says that the blame does not lie with the city government. It seems to us that neither side has traced the evil to its source. One day last week we counted in a Charlotte daily paper six card party announcements. The "stakes" were beautiful and valuable. How can a place be free from gambling hells and the very atmosphere of gambling when society runs the primary gambling schools in the shape of card parties? The Mecklenburg county grand jury was striking at the root of the matter last year, when it pronounced euchre playing to be on a par with "crap-shooting."—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

A PAINFUL THOUGHT.

It is a painful thought that, at the close of the century which has meant so much to us as a church, there should be a million and a quarter out of our million and a half members who have presented no gift in token of their gratitude. But if we are Christians we can come to only one decision, and that is to redouble our diligence to bring about a change in the church for the better. It will take time, prayer, love, and infinite patience to do this. It is very easy to say that these indifferent members are "no account," and to give them over to "hardness of heart and reprobacy of manner," but it is not Christlike. The Twentieth Century Movement has done us one great service in that it has shown us our weak point. It has been a sort of general judgment day, in which every member and every pastor has been brought to the bar of the church for trial. Happy are we if, having discovered our weak point, we are willing to go to work and make it strong.—The New Century.

MORAL SENTIMENT GROWING.

The moral sentiment of the State is growing. The secular press is taking a higher stand than for some years past, and the religious press is becoming more aggressive. The Alabama Christian Advocate and the Alabama Baptist represent over two hundred thousand. They are not taken by that many people, but they represent more than that number. There are other denominational papers taken by many members of other churches (how many I do not know), whose influence is in the same direction. These papers are not partisan, they are not controlled by political parties and will not be, but they do and will advocate the principles that constitute the foundation of righteous living, and pure government, and which will gradually extirpate the evils that curse our country, and send to the rear the men who advocate pernicious measures.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

ABOUT VISITING.

Visiting must go on in Winter as well as in other seasons. Sometimes it must needs be done in inclement weather. And sometimes a little thoughtlessness occasions suffering. Hence we write to ask: 1. Please, friends, answer promptly the door-bell or the knock at the door. Don't keep your neighbor, your pastor or any one, standing in the cold. Even if your curls are not exactly right or your cravat is rumpled, hurry to the door and let the visitor in or send the inquirer on. Besides the discomfort, time is valuable to people. 2. Please take the visitor to the fire—even if that be in dining-room or kitchen! Don't take him or her into a cold, unventilated parlor or sitting-room. Your pastor or friend will make any allowances needed—and will bless you for shielding him from la grippe.—Southern Christian Advocate.

REV. R. W. BAILEY.

The following tribute to Rev. R. W. Bailey, of the Mississippi Conference, whose death was announced last week, appeared in the Clarion-Ledger, of Jackson, Miss. Bishop Galloway was intimately associated with Bro. Bailey for several years, and writes out of full knowledge of the noble man who has so early fallen asleep:

The sad news reached the city that this well-known minister, for several years pastor of the First Methodist Church in Jackson, had died at Long Beach, Cal. This intelligence, although not altogether unexpected, will bring genuine sorrow to many hearts in this community. For a year, or more, he had been in failing health, and some months ago went to Colorado, hoping that the bracing air of those higher parallels would stay the ravages of disease and prolong his active life. But medical skill and the tenderest nursing were powerless to arrest the swift coming of the death-angel. His young wife and three children are sorely bereaved, and in many homes in Mississippi and California there will be sincere distress when the intelligence is received that this gifted friend and pastor has been so early called away.

A comparatively young man, and unusually well furnished in education and literary culture, he was capable of much valuable service, and had promise of great and increasing usefulness in the world. He had a charming family, and to them the sympathies of this entire community will go out in generous measure. His wife was Miss Conner, of Natchez, Miss., an accomplished member of an old and distinguished family.

Mr. Bailey was a man of remarkable intellectuality. Those who knew him longest and most intimately appreciated to admiration his striking originality, the incisiveness of his intellect, the quaintness of his humor, and his rare power of lucid and terse statement. At times his brief sentences were brilliant epigrams, full of the choicest wisdom. If he had had a rich, well-modulated voice, with some histrionic talent and the grace of an orator, he would have ranked among the greatest and most attractive preachers of our country.

As it was, those who had trained minds, and were in search of intellectual and spiritual enrichment, heard him with increasing delight and edification. Without doubt he was a man of unusual ability. And to intimate friends he was an attractive personality. A man of wide reading and accurate memory and rare literary taste, he was charming in conversation and instructive in public discourse. Some of his expositions of Scripture I shall retain in heart and memory through life.

To this community he especially endeared himself, on account of heroic and unwearied service during the prevalence of yellow fever. It is no disparagement to others to say that no one equaled him in the number of hours, day and night, given to the afflicted, the graves secured, and other attentions shown. Never having been exposed to the disease before, he seemed to know no fear, and, with an almost reckless disregard of himself, went wherever there was a person in distress. I often tried to restrain him from unnecessary exposure, and sought to shield him by tender of personal service, but without avail. He felt that duty called him, and that voice he was ever quick to hear and speedily obey. His name will always be tenderly cherished in many afflicted homes in this city. A dear, noble, manly, gifted friend has been taken away. Peace to his blessed memory! And may Heaven comfort the young wife and little ones, in whose loving eye he was an ideal and almost an idol.

CHARLES B. GALLOWAY.

CLOSE THE BARS.

Free the soul of worry as you leave the field. Close the bars at nightfall and shut the world without. Roll the cares of each day over your shoulder, that they may be lost in what is past. Start the morrow anew, and with a striving to make your life and work better, by reason of what yesterday has said to you, whether by way of failure or success.

The real thing in life, after all, is to do your duty as you see it, and pray that the true vision of what this should be may each day shine undimmed before the soul's eye.

What has not been, may be, if you continue to strive worthily; what can not be, must cease to be a stone of stumbling in the path. Never check the worries of to-day on through. Leave them at the last station, and see to it that grieving over what has gone wrong does not occasion weakness and keep the better things away.

Such as can retain a sincere purpose, and endeavor, amid the entanglement of personal weakness, to reach forward and upward after the gifts of their ideals, in the assured hope that some day they shall each be attained—these shall never lose.

Every anxious moment has its place. Life is entrusted by their touch. They are intended to be there; but when the troubles of to-day have served their part, it is wrong to drag them with you across the night, in order to scare up new ones for you on the morrow. After all, the discipline of our higher nature is the chief gift this life can bestow. Life does not consist in the abundance of the outward things one may possess, but rather in the real possession of those essentials which constitute our soul as a welcome dwelling for the Son of God, and utilizes our strength and service for the glory of the Lord.

Live each day by itself, and do as though it was the last. Live that each day may shine luminously in the galaxy of days, and though never quite satisfied with what you have wrought, yet pressing ever forward with a determination of making these yet to come more blessed with service. This is the way by which to crown life.

Where this spirit abides, there God's workmen are too busy to nurse worry; where this spirit is breathed into daily service, there the palaces of the soul are being reared, and the kingdom of heaven is near at hand. —Rev. L. M. Chambers, in Presbyterian Journal.

SANCTIFIED MUSIC.

Literature holds no more impressive scene than that hour when David stood before the fallen king, plying him by light and darkness, by hope and fear, by the memories of the past, by the hopes of the future, rebuking Saul, fighting him, controlling, and at last conquering him by truths divine. In that hour, recalling the days when Saul's heart was young, David sang the song with which the shepherd calls his flock, and carried Saul back to well-remembered scenes. He sang the harvest song, and brought back the days when the youth had led the reapers into the fields of golden grain. He rehearsed the events of war, the coming of an invading host, the tramp of armed men, the hours when Saul buckled on his armor, the fierce shock of the battle, and the moment of final victory. Justifying the ways of God to man, he reminded Saul that trouble hath its ministry and suffering its mercy; that the stroke of the lightning, not less than the falling dew, nurtures the sheaves of harvest; that the sweetest perfume comes from bruised flowers, the richest wines from the crushed grapes; that if the palm tree dies, its dates will live to support men crossing life's desert, and, if old age is a winter that strips the trees of leaves, the leaves fall only to lend a lovelier luster to the boughs of May. Therefore good deeds done, truth sown as seeds, shall rise again in new harvests of beauty. And having plied Saul by the memories of childhood and youth, by his ambitions and victories, his temptations and sufferings, his prayers and tears, suddenly David swings wide for him the door of immortality, and reminds this man, with his sorrow and shame and failure, that through God's good mercy the immortal life shall repair the defeats of the life that is. An eternal morn shall succeed death's brief night. That Saul, now a ruin and a failure, shall awake to new light and life, and endure.—Newell Dwight Hillis.

EQUIPMENT FOR SERVICE.

"Call upon God for the most complete equipment possible for this special work. Look about you! The harvest is ripe! Hasten to your closet! Institute rigid self and heart examination! Get an unquenchable zeal in your soul for the salvation of your people, and you will become fruitful in expedients. Faith suggests motives and methods, and if you are fully set in your purpose, and have a clear and comprehensive idea of the mission upon which God has sent you, and an abiding faith in the promises of God, you will have expedients suggested to you in the emergencies through which you will pass in the conduct of your revival that you could not think out in cold blood in a thousand years."

A revival generally begins in the quickening of believers, and continues with the conversion of sinners. A Holy-Ghost, heaven-sent revival is the end of every church. This is the primary, fundamental principle of all our church work—to get as many people saved as possible. All other work is secondary to this. I wish I could enforce this idea on the minds and hearts of pastors and people. If we could look at the salvation of men as angels see it, how much our efforts would be quickened! If we could look through the eyes of the Lord Jesus and see the unutterable need of perishing souls, oh, how every power and faculty of our being would be brought into mightiest activity! Brethren, think of this!—Rev. F. A. Hardin.

AN OPEN BOOK.

A wicked, drunken woman in one of our large cities was attracted into a church on Sunday evening, and was converted to Christ. The pastor of the church went to see her husband, and found him a very shrewd mechanic, who was very bitter against Christianity, and greatly fascinated with Ingersoll's sneers at the Bible. He was full of contempt at his wife's profession of conversion, and said he had no doubt she'd soon get over it. Six months passed away, and one evening this man called to see the minister in great anxiety concerning his own salvation. He said: "I have read all the leading books on the evidences of Christianity, and I can stand out against their arguments; but for the past six months I have had an open book about my own fireside, in the person of my wife, that I am not able to answer. I have come to the conclusion that I am wrong, and that there must be something holy and divine about a religion that could take a woman and change her into the loving, patient, prayerful, singing saint that she is now." The best books on Christianity are the men and women who live transformed lives, in fellowship with Christ.—Selected.

SURE OF THE LITTLE GRAVES.

A minister once asked a sexton why he bestowed more pains on the smaller graves than the larger ones, and the old man's reply was:

"Sir, you know that it is said of children, 'Of such is the kingdom of heaven,' and I think the Savior is pleased when he sees so much white clover growing around these little graves."

But when the minister pressed the sexton for a more explicit answer, he said:

"Sir, about these larger graves I don't know who are the Lord's saints and who are not; but you know, sir, it is different with the bairns. They are all his."—Christian Guide.

NOTICE.

Sisters of the North Mississippi Conference:

Mrs. J. N. McMorries, our efficient secretary of Columbus district, has been forced by ill health to resign, and Mrs. Thos. Price, of Brooksville, who is in every respect fitted for the position, has been appointed to succeed her. Mrs. McMorries has done a splendid work on the district, and we are sorry to give her up, but we know the cause will not suffer in Mrs. Price's hands, and we are more than glad to welcome her as a Conference officer.

A CONGREGATION OF SAINTS.

Church members who are to be "read and known of all men" ought truly to be as nearly perfect as possible. There is no denying the fact, however, that there are in all our churches men and women who are far from perfection. Good and zealous men have often tried to found a church which should be composed only of "saints." But when the organization has been completed there have always been found some who came considerably short of perfection. When the Lord himself organized his church with twelve there were Judas the traitor, Peter who denied him, Thomas with his doubts, and several others who had to be taught humility by having their feet washed by the Master himself. At Rome and Corinth, among those who were "called to be saints," there were not a few who fell far short of saintliness.

In answering the question as to what he would say to one who declines to join the church because there are those in it who fall short of perfection, Dean Hodges replies:

"We might say to him that he would very likely be as much out of place in such celestial company as the rest of us would. We might remind him that the church is not, and never has been, and never will be, a club for the spiritual aristocracy, into which nobody shall be admitted unless he be attired in all the purple and fine linen of the garments of holiness. That is not what the church is meant for at all. The church is meant for the ragged people, too. 'The Lord added daily to the church such as were being saved.' . . . All who were 'being saved' were let in. The church is not a soldiers' home for spiritual veterans who have been through all the religious wars, and now have no more battles to fight. The church is called the church 'militant' because it is meant to be an army.

"The people who are in it are supposed to be set against the evil of the world, in their own hearts first. But the church is not an 'ever-victorious' army. Somebody is always getting defeated. But everybody who is on our side, and is willing to help in our crusade against the devil, we will make a recruit of him. The church is sometimes called our 'mother' because she teaches and trains us. But we are dull and refractory pupils, a good many of us. However, if anybody wants to be trained to resist temptation and to follow righteousness, wants to be instructed in the truths of God, he may come in."—Lutheran Observer.

PRAYING AND WORKING.

Whatever we beg of God, let us also work for it, if the thing be a matter of duty or a consequent to industry, for God loves to bless labor and to reward it, but not to support idleness. And therefore our blessed Savior in his sermons joins watchfulness with prayer, for God's graces are but assistances, not new creations of the whole habit, in every instant or period of our life. Read Scriptures, and then pray to God for understanding. Pray against temptation, but you must also resist the devil, and then he will flee from you. Ask of God competency of living, but you must also work with your hands the things that are honest, that ye may have to supply in time of need. We can but do our endeavor, and pray for blessing, and then leave the success with God, and beyond this we can not deliberate, we can not take care, but, so far, we must.

To this purpose let every man study his prayers and read his duty in his petitions. For the body of our prayer is the sum of our duty, and as we must ask God whatsoever we need, so we must labor for all that we ask.—Jeremy Taylor.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

BROTHER O'NEIL'S ITINERARY.

At Brookhaven, last December, Bishop Hargrove took me from the lime hills of Scott county and sent me to the sand flats of Jackson county. After receiving my appointment, I went home and made ready for the move. I carried my family to Forest and sent them for a visit to the "old home." Returning to Hillsboro, I remained over Sunday for the purpose of uniting a young couple of that circuit in matrimony. Early Monday morning I bade adieu to the good people of that place and started toward the scene of my childhood. Christmas and the holidays were spent with the home folks. Then I turned my horse's head toward Americus. About forty miles travel brought me into the "wilds" of Wayne county and upon roads I had never traveled before. I soon found myself on the ancient, if not historic, Mobile and Paulding route, on the water-shed between Leaf and Chickasawha rivers, traveling towards their junction, but this once valuable road has been almost abandoned, and as many trees have fallen across it, and as very few people live along the line, it was with difficulty that I found my way. The sun was hidden from view, the wind sang mournfully among the trees, but few marks of civilization were to be seen for many miles, and I must confess a feeling of loneliness crept over me, and my horse drooped his ears and seemed to experience something of the same feeling. But I remembered Him who promised, "Lo, I am with you alway," and thought of the splendid chance to study, at least casually, botany and one branch of geology; so I took new courage and increased my speed.

Three days travel of forty to forty-five miles each brought me to Lucedale, a pretty little village on the M., J. and K. C. R. R., the location of one of my churches. As there was no special reason for hurrying to the parsonage, I spent a day "getting acquainted with the brethren" on the route. I preached my initiatory sermon on this circuit the first Sunday in January. Then, after three hundred and ten miles travel by several means of locomotion, one of which was walking, and a variety of experiences—some of which were not at all pleasant—I got my family to the parsonage the eleventh of January. The next day our first Quarterly Conference was held. Bro. Simmons, the presiding elder, was present and preached us a good sermon. Soon after we arrived here the good people gave us a pounding, but it was such as no itinerant preacher objects to, and ever and anon they remember us with sacks, bundles, boxes, etc., all of which add comfort to our home.

We have finished our "first round," and entered upon the second with what we think very favorable prospects for a successful year, and we expect by the Lord's help and the assistance of our people here to accomplish this end. Pray for us, brethren.

Yours fraternally,

THOS. J. O'NEIL.

Americus, Miss.

NOTE FROM JACKSON, MISS.

There being in this city a number of children and young people who can not attend the graded schools for the reason that they are obliged to work, I began, on the fourth of February, at Epworth Hall, a free night school for their benefit. Contributions from a few liberal friends supplied the means to procure the necessary furniture and equipments. To secure a faculty, I appealed to the teachers in the public schools. With the utmost alacrity and heartiness they offered their services without remuneration. We began with thirty pupils, and in a little more than two weeks the enrollment has increased to fifty-six. We have twenty-two teachers, most of whom serve only one night each week. A few give more time. Our faculty is unsurpassed for competency and efficiency. With clock-work regularity they attend, regardless of weather. They could not be more enthusiastic in their work if they were paid a handsome salary. The faculty embraces members of the various churches. W. C. BLACK.

CENTRAL CHURCH, MERIDIAN.

Our work this year is moving off most hopefully in Central Church. The two aid societies and all the missionary societies are increasing in numbers and in zeal for the Master. Our Epworth League is growing in numbers, piety, and in efficient work. The Sunday-school is said to be the best in the history of the church, and on last Sunday we had four hundred and twenty present. The congregation is growing so large that it is with great difficulty we get the people into our house of worship on Sunday morning. Collections are well in advance of the past two years up to this time, and we have had twenty-two accessions to the church since Conference. We are all expecting, and are praying for a good year.

J. M. WEEMS, P. C.

CHURCH BURNED.

MR. EDITOR: St. John's, our little church, near Nugent, Miss., was destroyed by fire Sunday night, Feb. 10 (instant.) St. John's Church was built in 1895, and was dedicated in June of the same year by the late Rev. J. B. Walker, under the pastorate of Rev. E. T. Breland. It was a comparatively new building, costing about $700. It was furnished with chairs, and contained an excellent organ. Nothing was saved; no insurance. The fire was caused from a defective flue. Our loss is great, but, by the help of God, we will rebuild on or near the same site.

G. W. HIVELEY.

Feb. 19, 1901.

Rev. J. T. Abney, writing from Wesley Chapel, Natchez, Feb. 19 says: "We are moving along smoothly at Wesley Chapel. Will begin protracted meeting next Sunday (D. V.). Hope to have a great revival. The Lord abundantly bless you in the great work of the ADVOCATE."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Rev. J. A. Miller, of Patterson, La., says: "I am having some success in my work so far; more in the increase of my congregations, and the serious attention given to the word, than in accessions. The prospects for a revival is much more promising than it has been for the past two years."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

It will be gratifying to the many friends of Sister Thames to hear that she is convalescing, and will doubtless soon be restored to health.

We have heard with painful regret of the severe illness of Rev. W. D. Barrongh, P. C., of Nettleton circuit. He has the sympathy and prayers of his numerous brethren and friends.

We note with sorrow the death of Rev. J. C. Woodruff, which occurred at his home near Cleveland, a few weeks ago. He and all of his family were stricken with small-pox, which resulted in the death of himself and one child. He was a local preacher of our church, and had served efficiently as a supply several charges.

Bro. Bowen writes from Tupelo: "The Lord is blessing us wonderfully; twenty-two accessions to the church since Jan. 1; ten of them on profession of faith. All church work is growing nicely. We have plans matured to provide for indebtedness on the church."

Bro. Harbin, Main Street, Water Valley, writes Feb. 15: "We had a glorious prayer meeting last night; seventy were present; four asked for prayer, and one was converted. We were all filled with the Holy Ghost." Such is the way to have revivals and conversions. Why be always sowing and never reaping? Why should the pastor be dallying along and waiting for the Sommer time or for the advertising professional evangelist? Let faith and effort be for present results.

The colportage work since Conference has been gratifying. Business has been good. Many books, both old and new, have been put in circulation, and the outlook is propitious for a prosperous year. By divine aid we hope to make this first year of the new century memorable for the distribution of good literature. Will the brethren help us right away with cash orders or the equivalent? Also with remittance on accounts? Let each one who knows himself to be indebted to the colporter for any amount, even the least, remit very soon, as there exists a pressing need.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Winona, Miss., Feb. 16, 1901.

ACKERMAN CHARGE.

The first Quarterly Conference for this charge was held Monday, Feb. 11, Rev. T. W. Dye, our faithful and efficient presiding elder, was with us and preached two excellent sermons, Sunday, the tenth. This charge has one appointment less than last year, yet the assessment for the preacher in charge is in advance of last year. To-day we paid off a debt of about seven years' standing on our parsonage here, which has been an incubus around the neck of the church during all those years. We felt like singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow"—indeed, we did sing it in our hearts. We have added by certificate and otherwise eighteen to roll of members since Conference. Our Sunday-schools are increasing in numbers and interest. Congregations fine, and indications of the presence and power of the Spirit of God are seen in all our services. It will not be long, if Methodism continues to grow (which we have not a doubt about), when we will want a better house in which to worship at this place. The one we now have is comfortable, but does not fitly represent the progressive spirit of Methodism. When we decide to do better, Doctor, will let you know. Come up to see us. We will do our best for the ADVOCATE.

G. W. GORDON.

Feb. 14, 1901.

ROSEDALE IS REJOICING.

The conditions here are no longer "peculiar and embarrassing." The church debt has been paid in full. The claim against the parsonage has been lifted. All other obligations (and there were others) have been cancelled. The parsonage has been made comfortable and attractive. "Old things are passed away." Former pastors and presiding elders, knowing what the "cyclone," and the "high-water," and debts have done for Rosedale, will rejoice with us. Our people feel better, and they say they are going to do better. We shall see. J. E. CUNNINGHAM.

P. S.—We still have the best presiding elder in the Conference.

Feb. 20, 1901.

The man tangled in the tape from the ticker is the type of the average business man. His business cares wrap him about like the coils of a constrictor and slowly crush out his life. The common sign of the business man's slavery is "weak stomach," the natural consequence of the rapid eating, the indigestible pastry, the coffee and pie or doughnuts, with which many a man stuffs his stomach under the name of "quick lunch." The quickest way back to a strong stomach and sound health is to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery until perfectly cured. It goes to the root of disease. It removes the cause of ill-health. It makes more blood and better blood, and this blood nourishes every organ in the body to the highest point of vigorous health.

"During the summer and fall of 1896," writes Chas. H. Sergeant, Esq., of Plain City, Madison Co., Ohio. "I became all 'run down,' nerves were out of order. I wrote to Dr. Pierce for advice. He said I had general debility, and advised Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and, thanks to you for your advice, I used six bottles, and since I stopped taking it about one year ago, I have not taken any medicine of any kind, and have been able to work every day. My appetite is good, I can eat three square meals a day, and I do not feel that miserable burning in the stomach after eating. My blood and nerves are in good shape, and I am in good running order."

Consistent with its policy to constantly improve its service, the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad is now relaying its track between New Orleans and Slidell, a distance of twenty-nine miles, with new steel rails, weighing seventy-five pounds to the yard.

The entire line has been ballasted in the most approved manner from end to end, and, notwithstanding the increased price of steel, two-thirds of the entire mileage has been relaid with 75-pound new steel rails, and the balance of the line will be relaid as rapidly as the material can be procured.

These improvements are not only an indication of the prosperous condition of the property, but an assurance of safety and comfort to travelers.

The entire Queen and Crescent system, of which the New Orleans and Northeastern forms a part, is now a thoroughly up-to-date system of railroads running the very best equipment in the most modern style.

TEACHERS' BUREAU.

The Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has, under paragraph 615 of our Discipline, established a TEACHERS' BUREAU. The purpose of this Bureau is the advancement of Christian Education. We propose to do our best to secure for the graduates of our institutions, and for other competent persons, positions in our schools and colleges; but we guarantee a position to nobody. Applicants for positions will be furnished, upon request, with our application form, which will explain itself. Since the making of money is not the purpose of our Bureau, we will make our nominations with the greatest possible care. Presidents of our schools and colleges, and Boards of Trustees seeking teachers, will do well to apply to us. The facilities of the Board for this work are unusual. We have a constituency, preachers and laymen, of one million and a half. We request the pastors throughout our Connection to advertise this Bureau, and to notify us of any vacancy in any school, secular or Christian, as soon as it occurs. By so doing they will greatly aid us in promoting Christian education. Address Rev. J. D. Hammond, Cor. Sec., Nashville, Tenn.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1901.

A change of church relations because of change of opinions may be taken as an evidence of honesty, but we fail to see wherein it is an evidence of great courage, especially if the church to which the changeling goes is as respectable as the one he leaves, and gives him equal social advantages and equal remuneration. And, if it happens that in changing churches the man's salary is largely increased without being required to change his opinions, there is ground to suspect that courage would have been required to resist the call to change.

Madam Wu, wife of the Chinese Minister at Washington, is blessed with a full share of good common sense. She is studying the ways of Western women, with approval in some things and disapproval in others. She thinks American girls are too fond of society, and devote too much time to it. Her conclusions are just: "Society is a good thing in moderation, but too much of it is not good for anyone. It must take their minds from other more important things." Every practical mother in the United States must see that Madam Wu expresses the truth.

Those who give themselves wholly to "the lusts of the flesh, the desires of the eye, and the pride of life," thus nourishing and gratifying the natural man, are in a fair way to lose their souls. No room is left for thoughts of God, of eternity, or preparation for a better world. Convictions are stifled, high and holy aspirations are quenched, and the soul becomes dead to all that is good. There must be an awakening, but, alas! in thousands of cases the quickening power, though felt, is despised and thrust aside, and the hardened sinner says to the Spirit: "Go thy way." The convenient season never comes to the worldly-minded.

The unjust steward of whom we read in the Scriptures, though not the owner of the estate which he superintended, was as untrammeled in its management as though he was lord of all. He was fully trusted to rent the lands, collect the proceeds, and to make returns at the proper time. The waste of his lord's goods had in it the elements of egregious sin, ingratitude, deception and dishonesty. So it is with the sinner under the gospel. What he has is not his own. He is God's steward, but he is free in the use of all that God puts into his hand. How ungrateful and dishonest the man who wastes all in riotous living, or deliberately refuses to make suitable returns to God. He will be held strictly to account, and be cast into outer darkness.

A BIT OF INCONSISTENCY.

Senator Money, of Mississippi, saw fit to oppose the anti-canteen amendment to the Army Reorganization Bill when it was up for discussion. He thought evidently to add to the force of his opposition by relating his record as a temperance man. He is certainly a model. He does not use liquor in any form, nor does he smoke or chew tobacco. He is against the saloon, never signing petitions for opening one, and always votes the "dry ticket" in local-option elections. We are obliged to think that sobriety and good morals are promoted by the Senator's personal habits and his course with reference to the liquor traffic in his home State. Were he the opposite of what he is in his personal habits, and did he favor open saloons in his township or parish, it is more than possible that Mississippi would not now be as free from the liquor traffic as it is.

But when it comes to voting liquor or no liquor for the army, Mr. Money arrays himself on the side of liquor, and tells his countrymen that he does so because the canteen "promotes temperance, because it promotes good health, because it promotes morals, because it promotes discipline, and comfort, and contentment among our soldiers." If this is true, then liquor in the army is a good thing. And if it does so much good in the army, it can not be a bad thing at home, and Senator Money is a bit inconsistent in voting to keep liquor out of the reach of his neighbors, and voting to put it within reach of the soldiers. Perhaps Senator Money is like good Sister S.—a quaint old West Tennessee country Christian. She kept a decanter, but it was seldom seen. She advocated total abstinence except in cases of sickness. One Sunday night a fearful tornado swept the country. It looked for a little while like her home would be destroyed. But the storm subsided, and all lives were safe. The old lady brought out the decanter, and offered each one a drink, including a couple of neighbors who were tarrying for the night. She apologized for setting out the bottle by saying: "Ordinarily, I don't believe in drinking liquor, but in extreme cases like this, I think a little will do good."

Admitting that liquor in the army exchange or canteen will keep those addicted to drink from running to outside saloons, we still maintain that drink is neither necessary to the soldier's comfort or health. And Senator Money, and all who side with him, forget that recruits, who are not addicted to drink, have put before them in the canteen strong temptation, which, in the absence of ordinary restraints, is hard to resist. This fact ought to have some bearing on the minds of those who favor the canteen. Principles that will induce a man to put temptation out of the way of his neighbors ought to induce him to do the same thing for the soldiers. But the canteen is dead. May it never have a resurrection!

ONE OF OUR GREAT SINS.

In no respect do American people show greater disregard for divine law than in the matter of divorce and remarriage. God's law confines one man to one woman, and, once united, "they are no more twain, but one flesh." It is by this arrangement that God proposes the perpetuation of the human race, and to preserve the purity and integrity of family life. "Our Lord gave this matter special attention, teaching that a man should leave his father and mother, and cleave unto his wife. He allowed but one cause for legal separation, utterly repudiating the unholy practice of writing a woman a bill of divorcement, and sending her away for any trivial cause. This, our Lord said, was not so in the beginning, but was the direct result of the hardness of the people's hearts.

It is strangely inconsistent that men who recognize the sanctity of the marriage relation, founded on the law of God, and take so much pains to preserve the legitimacy of offspring, will allow its dissolution for causes not only unscriptural, but trifling, and which tend to make marriage a mockery. Of course, we understand that the State undertakes the control of marriage only as a civil institution. At the same time it recognizes it as an institution of more than a civil character by sanctioning the validity of the rite when performed by a minister acting under authority of the church. We naturally conclude from this that, however the purely secular mind may regard the matter, the framers of our laws looked at marriage both as a human and as a divine institution.

The idea of sanctity with which the Divine Being invested marriage no longer has a place in the minds of many. Marriage is a convenience—to be entered into for reasons of state, or for personal gratification, and to be broken off whenever it is discovered that the reasons which induced the marriage no longer exist. On this account the State, for the accommodation of the constantly increasing number of dissatisfied married people, has multiplied the causes for which divorces may be granted, until as trivial a cause as incompatibility of temper may be made the basis of legal separation. More than one State in the Union is regarded as the paradise of persons who desire to be freed from the matrimonial yoke.

Divorces are now so common as to be alarming. The foundations are threatened. There are two ways to stay the evil. Let the States which have easy divorce laws repeal them, and go back to the old laws. This some of them are doing; at least, they are so changing the statutes as to make it more difficult both to obtain a divorce and to remarry after a divorce has been granted. To make this latter, and to compel one State to respect the marriage laws of another, a uniform law on the subject for all the States is advocated.

Another way to help cure the evil is for the churches which exercise authority over their ministers to rigidly enforce the laws against performing the marriage ceremony for persons known to have been divorced for any than the one scriptural cause. In that case the remarriage of divorced persons would become odious, and those who have just claim to respectability will be slow to seek a separation, save for the proper cause. The law of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is sufficiently strict. Let us observe it.

In this age of fast living, accompanied, as it is, by so much immorality, the utmost fidelity to God and home must be maintained by all Christians. They must stand true and save the country. The Republic can not survive the breaking up of family life.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

The Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church has just closed its annual session in New York. A full report of its work has not yet come to hand. From Dr. Parkhurst, editor of Zion's Herald, who attended the meeting, we gather facts worthy of consideration, two of which we note in this connection:

1. That during the four years ending Oct. 31, 1900, there was a falling off in the sale of books, as compared with the four years ending Oct. 31, 1896, to the amount of $467,244.38, or a little more than 33⅓ per cent. This is remarkable, and accounted for, not on the ground that the people do not read, but on the ground that they do not want what the two great Houses at New York and Cincinnati produce. In other words, the brains of the church has not produced what the people demand. Whether this is a good sign or a bad sign, we undertake not to say—not now.

2. That only two of the newspapers published by the church paid expenses last year, viz.: the Christian Advocate, New York, and the Northwestern Christian Advocate at Chicago. For this state of things the agents are not to blame. They did their part. In answer to the popular demand for cheap papers, they reduced the price of all the leading papers except the Advocate at New York. The clamor was, "Give us cheaper papers, and you will greatly increase their circulation." This is a fallacy, as the agents have fairly demonstrated. Let our brethren note this: The reduction of the price of a paper, in hope of increasing its circulation, has failed everywhere it has been tried, North and South. The agents tried the plan of offering books as premiums to increase the circulation of the New York Advocate. This, also, they say, is a failure. The best that can be said in favor of the plan is that it kept the circulation from falling off.

The papers that failed to pay expenses, with one or two exceptions, are first-class in every particular. They are edited by the best brains of the church. The conclusion we reach is, that a low-priced paper can not live without being subsidized, or cutting into the profits of other departments of the Book Concern. Our Southern Methodist papers can not do this, for, with two exceptions, they are solely Annual Conference enterprises, and survive through the personal efforts of their friends, if not on their merits. Let our thoughtful brethren consider, and make use of these facts.

JELLY-FISH RELIGION.

We have little use for jelly-fish religion. A religion without back-bone, or ribs or limbs, without muscle or sinews—in a word, a religion without organization, plan or purpose. A jelly-fish is simply a mass with only a little more power of locomotion than an oyster. One can imagine how useless such a creature would be in a sphere where aggressiveness is required, or in a contest that calls for strength and endurance.

Jelly-fish religion aims to amalgamate all sorts of elements into a mass with the church idea left out, thus forming a society without bone or sinew or muscle. Such a mass can never be active and aggressive, or successfully contend against the powers of darkness. There must be in everything that deserves the name of church, strength, solidity, power to go forward as well as power to resist. An organization destitute of church elements is too much like a fort without fighting equipment. It may withstand an attack, but it can never drive away an enemy.

The divine record certifies to the fact that the first converts to Christianity united with the church. Within a fortnight after Pentecost about ten thousand, it is supposed, came into the fold. "And the Lord added to the church daily such as were saved." The same record also gives us to understand that they paid attention to something more than the ethics of the gospel. Its great principles commanded their attention, and they stood for what the gospel taught. "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." These were the essentials of Christian life, the elements necessary to success as a church. Steadfastness in these things was the condition of remaining in the fold. They were instructed to withdraw themselves from every one that walked disorderly, and with a heretic they were to have nothing to do. They allowed no tampering with the church.

Christians organized according to the gospel must be united on the principles of the gospel, and this means a good deal more than common brotherhood and fellowship. It means to accept and defend and propagate the doctrines of grace. No matter if men, who occupy different standpoints, see differently. This only makes those who see alike, align themselves in one army and contend the more earnestly for the faith. They have something definite in view. And they accomplish their purpose. This is why a company of men, bound together under certain controlling principles, are zealous and uniformly successful. They believe what they preach. This is the secret of the great success of the Baptists, of the Methodists and of other denominations that exert their strength. There would be a paralysis of all energy, and death would soon ensue, if all these orders of Christians were to agree on a truce and join in one common band. Peace among them could not last. It would be like bringing several families under the same roof.

It is all well enough to talk about cultivating fraternity. Indeed, it is right. Brethren ought to dwell together in unity. But everybody knows that the friendliest and happiest neighborhoods are those in which every family dwells inside of its own yard. The happiest and most brotherly Christians are those who love their own church and at the same time rejoice in the prosperity of fellow-Christians of a different name. Denominationalism does not hurt if denominations recognize the religion and church relation of others. But if anti-denominationalism is carried so far as to demand the abandonment of our churches, the compromise of our principles, and the coming together in a mass meeting, the result will be an invertebrate Christianity—a jelly-fish religion that will dissolve the first time a storm of opposition strikes it.

HISTORY OF METHODISM.

"A SHORT HISTORY OF METHODISM. By John W. Boswell." Nashville: Publishing House M. E. Church, South.

This book is comprehensive and exact, and satisfies the reader, and ought to satisfy its author. It fills an unoccupied place in the history of Methodism, and gives information to its young members of that "smallest of all seeds," whose vitality has become the greatest of all shelters; so that all people can dwell in its branches, whether of America, Europe, Asia, Africa, or Polynesia—a living church of the living God.

DEATH OF REV. H. B. TREVILLION.

Rev. H. B. Trevillion died at Columbia, Miss., Dec. 28, 1900. Rev. W. M. Williams, in reporting this sad occurence, says:

"He suffered much and long; but he was patient and submissive. He fell on sleep quietly and peacefully. He was never well after suffering that unmerciful and inhuman treatment to which he was subjected at Fernwood, Miss. His family are here, and will remain here for the present. I suppose there will be a suitable obituary written and published in due time."

It is due Bro. Williams to say that this notice was sent by him promptly to the editor, but it failed to reach him; and was sent to the Department at Washington, and then returned to Bro. Williams. It reached the office last week, but too late for publication. We make this explanation in defense of both Bro. Williams and the editor.

PERSONAL.

Rev. K. M. Harrison has entered upon his fourth year at Amory, Miss., and says he is "doing fairly well." Bro. Harrison's past record is a guarantee of success for this, his last year on that charge.

A note from Rev. Q. A. Oats, who is interested in securing a home for Sister Honnoll, desires us to say that his address, which he failed to give in his letter, is Verona, Miss. His note will be found on the eighth page of this issue.

Dr. John Mathews, of McKendree Church, Nashville, and for a long time pastor in New Orleans, has been sick for two weeks or more. During the time his pulpit has been filled by Bishop Hargrove and other ministers resident in Nashville.

We had a pleasant call last week from Rev. R. W. Tucker, of Lake Charles. The grasp of his hand and his conversation was that of a Methodist preacher. We heartily thank him for remembering the office, and hope he will call again.

Dr. W. C. Black, in addition to his work as pastor of a large church, has opened a night school in Jackson. He has given us a short account of it, which we print on our third page. All honor to Dr. Black and those who are co-operating with him.

Rev. T. L. Melton is a busy presiding elder, with the care of many churches on his hands and heart, but he does not forget the ADVOCATE. We have mailed him a bundle for distribution, and hope soon to hear from him in a substantial way.

A personal note, accompanied by an article of great importance, from Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, of the Columbus district, is greatly appreciated by this editor. How happy are we to know that friends remember us, and pray for us. Such friends as Dr. Sullivan make life brighter, and help men carry their burdens.

We received a nice letter last week from a dear mother in Israel, now past eighty years of age, Mrs. H. A. Currie, of Omega, La. She has been a lover and reader of the ADVOCATE for many years, and still loves it. God bless the dear old saint, and may the "mite" she sends to help purchase a home for Sister Honnoll stimulate others to go and do likewise.

Eight years' work as presiding elder has not disqualified Rev. H. C. Morehead for work in other lines. He has been more than well received at Houston and Wesley, and has made a fine start as pastor, not only in preaching and visiting, but also in looking after the interests of the ADVOCATE. We thank him for a nice list of subscribers. We hope his example will be catching.

The many friends of Mrs. F. A. Lyons, of this city, president of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Louisiana Conference, will be grieved to hear of the death of her eldest son, Eugene R. Lyons, who was killed in battle in the Philippines on Jan. 1, 1901. Our sympathy is extended to our sister and her bereaved family in this, their great sorrow. May our Heavenly Father comfort her heart!

A personal note from Rev. T. W. Lewis, of Columbus, Miss., leads us to infer that his health has greatly improved. He looks after 706 members, has made 375 visits in eight weeks, and received fifteen persons into the church. He informs us also that the Shaeffer Class Meeting, started many years ago—before the war, if we mistake not—still meets every Wednesday morning. May our brother's labors be crowned with abundant success!

"Gilderoy" is suffering under the weight of his new title, "Dr." Porter." You will have to stand it, my brother. By the way, this is a good time to tell a good tale on Dr. Porter. Some years ago he was appointed to a nice station, and tried to do his best preaching. It did not exactly please a young lawyer, a member of his church, who was free to express his opinion. "Why," said a friend, "I thought you were a great admirer of 'Gilderoy.'" "I am," he replied. "Well, 'Gilderoy' and Porter are one and the same." "No, no," said the young lawyer; "'Gilderoy' has a great deal more sense than Porter."

GENERAL MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

To the Delegates and Alternate Delegates to the General Missionary Conference, to be Held in New Orleans, La., April 24-30—

Dear Brethren: So few have responded to my note of inquiry in a recent number of the Christian Advocate, that I am led to suppose that some of you do not yet know of your appointment as delegates to one of the most interesting and important gatherings ever held in New Orleans or elsewhere. The list of the delegates and alternates from the Mississippi Conference is as follows:

Clerical Delegates—T. L. Mellen, W. L. C. Hunnicutt, G. A. Gnice, W. W. Simmons, H. W. Featherston, E. H. Monnger, T. B. Holloman, J. M. Morse, H. G. Hawkins, J. P. Drake, D. P. Bradford, L S. Jones, W. L. Linfield, R. D. Norsworthy. Alternates—H. M. Ellis, W. H. Huntley, W. T. Griffin, L Carley, W. M. Sullivan, W. B. Lewis, J. G. Galloway. Lay Delegates—C. W. Taylor, Pelahatchie; W. S. F. Tatum, Hattiesburg; E. S. Drake, Port Gibson; Dr. V. Russell, Magee; R. L. Bennett, Yazoo City; W. L. Nugent, Jackson; D. W. Heidelberg, Shubuta; T. M. Evans, Gulfport; Rev. F. J. Robinson, Brandon; J. S. Turner, Hattiesburg. Alternates—O. M. Abney, Montrose; E W. Stafford, Vossburg; R. W. Millsaps, Jackson; G. B. Harper, Decatur; T. N. Jones, Madison Station; Rev. Dr. Irvin Miller, Walnut Grove; L. L. Lampton, Magnolia.

It has been suggested that arrangements be made to entertain us as a delegation, and so secure cheaper rates; and as we had not organized, the president of our Conference Board of Missions asked me to request all who intended to go and desired to have board and lodging secured for them with the others of our delegation to communicate with me at once. So far no layman has written me, and of the preachers only ten have been heard from. Each one is expected to pay his own way. If we go in a body, we can probably secure convenient lodgings and board at reduced rates.

One week after this notice appears in the Advocate, I will endeavor to make the desired arrangements for all who shall have notified me. The statute of limitations will apply to all others. T. L. Mellen, Miss'y Sec'y for Miss. Conf.

PASTORS OF LOUISIANA CONFERENCE

After a delay of two weeks the Annual has at last been mailed. The book is not what it should be. There are some misspelled names; the headings of two reports are left out; one line is dropped in the abstract minutes; the name of Robt. Howell is in the place of Robt. Harrell in the list of delegates to the Missionary Conference; but, worst of all, the list of appointments show the omission of an appointment—Bunkie—and its pastor, and several minor mistakes. The appointments were originally set in the old form, and the proof read. At my instance it was reset, and, to save another delay, the printer was instructed to read the proof carefully and go ahead with the work. I regret very much to note these errors, and hope in the future to be more alert.

It will be a great accommodation to me if the brethren will get their collection for Minutes in hand in full as soon as possible, and send the money to the treasurer, that I may get an idea of the amount I can draw against for next year's book, and thus get the work well under way before Conference.

Is it too much to ask that whatever is collected from the distribution of the Minutes at 15 cents each be turned over to Bro. McCutchen, and thus make up for the works that fall short?

I now have a very valuable new feature in hand, and hope to drive it to a successful termination in the next month, and thus put our Annual in the lead of Southern Methodist year books, Minutes, etc. This and other items will add to the expense of the book, and if the money is not raised from the charges, it must be provided for by advertising.

I hope shortly to make a statement through the Advocate of all expenses in connection with the printing of the book.

Respectfully,
Wm. G. Evans.

AT MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

The second term of Millsaps College, which began on February sixth, finds about fifteen more students in attendance than there were before Christmas. The total enrollment to date is 225. The present year is easily one of the most successful in the history of the college.

Bishop D. A. Goodsell has accepted the invitation of Millsaps College to be present at the commencement of 1901. He will deliver the commencement sermon on Sunday, June 9, and the annual address on June 10. Bishop Goodsell is known as one of the most broad minded and strongly attractive men in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he will receive a cordial reception in Mississippi.

The new observatory, given by Mr. Dan A. James, of Yazoo City, in memory of his late father and brother, is a topic of continued interest. The designs and plans have been very carefully prepared, and the equipment is expected to prove one of the most serviceable of its kind. The contract for the work has been given out, and work will be begun on March 1. It is hoped that the observatory will be completed, with the telescope in place, in time for the coming commencement.

Realizing that future senior classes will receive great assistance in their work from the possession of such an excellent observatory, the present senior class, which is doing work in astronomy, has adopted resolutions of thanks to Mr. James for this gift, in behalf of Millsaps College.

The time for holding the annual meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society, Louisiana Conference, has been changed to April 4-7. Auxiliaries will elect delegates at once. Visitors will be welcome.

THE WHITWORTH SCHOLARSHIP AGAIN.

Since Brother Jones' kind words about Whitworth College and the recently endowed scholarship, we have had an application for its benefits which has gone straight to my heart.

It is an eager request from a womanly girl, who says: "I am very anxious to come to Whitworth, but it will be utterly impossible to do so unless I get some help. Please do all you can to secure this scholarship for me." The promptness with which this letter comes (in less than a week from the time of the publication concerning the donation) indicates the earnestness of the writer.

The scholarship is already in use, and hope from this source is denied. The only work we are able to offer is work in the dining-room and Institute, and for these positions the supply is not nearly equal to the demand. If we had more of these scholarships, it would be a great blessing to the poor girls of our church who are unable to obtain an education.

We hear a great deal of fine talk about "a nation never rising above its women," and "as the mother is, so is the child," which sounds like mockery upon the lips of those who are doing nothing for the education of our girls. Shall the church surrender this duty to the State? Or shall she doom to ignorance her girls while she educates beyond their influence and companionship her boys? Surely not!

This is not a growl, for Whitworth College appreciates the many favors bestowed upon her by the Methodist Church, "whose she is, and whom she serves." It is an appeal to those who are able to help for scholarships which will enable us to reply to such letters as the one from which we have quoted: "Come. Your church gladly gives to you the privileges which you so much desire."

Mrs. A. F. Watkins.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

We are glad to say that the Lord is still with us and doing great things for the college. We have enrolled up to date more than 400 students, more than 200 of these being boarders in the college. We have had since school opened about 150 professions of salvation. Many have entered the experience of perfect love, as can be seen by their lives as well as by their testimonies. This work has been done without a protracted meeting in the college, being done from week to week during the session. There has been scarcely a single week but that some have been saved. The religious atmosphere in the college is something wonderful.

Few girls ever go through a session here without being reached. And yet the intellectual and physical natures are not neglected. We are doing a high grade of thorough, honest, conscientious work in every department. We are sending out some strong young women, intellectually and spiritually, as teachers and religious workers. We trust that praying people everywhere will pray for our work. We are trying to run a college of high order, giving God the right of way in all things. We want to make it a safe place for girls and young women where they can be sent, and return home not only safe from injurious influences so common to boarding schools, but return better than when they came to us. We want to make strong young women wholly given up to God. To this end we want the prayers and help of all good people.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

MISSISSIPPI.

Rev. Thos. H. Dorsey, Arcola, Miss.
EDITOR.

Miss Mabel Cayce, secretary of the Senior Epworth League at Columbus, Miss., gives the following very encouraging news: "Our League in Columbus is in a very prosperous condition. We have eighty-one members of the Senior League. The following officers are elected for the year 1901: President, Prof. J. M. Barrow; first vice-president, Mr. Robert Lewis; second vice-president, Miss Sadie Hudson; third vice-president, Miss Ella Sherod; treasurer, Miss Bessie Snell; secretary, Miss Mabel Cayce. Mrs. G. H. Mathis is Junior League Superintendent. With the above corps of officers we may expect great things of the Columbus Leagues during this, the first year of the new century."

Rev. H. G. Hawkins, Centreville, Miss., writes: "The Epworth League at Centreville was reorganized Sunday, Feb. 10, with Miss Annie Whitaker, president, and Miss Freddye Parsons, secretary. An interesting and helpful devotional meeting was held last Sunday. Several sets of the League books have been ordered, and the Reading Circle will meet each Friday night, except the first Friday night in each month, when the Literary Social is to be held. About fifteen Eras are taken." A fine start that. We shall hear from that League.

The General Missionary Conference, which is to convene in the city of New Orleans, April 24-30, will be a great meeting. The programme provides that one day, April 29, shall be Young People's Day. A full day is to be devoted, of which we shall say more next week.

Below we give in full a very fine report of the Leagues in Tupelo, Miss., by Rev. J. A. Bowen, who is the pastor. We are always sure to have good reports from Bro. Bowen wherever he goes. He never forgets the young people. Though he has passed the noon-day of life, he has not forgotten that he was once a boy, nor has he forgotten the needs of young people.

Dear Bro. Dorsey: Your card much appreciated, and I will try to comply with your request. We now have two Leagues instead of one. Last Sunday we completed the organization of the Junior League, with thirty members. There are as many boys as girls in the Junior. We expect to have fifty members soon. Miss Vic Thompson is the superintendent, and she is a great success. She also works with the Seniors. Last Sunday we completed the election of officers for the Senior League, and we are quite fortunate in the selection. Mr. R. B. Hinds, formerly of Guntown, is president; Miss Gertrude Lockard is secretary, and Mr. Ed. Armstrong is treasurer. We have five vice-presidents also. They elected nine instead of three. This solves many problems. This gives us twelve new officers. There are about forty-five members, old and new, in the Senior League. Remember that they have been considerably scattered for a year on account of erection and completion of this beautiful church. (For such a church and parsonage all honor to Bro. Myers and these good people.) The Senior League has purchased five sets of the new Reading Course since Christmas; also purchased a complete outfit for the year's work. We observed League Day, Jan. 13, with good success. The Canvassing Committee will soon have a club of subscribers to the Era. The Juniors have purchased a complete outfit also, and in addition they have purchased three dozen of "Children's Praises." So you see we are about ready for a good year. Some of the best church members here were trained in the Epworth League. We expect Prof. Hays to spend Sunday, Feb. 24, with us. The Lord is blessing us in all church work, and we are delighted and happy in our work. J. A. Bowen.

WOMAN'S KIDNEYS.

Thousands of Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

TO PROVE WHAT SWAMP-ROOT, THE GREAT KIDNEY REMEDY, WILL DO FOR YOU, EVERY READER OF "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" MAY HAVE A SAMPLE BOTTLE SENT FREE BY MAIL.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root investigated by "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," none seem to speak higher of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy than the one we publish this week for the benefit of our readers.

"You have no idea how well I feel. I am satisfied that I do not need any more medicine to be in as good health as I ever was in my life," so says Mrs. Mary Engelhardt, of 2631 Madison street, St. Louis, Mo., to a reporter of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"For more than ten years I had suffered with what the doctors termed female trouble; also heart trouble, with swelling of the feet and limbs. Last summer I felt so badly that I thought I had not long to live. I consulted doctor after doctor and took their medicines, but felt no better. The physicians told me my kidneys were not affected, and while I

Did Not Know I Had Kidney Trouble,

I somehow felt certain my kidneys were the cause of my trouble. A friend recommended me to try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and I must say I derived immediate benefit almost from the first week. I continued the medicine, taking it regular by mail, and am now in splendid health. The pains and aches have all gone. I have recommended Swamp-Root to all my friends, and told them what it has done for me. I will gladly answer any one who desires to write me regarding my case. I most heartily endorse Swamp-Root from every stand point. There is such a pleasant taste to Swamp-Root, and it goes right to the weak spots and drives them out of the system."

MRS. MARY ENGELHARDT.

How to Find Out If You Need Swamp-Root.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work. So when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

Many women suffer untold misery because the nature of their disease is not correctly understood. They are led to believe that womb trouble or female weakness of some sort is responsible for the many ills that beset womankind.

Neuralgia, nervousness, headache, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, rheumatism, a dragging pain or dull ache in the back, weakness or bearing down sensation, profuse or scanty supply of urine, with strong odor, frequent desire to pass it night or day, with scalding or burning sensation,—these are all unmistakable signs of kidney and bladder trouble.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are sleeplessness, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallow, unhealthy complexion, plenty of ambition, but no strength.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty cent and one dollar bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

EDITORIAL NOTICE.—Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder remedy, is so remarkably successful that a special arrangement has been made by which all our readers who have not already tried it may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail. Also a book telling all about kidney and bladder troubles and containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured by Swamp-Root. Be sure and mention reading this generous offer in NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

"TOO GREAT A RISK."

Some one—Mrs. Blount, I think—was speaking of the story current when Lady Jane Franklin was appealing to kings and councilors for assistance in prosecuting the search for her husband. According to this rumor, she was exceedingly averse to this last voyage of Sir John's. So strenuous was she in her opposition, and he so inflexible in his purpose, that they parted in coldness, if not in anger.

We were wives—all six of us gathered about the tea-table—and we discussed the piteous tale quietly, each heart supplying its own comments and making its own application, unspoken until Mrs. Dana said, in a tone which sounded strained to my ears, tranquil though she looked:

"Yet who of us has not known the secret bitterness of such useless repentance as poor Lady Franklin is said to have suffered? I think not a day passes in which I do not say to myself: 'If I had only known! If I had only known!' I was not twenty-one when I had the lesson which will last me all my days. The dearest friend I ever had, or ever shall have, a girl about my age, dropped in unexpectedly one evening when I was entertaining half a dozen fashionable visitors, men and women. Mary Allen's little finger was more to me than all of them put together, but I was mean enough to be mortified when she appeared. She was a very pretty girl, usually. On that night she was positively plain, without color and with haggard lines in her face which made her look at least thirty years old.

"She had been to town on a shopping expedition, and got caught in a shower. I can see her now"—passing her hand nervously over her closed eyes, then opening them as with an effort. "Her skirts were draggled and limp; all the curl was out of her hair, and the stray locks streaked her forehead untidily; her bonnet was not straight upon her head; her boots were muddy, and her hands neglected. As she stopped short in the drawing-room door, blinking in the glare of the chandelier, and confused at sight of the gay party, I had but one thought—to get her out of the way as quickly as possible. I said to myself afterwards that it was for her sake as much as for my own. I lied in saying it, and I knew it.

"I was seated near the door, chatting with a dashing young fellow, a so-called wit with an unsparing tongue.

"'Ah, Mary!' I said, without moving, and in a civil, patronizing way, 'Please step into the library, and wait for me there.'

"She went with never a word. I heard her cross the hall and enter the library.

"'Don't let us detain you,' begged one of my visitors, supposing, as I meant she should, that the newcomer was a dressmaker, or maybe a servant come with a message.

"'Oh, she can wait as well as not,' I answered, and rattled on with our talk, the more gayly for a twinge in my conscience. We had some music, and a great deal of badinage and much laughter. I rang for cake and coffee at nine o'clock, and the visitors stayed half an hour longer. I had 'a good time' in spite of conscience. I could easily make it all right with Mary, who was, no doubt, amusing herself with a book. She had the sweetest disposition in the world, and was always reasonable. She would understand just how it had happened, being as much at home in our house as in her own. Had my mother been in, I should have sent Mary up to her. As it was, what could I do but get her out of range of critical eyes?

"Well, my fashionables took leave at last, and in the hall one of the ladies said to me: 'I am afraid we have been inconsiderate in keeping you all this time from your'— I caught the motion to say 'friend' upon her lips, then she changed the form, and said, 'your visitor.'

"I answered more loudly than I knew:

"'That is all right! My motto is, "Pleasure before business."'

"Mary met me in the library door when they had gone. She had had commissions to do for me in town, and she held my memorandum in one hand with some money. She was very pale, and spoke fast, breathing short and irregularly.

"'I got everything you ordered, Carrie, and here is your change. Everything will be sent by express, except this,' giving me a small box. 'As you wanted that in time for your mother's birthday, day after to-morrow, I thought it better to bring it to you myself. No, I can't sit down. I wish you could have seen me when I came in. I have waited a long time. I ought to have been at home an hour ago. I came by purposely to give you the box.' Then, with the strangest smile I had ever seen on her face, she said: 'But, you see, with me business came before rest and bed.'

"I felt the color flash to my forehead. It is always exasperating to have your own words flung into your teeth.

"'I am sorry you put yourself to so much trouble, I said stiffly. 'There was no necessity for it. I could have sent for the box in the morning just as well.'

"Then, something pushed me on to add: 'Of course, I am greatly obliged to you. But while we are speaking frankly, let me repeat a clever thing you said the other day: "He who reminds me of a favor cancels it."'

"She laughed as queerly as she had smiled.

"'So be it! We will consider all favors done and received canceled up to date—and forever! Good night!'

"I was too angry to stop her as she went away at that. I stayed angry all night and the next day, and on the evening of the second day my father asked me at supper-time if I knew that Mary Allen was dangerously ill. He had met her father on the street. She had had a chill on the train coming home, after getting soaked in a shower; had kept on her wet clothes for hours, and arrived at home after ten o'clock, delirious. Pneumonia of the gravest type had set in that night.

"I rushed around to Mrs. Allen's like a mad creature. Mary was too ill to be seen by anybody. Mrs. Allen was very kind, but would not let me go upstairs.

"'We have heard from a friend who was on the train with her on Tuesday evening that she had a chill on the way out. She made light of it, and said she would be all right next day. She reached the station at eight o'clock. Delirium must have come on at once, for she did not get home until ten.'

The narrator's face worked convulsively, and I put a deprecating hand upon hers.

"'Don't go on!' I pleaded. 'But we thank you for the solemn lesson.'

She rallied voice and composure.

"There is little else to tell. She died four days from the evening of her call upon me. She never recovered consciousness. That was thirty years ago."

Mrs. Sargeant's voice never breaks up a silence. It stole out of it presently into gentlest speech:

"I am literally afraid to part in anger from anybody. The risk is too great.'

"And Mrs. Blount—in something betwixt a sob and a laugh:

"I needn't be ashamed, then, to tell that I have, again and again, called my husband back from the front door—and even from the corner of the street—to ask forgiveness for a hasty word. I always say to myself, by the time his back is turned: 'What if he should never come home alive!' As Mrs. Sargeant says, I can't take the risk."—Marion Harland, in The Housewife.

THE PEACE OF GOD.

The world is wanting in many things, but perhaps in nothing more than peace. War and strife have characterized the history of the race from the beginning. War is an awful thing. The spectacle is too dark for the imagination. Many have tried to represent the horrors of war on canvas, in poetry, and in speech, but no picture was ever dark enough to do justice to the subject.

The inward strife which is waged in the soul is still more dreadful. When the passions wax hot and struggle for the mastery, when conscience and reason are trodden down by hate and lust, when God is dethroned and love cast out, what desolations are wrought that words cannot express. I have heard of [illegible] in the faces of men, women, and children. They are heard in the wild notes of debauch and revelry, and in the fiendish curses which tarnish many a pure name. But these are only outward signs. How dreadful the strife within which ceases not by night nor by day!

But Jesus came to bring peace. The peace which he gives is not like that which the world gives. The peace of the world rests on a rotten foundation and can not last. It is swept away by every storm that passes over the soul, and must be rebuilt almost every day. The peace which Jesus gives is the peace of God, a peace that can not be broken by the calamities of earth. Its foundation is so deep that earthly storms can not shake them. They are the foundations of truth and righteousness. This peace abideth forever.

The peace of God is a great peace. It passeth all understanding. It flows, not like a shallow rill, but "like a river." It is the same peace that dwells in the bosom of God Himself. He is not agitated by the storms of earth. The heathen may rage and the people imagine a vain thing, but God is not alarmed. He witnesses the efforts of men to overthrow his kingdom, he hears the din of earthly strife against righteousness, but he is not agitated. He knows what will be the outcome of it all. "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh."

It is a marvelous thing that this peace can be communicated to mortals. There must be an intimate relation between God and man, for he is able to pour into the soul of man the same spirit that dwells in himself. The love of God, the truth of God, the righteousness of God, the peace of God are given to men. These are fruits of the Spirit. "The love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us." The peace of God is given in the same way. It is not a peace which we can manufacture for ourselves by our philosophy. Men have made strenuous efforts to drive away the unrest of the soul and create contentment and tranquillity by certain doctrines. But these expedients have not met with encouraging success. The peace produced in this way is not perfect peace. It is not satisfactory peace. It is not sweet peace.

But the peace of God, the peace which God gives, the same peace which dwells in him, is perfect peace. All professing Christians do not experience it nor manifest it. Many fret and worry night and day. It is often difficult to distinguish between a Christian and one who knows nothing about God by this mark. Too many church members are discontented and unhappy. Their burden of care and doubt and fear is as heavy as that of other men. But these things ought not so to be. It is because they are Christians in name only, and not in heart. Jesus said, "Let not your heart be troubled." It is written, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee." "Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."—Selected.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

MRS. M. A. RAPER, wife of Rev. J. W. Raper, of Buena Vista circuit, North Mississippi Conference, and daughter of Prior and Mary Lawson, was born in Bolivar county, Miss., June 20, 1864, and was married to Rev. J. W. Raper, July 4, 1880. She was converted at a prayer meeting held by her husband, Aug. 12, 1881, and received into the M. E. Church, South, by Rev. J. B. Adare, and died at the parsonage home in Buena Vista, Dec. 28, 1900.

The writer had only a slight acquaintance with Sister Raper, but there is one thing that speaks a great deal for her Christian character, and faithfulness to her family and her God, and that is the success attained by her husband in the work of the ministry. None but the faithful itinerant and his companion know of the sacrifices made on the part of the preacher's wife, in order that the work of the Lord may prosper. For eight years she, as a faithful itinerant's wife, kept the home and looked after the children, while the father went forth preaching the gospel and saving sinners for Christ. Well may we sing when a good Methodist preacher's wife dies:

"Servant of God, well done!"

I feel that our noble wives are due, and should have higher seats or places of honor in the home above than ourselves. May the blessed Spirit which the beloved husband has preached to others sustain him in this hour of dark trial! And may the good Spirit lead him in caring for the seven precious children left behind without a mother's influence!

My dear brother, you have our sympathies and our prayers, and we pray that the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your hearts and minds in the love of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord; and the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, remain with you always. J. A. LEACH.

CORA J. HATHORN, daughter of Milton and Sarah Hathorn, was born in Covington county, Miss., Nov. 7 1877, and while only an infant lost her mother, for which reason Cora was reared by her grandfather, Wm. Blount, at Blountsville, Miss., where she remained until the time of her death, which sad event occurred at the home of J. L. Berry, Nov. 1, 1900.

Cora was a bright and loving girl, and manifested many noble traits of character, which won for her the respect and esteem of all that knew her. She joined the M. E. Church, South, when about twelve years old, in which she lived a consistent life, and for a number of years rendered valuable services as organist. During the last two years of her life she suffered much pain, but she patiently endured it, and was always pleasant, and when she saw that her time had come to depart this life, she expressed her readiness to go. Her last words were spoken to two of her relatives—a cousin and an aunt. To the former she said, "We will never meet any more in this world, but be a good girl and meet me in heaven;" and to the latter she said, "Aunt, don't grieve for me; it is best for me to go, and when you come, I will be at the gate waiting and watching for you."

We greatly miss Miss Cora, but rejoice in the assurance that her sufferings are over, and in the hope that we shall meet her again, and never be seperated any more. The Lord sustain and comfort the bereaved.

Her pastor, M. A. THURMAN.

DR. CYRUS W. KNIGHT was born in Canton, Mo., in 1843, and died in Covington, La., on the morning of the twenty-fourth of January, 1901. He combined in his person many gifts of nature which few have ever inherited from their parents. He had a superior mind, well cultivated. Whilst he had been a planter, yet he did not wholly lay aside the practice of medicine for that pursuit. He became surgeon in the United States Army in Yellowstone Park, and for two or three years served in that capacity. He was sent out by the Board of Health to South America and to British Honduras as its representative. Surgeon-General Weyman appointed him acting surgeon of the Marine Hospital Service in these localities. In both these capacities he gave perfect satisfaction. At Belize, in British Honduras, he was attacked with a severe malady, which gradually grew worse. For fourteen months he suffered much and painfully. He came here three months ago, hoping to find relief in the climate, but what he sought was not found. When I came to this place I heard of his critical condition. Being an old friend of mine, I soon approached him on his preparation for the future state. On the fourth ultimo I baptized him and took him into the M. E. Church, South. His conversion was clear, and he died in the peace of the gospel. At the last hour he turned to Him who only can do helpless sinners good. His remains rest peacefully in the Metairie Cemetery, New Orleans. J. F. SCURLOCK.

JOSEPH ROYCE RANDOLPH was born in Jackson county, Ga., Dec. 17, 1820, and died at his home in Prentiss county, Miss., near Lebanon Church, of which he was a member, on the twenty-third of December, 1900.

Bro. Randolph came to Mississippi in young manhood. He was twice married; the first time to Miss Mary J. Asbill, of McNary county, Tenn. Six worthy children remain from this union; all are doing well. Two sons are Methodist preachers; both are members of the North Mississippi Conference. John A. Randolph is a chaplain of the army in the Philippine Islands, and Joseph B. is pastor of New Albany circuit. His second marriage was to Mrs. Risner, who still lives at the old homestead with five children, to mourn their loss.

Bro. Randolph joined the Confederate Army during the Civil War, and made an excellent soldier, and brought back the signs of battle in the loss of his right arm. He belonged to the Twenty-sixth Mississippi Regiment, which saw much hard service. This writer had three uncles in the same regiment. After the war he struggled with adversity, but made an honorable living; was a kind husband, a good father, and a true Christian. He had been a member of the M. E. Church, South, forty-odd years. He loved his church. He lived and died in the faith. W. M. YOUNG.

ANNIE MAY TURNAGE, daughter of H. C. and Lou Turnage, was born in Covington county, Miss., Feb. 11, 1895, and died Oct. 21, 1900. She was a kind, sympathetic, and affectionate child. She never wanted to hurt nor to see anything hurt, and always sympathized with the suffering. The objects of her love were God and all people. It was her custom to offer a prayer to God each night before she retired, in which she would say, "I love God, I love papa and mama, and I love everybody."

Annie May had many friends, a good home, and was very fond of her parents, and well knew that she was one of their greatest treasures; but during her last illness she manifested a willingness to leave all these, in order that God's will might be done. Her father asked her did she believe that God would heal her afflictions, and her reply was: "Yes, pa, I believe he will; but if he doesn't, I shall not be mad with him, nor call him mean. I would not call God mean for anything." We tender our sympathy to the grief-stricken parents, and share in their sorrow, but our sorrow is not such as that of "those who have no hope," for "we believe that Jesus died and rose again, and that those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." M. A. THURMAN.

MARY ELIZABETH TISDALE was born April 21, 1875, and died Jan. 20, 1901. She was converted in October, 1886. She was young when she first found the Lord, but he gave her tender and childish heart such a wonderful filling up with his divine love that it remained with her and stayed in her, a well of sweet and sparkling water springing up into everlasting life, bringing to her the blessed assurance that Jesus was hers until her dying hour, and then it lit up her dying bed and gave her a place by the side of her blessed Lord in the dark hour of night, when she left heart-broken and care-worn mother, grief-stricken sisters and brother and weeping friends, and went home to God.

Miss Lizzie was a noble, good girl, and no one ever for a moment doubted her religion, and her consecration was so prominent and complete that even a stranger would soon learn that she had been with Jesus; yet she was very modest in her conversation, but when she spoke of Christ, it was easy to ascertain that she was not speaking of a stranger. Hall's Family Pills are the best.

God's power he designs to transmit through men. They are the conduits. But what leaky, inefficient agents they are! They lose the power intrusted to them just as the electric conduit's lose their power by "grounding." They come in contact with the earth. Worldliness is the secret. We can not possess or transmit the eternal "all-power" if our lives are in touch with the world of selfishness and sin. The worldly Christian is an imperfect conduit.—J. R. Miller.

Health and Beauty

For generations women have been taught that "beauty is only skin deep," but, like many proverbs, that will not stand. Beauty is blood deep. There can be no beauty without health. Our grandmothers lived closer to nature than we do, and they were so sheltered by their home life that health and beauty were theirs naturally. Skin foods, freckle lotions and face bleaches were unknown commodities. But there has been a great change in the life of women since then. With broader education and larger opportunities, she has developed mentally at the expense of her health. From the quiet duties of home she has gone forth until now we find her in many avocations of life, which prove too great a tax on her vitality. How sad it is to see the cheek robbed of its color and the eye of its fire. These symptoms nearly always show derangements in the delicate feminine organism. They don't call for bleaches or paints or powders, but for a remedy that will make the afflicted organs strong and well. Wine of Cardui is just such a remedy. Women broken in health and spirit have been made healthy and happy by this Wine. No one should give up to the "blues" until this reliable remedy has been tried. It has proven a blessing to other women and will not disappoint you. It brings that buoyancy of spirit, elasticity of step and lightness of heart which is the corner stone of beauty. A healthy woman is always beautiful.

Weatherville, February 4, 1899.

I feel that I must say a few words in praise of the Ladies' greatest friend, Wine of Cardui. It is the most wonderful remedy that I ever tried. I have been a sufferer for years, at times being confined to my bed two or three days each month. A friend recommended Wine of Cardui, and since I have taken it I have been greatly relieved. I intend to continue to take it, for I know it is as recommended. I will use every effort to get others to use it. Mrs. MARY E. COOLEY.

Glances at the World.

THE CUBAN CONVENTION.

The Cubans for several months past have been at work in convention trying to construct a Constitution. The effort is with a view to independence, and to model their republic after the United States. They do not find the work as easy to accomplish as they supposed it would be. If they had only themselves to please, the task would not be so hard. But before any Constitution they might devise can go into effect, it must be passed on by the United States Congress. This fact produces friction, as there are prominent members in the convention who desire to proceed without reference to the United States. The United States succeeded in driving the Spaniards from the island and wresting it from their control, but never claimed possession. On the contrary, the absolute independence of the Cubans was guaranteed. This guarantee was to be made good whenever the people demonstrated fitness for self-government. Doubtless, faith with Cuba will be kept, but how long before fitness for self-government will be shown, it is impossible to say. The indications are that the time is not far off, but not now. In the meantime certain requests of the United States are giving trouble. Our government asks the privilege of establishing coaling-stations on the island, the control of loans, and the right to preserve order. These requests have been denied by the convention. This looks very much like an assertion of independence. The end can not be foreseen. For the present Congress has left the control over Cuba and the Philippines in the hands of the President. This, it is thought by many, is too much like imperialism. Against this action there is likely to be strong protest. Already a mass meeting is called, of men regardless of party affiliation, to meet in Chicago at an early day to take action. The ground of the call is that "the American nation violated every code of honor in not granting Cuba its independence, and that Congress has been guilty of an act of perfidy." This is a severe charge to bring against the administration and Congress. But it is a partisan question, and we express no opinion.

PRIZE FIGHTING.

A crusade against prize fighting several years ago it was thought had put an end to that form of sport in every State except Nevada. But fight promoters and sympathizers succeeded in securing the legal right to engage in "glove contests" or "sparring matches." This seemed to satisfy the fraternity, and contests were numerous. But they abused their privileges, and gradually developed their matches into regular fights to a finish. It became unbearable, especially in New York, the headquarters of the sportsmen, until the Legislature came to the relief of the people, and so modified the law as to take out of the sport all that was money making. So, for a time at least, pugilism is dead in that State. The next stand was in Cincinnati, where, in spite of the law, they proposed to have a regular "knock-out." But, in advance, the matter was carried to the courts, and after days of hearing the promoters of the fight were perpetually enjoined. Gov. Nash, of Ohio, bravely sided with the law-and-order element of the State, and made ready to use the power at his command to stop the fight at all hazards. And pugilism is dead for awhile in Ohio. Now the promoters are in Texas wrestling with the law and Gov. Sayers, and, at this writing, it appears that the fighters have been badly worsted in the struggle. Two pugilists are in jail at Galveston under heavy bond, which their attorneys have been unable to reduce, nor can they secure a writ of habeas corpus, and Gov. Sayers has notified all concerned in a proposed fight at Dallas that he is determined to enforce the anti-prize fight law to the letter. The county attorney at Dallas is as determined as the governor. So prize fighting will remain dead in Texas. But while Texas is stopping the business, it goes on in Georgia. On the night of Feb. 27, at Savannah, a light-weight fight occurred, and it is reported to have lasted eighteen rounds, and was the "smartest and bloodiest ever seen" in that city. Another crusade is necessary.

TRUSTS AND THEIR EMPLOYEES.

The recent consolidations of railroads and other industries, where dozens of companies were swallowed up by trusts and combines, are making themselves disagreeably felt among the employees of the devoured corporations. During the recent campaign, when the trusts were so roundly denounced, one of the points made against them was that they threw many persons out of employment. We are getting additional proof of this tendency just now. The single consolidation of railroads recently managed through J. Pierpont Morgan has already resulted, or will result as soon as the new system goes into full operation, in throwing from 20,000 to 25,000 employees out of work, mainly agents, solicitors, and office men; and even where the employees are retained there is likely to be a cut in salaries in consequence of the consolidation, as fewer men are needed for the work. And, with the market oversupplied with railroad men, a cut in salaries is easier than it would be if there were a competition for their services. Some of the railroad employees were disposed at first to receive the news of the railroad consolidations mentioned with satisfaction, viewing it with that American spirit which grows enthusiastic over everything "big;" but they are beginning to realize the fact that they are likely to suffer, and that trusts and combines are dangerous to positions and salaries.—Times-Democrat.

A GREAT CITY.

The growth of American cities in population and commercial strength is one of the marvels of the age. The mind can scarcely comprehend the figures when massed. It is staggering to read the figures of a year's business of even one great city. San Francisco is an example. The following, from the Saturday Evening Post, gives an idea: "The arrivals of net registered tonnage, according to the Merchants' Exchange records for 1899, were 1,438,764 tons domestic and 1,244,233 tons foreign. In 1900 the arrivals were 1,640,383 tons domestic and 1,385,586 tons foreign, showing an increase for 1900 of 201,619 tons of domestic and 141,353 tons of foreign tonnage. The total value of our exports to foreign countries in 1900 exceeded those of 1899 by over $4,500,000. To this must be added government supplies in transports, as well as all exports to the Hawaiian Islands for the last six months of 1900, as no record of these is filed in the customhouse. These facts make San Francisco a world city, bidding for the business of the world. Situated on the track of the world's commerce, she believes that any development in or upon the shores of the Pacific must redound to her advantage. An expanding commerce, a generous yield of cereals and fruits, and the opening of mines; the phenomenal discovery of petroleum oil, giving the city for the first time a cheap fuel, which has stimulated manufactures; public works, private improvements, and a civic reformation—all these have given San Francisco an impetus which is felt in every branch of trade, and bid fair to confer lasting and merited prosperity."

LAW AGAINST HAZING.

For some weeks past there has been a difference of opinion between the Senate and House of Representatives on the hazing clause in the Military Academy appropriation bill, and for this reason it has been held up. As the clause came from the House, it provided for what might be called life punishment for "hazing;" the cadet found guilty to be dismissed from the academy, and at no future time to be allowed to obtain a commission either in the army or navy. The Senate declined to concur in this, deeming the punishment too severe. The matter was referred to a committee made up of members from both Houses, and after long conference came to agreement, as expressed in the following clause: "The superintendent of the Military Academy shall make such rules, to be approved by the Secretary of War, as will effectually prevent the practice of hazing; and any cadet found guilty of participating in or encouraging such practice shall be summarily expelled from the academy, and shall not thereafter be reappointed to the corps of cadets, or be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the army, navy or marine corps until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member."

CONCERNING THE NEW BIRTH.

BY REV. K. M. HARRISON.

MR. EDITOR: I have been surprised to see it said by Methodist preachers, in Methodist papers, more than once in the last few months, that our Lord's words to Nicodemus concerning the new birth were only figuratively true, or to the same effect.

Is it possible that these men are teachers in Israel, and understand not that great universal law of nature and grace that "Like begets like," and everything produces its kind, while Jesus Christ makes this the foundation doctrine of our hope of eternal life?

Now, both the Lord Jesus and the Apostle Paul very clearly assert that this universal law holds good in the kingdom of grace as well as of nature.

First, see John xii, 24, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." Again, at I. Cor. xv, 38, Paul says, "God giveth to every seed his own body." Again, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that (in kind) shall he also reap." Wheat produces wheat, corn produces corn, flesh produces flesh, Spirit produces Spirit. So, according to the Lord Jesus and the apostle, this universal fundamental law is true in both nature and grace. Therefore, no man can enter into the kingdom of God except in conformity to this universal law. Hence Jesus meant just what he said, and said what he meant, when he told Nicodemus that, "Except a man be born of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." The unchangeableness of this universal law makes it absolutely impossible that any man can enter into the spiritual kingdom only by being born into it. The kingdom of God is the spiritual kingdom. I use the definite article on purpose, because there are four kingdoms: mineral kingdom, vegetable kingdom, fleshly, or animal, kingdom, and the spiritual kingdom; and all know that the mineral can only enter the higher vegetable kingdom by being born into it. When the vegetable seed containing the life-germ falls into the ground, then and there a generating process is begun by which that life-germ begins to assimilate the mineral elements, and raises them up into the higher vegetable kingdom. The result is a new birth and a new creature, and the newly born thing is of the nature of the vegetable seed, for like begets like, and God gives to every seed its own body. So, also, in like manner the Spirit of God, the divine life-giving germ, can come down and implant itself in the man of flesh of the animal, and assimilate and raise it into the higher, or spiritual, kingdom of God, and this is the only way by which a natural man can be raised into the spiritual. Hence that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit. The fifth verse adds emphasis to the truth contained in the third verse. Nicodemus being but a natural, or fleshly, man, did not understand Christ speaking of the things of the Spirit, for "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit." Hence he thought only of the natural birth, and inquired, "How can a man be born again?" Then the Savior slightly changed the form of the language in order to aid Nicodemus' understanding, saying, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." This verse is explained by the sixth verse, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit." Like produces its kind, and the Lord seems to express surprise that Nicodemus, posing as a teacher in Israel, did not understand this universal law that admits of no exceptions. 'Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?'—the unchangeable operation of this universal law. Why, if you could be born of the flesh a dozen times, you would still be flesh, for that which is born of the flesh is only flesh, for like begets like, and everything produces its kind. Hence, if you would enter into my spiritual kingdom and become spiritual, you must be born of my Spirit.

Evidently, if it were necessary for a man to undergo two more births—one of water and one of God's Spirit—then the Lord would have evidently said also that which is born of water is water; and what is born or generated of water but steam or vapor?—and cool or condense these, and they are water, pure and unadulterated. Except a man be saved according to the universally ordained law of grace, he can not be saved at all. Therefore, except he be born into the kingdom of God, he can not enter therein at all.

We hear men boast of their succession from the visible church which Christ established on earth, both by ordination and baptism, but the truth is, that Christ never established any visible or material church or kingdom on earth, but he did establish a spiritual kingdom. "My kingdom," said he, "is not of this world." It is in, but not of this world. It is not a material, fleshly kingdom, but a spiritual kingdom, into which men are born, not of water, but of God's Holy Spirit. 'By one Spirit are we all born or baptized into one body—the spiritual body or kingdom of our God;" and I had rather know by my own conscious experience and the witness of the Spirit that I am born of God's Spirit, and am, therefore, his spiritual son, than to know that I had been baptized and ordained by all the Popes of Rome.

"But," says one, "is that not too philosophical and logical?" What is more philosophical than, "If a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it bringeth forth much fruit;" or, "God giveth to every seed its own body;" or that, "Whatsoever a man sows, he shall reap;" or, "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God"? Or did Aristotle himself ever form a more logical syllogism than did Jesus of Nazareth when he said, "I am the God of Abraham and of Isaac and of Jacob; I am not the God of the dead, but of the living," leaving but one conclusion possible: that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were then living, while their fleshly bodies had long since returned to the dust?

Amory, Miss., Feb. 15, 1901.

A SUGGESTION.

BY REV. J. M. DEAVENPORT.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: It is said when the inventor of sheet iron was assiduously trying to perfect his system, a "fool" standing near solved the difficulty by making what I am about to make—which, by the way, is the next cheapest thing on the market—a "suggestion." Before I venture the "suggestion," however, I want it understood that no comparison is instituted or implied between the maker of this "suggestion" and the "fool" alluded to above.

It may be well for me to state here that I have never projected a newspaper—except the one I now project on paper. I am not a 'newspaper man," but an adept at newspaper "suggestions."

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has three patronizing Conferences. There are one hundred and thirty charges in the North Mississippi Conference, and possibly an equal number in each of the other two; but, in order to be safe, we will average the three Conferences at one hundred and twenty each, which gives us a total of three hundred and sixty charges. If the preachers in charge of these stations, circuits, etc., will agree or obligate themselves to send you twenty—I make a low estimate—new subscribers to the ADVOCATE—in all, seven thousand two hundred—could you publish the paper at one dollar per year? I see no reason why the patronizing Conferences could not do this. Many charges could procure more than the required twenty, and thus make up the deficit that might be wanting on the poorer charges.

If a statement was sent to every pastor stating that when they worked the paper up to the average of twenty new subscribers for every charge in the three Conferences, you would publish the paper at one dollar per annum, I believe it would meet with a diligent effort from every pastor and a response from the people. Let the preachers hold the money and send in the names, and when the required number is reached—or a number that would justify you in making the reduction—the money would be forthcoming. The plan would, at least, bring about a united effort throughout the three Conferences to swell the subscription list of the ADVOCATE.

I submit the scheme as feasible. Its success, however, rests largely with the preachers. It would stop, at least, the universal clamor for a "dollar paper."

HOUSE TO SELL!

To Whom It May Concern:

I will, until March 20, receive bids on the brick house at McNutt, Miss., formerly the court-house of Sunflower county. The house contains about 190 000 brick, and is in moderate state of preservation. The lot contains one acre. Parties may bid on house alone, or both house and lot, but will please state which. Net wire fence is reserved. The right to reject any and all bids is reserved. Correspondence and investigation solicited.

W. L. ANDERSON, Pastor.
By order of the Board of Trustees.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Bishop Hendrix, of our church, and Bishop Warren, of the M. E. Church, will unite in holding a meeting in Denver, Col., embracing the last Sunday in March and the first Sunday in April.

A note from New Mexico in the St. Louis Advocate says: "Several of the brethren have lately ordered a supply of our Standard Hymn Book, to replace other books that have held sway in the Conference for several years." That is significant.

Dr. Edwin A. Alderman will be inaugurated as president of the Tulane University of Louisiana at Tulane Theatre, New Orleans, on Tuesday, the twelfth of March, at half after one o'clock. We acknowledge an invitation to attend the ceremony.

Dr. W. V. Tudor, once pastor of Centenary Church, St. Louis, will preach to his old parishioners by special invitation, morning and evening of the first Sunday in March. Dr. Todor is well known in New Orleans, having once been pastor of one of the leading churches.

Valley Hill, a flea community seven miles west from Carrollton, Miss.—Rev. Eugene Johnson, pastor—has let the contract for a new and complete house of worship. Bro. Johnson has forwarded his assessment in full for foreign missions, domestic missions, and for Bishops.

A certain preacher in one of our patronizing Conferences was urging the claims of the paper upon one of his members. Every argument and incentive failed. Finally the preacher said, "Take the paper, and maybe it will help the deficiencies of your pastor." "All right," said the member; "I'll take it."

"John Wesley and His Legacy" is an address in pamphlet form by Rev. Courtland P. Smith, of the Louisiana Conference. It is without introduction or statement of any kind to show when or where the address was delivered, but it is a readable and instructive document, dealing with the character of John Wesley, and Methodism which was his legacy to the world. We thank the author for a copy.

The Louisiana State Sunday-school Association will hold its annual session at the Coliseum Place Baptist Church, this city, beginning Tuesday, March 12. It will continue until the evening of the fourteenth. The entire time of the convention will be given to speakers outside the State except the moments devoted to "Words of Welcome" by Rev. Gilbert Dobbs, of New Orleans, and "The Response" by Prof. J. W. Nicholson, of Baton Rouge.

Christian Miracle

What Our Saviour Says

SAVE A WHOLE SOUL.

In comparison with embracing other great things we consider. What is amassing a little money when compared with securing "the true riches"? What is earthly fame in comparison with "crowning with glory and honor"? What is building a tower when richest moments for making living souls for the city of God? What is enlarging an empire when measured with extending that divine kingdom which shall outlast time? What is advancing the kingdom of men when it stands against leading into the truth of all truth—the knowledge of God? But there can be no comparison in the minds of men who do not believe the earthly more than the heavenly, who do not care more for this life than for eternity, who really know God and believe in heaven and hell. For this greatest achievement a possible to all Christians and in all places where men live. The child can bring to Jesus, the agent can guide to the Saviour. The influential believer can teach the way, the sage can point to the Redeemer. The illustrious member can find the lost, the feeblest known can persuade to the Good Shepherd. The only demands are sincere faith in God and sincere love of men. At all true Christians can win souls and the work can be done anywhere. will not the readers of the Advocate ask themselves, "Should I not try to win a soul this new century year?"—Southern Christian Advocate.

DANGERS OF DEVOTIONAL READING.

The feelings engendered in devotional reading are peculiarly affectionate, and lie very close to the animal in our nature. It has been well said that our "finest feelings lie very near to our highest and pass into one another by insensible transitions." This explains why it is that some people of warm temperaments in giving expression to their devotional feelings apply to Christ those endearing terms which are best suited to human courtships. It also explains how, in the phenomena of so-called spiritual life, there are certain phases of emotionalism which shock and disgust. It would be well for all Christians, in their devotional reading, to be mindful of the dangers specified. Let no one take a one-sided view of himself. Let him look outward as well as inward, and be sure to expend in normal and external life—in Christian service—the visions of the unseen. Let him, without crushing, foster the rich forms of emotional life with iron hands of reason, looking to the Holy Spirit to fill, strengthen, and use every faculty of the soul. Let him cherish the affections, and "nurture them in the highest," realizing that they are greenest and healthiest under the broad blaze of that sunshine which falls from the sky of a heart "which is hid with Christ in God." Thus we can make devotional reading a lasting means of grace.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

LAUNCH OUT.

Nothing under heaven would help our work in the West more than to be possessed of the spirit of self-support. This is what we need more than anything else. Such a spirit would be none other than the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. We can name many of our churches that are able to contribute ten dollars to the cause of the gospel where they contribute one. What is to [illegible] the spirit of [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible]

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

SIMSBORO CHARGE.

DEAR BROTHER: I am serving the Simsboro circuit the second year. The good people received me kindly and treat me nicely. It is very pleasant to be received so cordially. I have nearly finished my second round on the charge. I am taking my missionary collections. I am very anxious that the assessment should be paid in full at an early day.

We have had our first Quarterly Conference. Bro. Notestine, our presiding elder, was with us in the spirit of the Master. He was careful in looking after every interest of the church. He was kind in his presidency, showing his brotherly love to all; wise and capable in his counsels and admonitions. The stewards showed a liberal spirit in advancing the assessments of the five appointments over last year to the same amount that the six churches on the work was assessed last year. We had an enjoyable time. Bro. Notestine was not very well, but preached with the power of the Spirit. We were edified, instructed and helped. He demonstrated the wisdom of the appointing power in putting him in charge of the district. We like him very much.

I am hopeful of a successful year. We are not what we should be, but are moving for the betterment of the cause. The people need developing in active, aggressive church work along most all lines. I believe that our membership are, in the main, willing to do their duty as they understand it. In organizing for the year's work I propose to use every means and put forth every effort for an advance over last year, and to bring myself and the membership nearer to our Lord Jesus Christ, that we may have fellowship with him, and that we may do his will which is our reasonable service. I am,

Yours sincerely and fraternally,

THOS. J. MARTIN, P. C.

FLOYD, LA.

MR. EDITOR: We find ourselves very comfortably housed in the parsonage at Floyd, with a very kind and generous people who are giving us of their temporal things while we dispense to them the things of the Spirit.

Our first Quarterly Conference convened on the ninth and tenth of February. Bro. Henry was with us, and preached two strong gospel sermons, whereupon we ventured to make the comment, "You do not preach like you did twelve years ago;" to which he replied, that he had outgrown his "green breeches." I don't know that they were of the same fibre as Uncle Simon Peter's, but no doubt they were real.

"By the way," "Light and Shadows" is something out of the ordinary, and is worth while anybody's reading. It is good to cultivate the society of such men as Dr. Richardson. When one has read this book he feels quite like he knows its author. It will do good.

I see the pastor at Shreveport gives his Official Board unstinted praise, and, he being the witness, it is most worthily bestowed. May the praise of the brethren provoke others to good work. I can not say what my Board of Stewards will do, but I know that one of them, at least, ought to have the praise of them that do well.

We look forward to seeing many souls saved during this Conference year on the Floyd charge. May the Lord grant us the desire of our heart.

May God bless you in your great work. Fraternally,

SAM'L S. BOGAN.

ZWOLLE, LA.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: The Zwolle charge consists of three churches, Zwolle, Noble, and Bayou Sole. Zwolle and Noble are five miles apart on the K. C. S. railroad, and Bayou Sole is six miles out in the country. I took la grippe the day after we arrived here, and was confined to my bed and room for two weeks. My wife and little boy both had severe colds and fever, but in our afflictions our hearts were made glad by these dear people, doctors and all voluntarily coming to our relief. I am glad to say we are all fully recovered, and everything goes well with us now. Our stewards have provided liberal things for us, and are supplying our every want. We thank God for the encouragement we have received. There are people at the altar for prayer at very nearly every service we hold. We have received three into the church—one by letter and two by vows—and have five applicants to be received. We have raised and paid $47.50 on a debt that we owe on our parsonage, and $13 on church debt. There are great possibilities for the church here, and we are trying and expecting to do more for the church and God this year than we have in any of the past.

LOGANSPORT CHARGE.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Through bad roads, bad weather, and bad la grippe, we reached our charge. Having these difficulties to overcome, as you suspect, we were late arriving. When we arrived, la grippe had loosened its grip, but left the usual results: weakness and despondency. It is unnecessary to say we felt bad. On arriving we met some of our parishioners, who impressed me by words and actions that I was not the man for whom they looked. I was discouraged, but stood my ground. The cloud soon gathered, not producing a tempest, but showers. Some compliments fell upon us after our first service. These expressions might not have impressed us had they not been followed by substantial remembrances. We have good reasons for believing that we are serving an appreciative people. We are expecting the Lord to do great things for us this year. Great possibilities are just ahead, and we hope to measure up to our opportunities. More anon.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

COLUMBUS, MISS.

Rev. T. W. Lewis writes from Columbus: "Church matters moving on slowly. Have a class meeting, which meets every Wednesday morning at 9.30; started here many years ago by Rev. George Shaeffer. About sixty at prayer meeting; good congregations on Sunday, considering sickness. Have made 375 visits in eight weeks, and received fifteen into the church. Have 700 members here, and the finest auditorium in the State."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

PORTERVILLE, MISS.

At the last session of the Mississippi Conference I was assigned to the Porterville charge. I at once made arrangements to be off to my new field of labor. After traveling two and a half days on horseback, over rough roads, I reached Porterville. I found some good, kind people and a nice little parsonage partly furnished. I began my work at once, finding that I had plenty of it to do. The people have given me a cordial reception at all six of my churches. Bro. Guice held our first Quarterly Conference the seventeenth and eighteenth of January. Bro. Guice preached three edifying and soul-stirring sermons. We paid the Bishop's collection, six dollars, in full.

I have finished my second round, preached twelve times, and have in cash and subscription fifty dollars and fifty-five cents on my Conference collection. I hope, by the help of God, to be able to report to the Conference my collections in full. But how weak, how humble, are my efforts; how much I need God, in his Spirit's power, to help me. How heavy the responsibility falls upon me! I realize indeed that with men it is impossible. I thank God for a place in his vineyard to work. Brethren, pray for me, that I may be able to do faithfully the work that I feel God has given me to do. May God greatly prosper the work this year, is my prayer. Love to the ADVOCATE and all the brethren.

CENTREVILLE AND WHITAKER.

At a meeting of the Centreville stewards, in January, expressions were given of a desire for preaching oftener. Our presiding elder, Rev. T. W. Adams, was already anxious to strengthen the Percy Creek charge, and as the desire of the Centreville stewards was accompanied by a willingness to increase their provision for the support of the ministry, the change was made—Bethel Church, with the Bethel Camp Ground, being taken from the Centreville charge and placed with Percy Creek; so, hereafter, Centreville is to have preaching every Sunday morning and night, except the third and fifth Sunday mornings, which go to Whitaker Station. At the latter place a committee of men and another of ladies are at work raising funds for a new church-building. The most noteworthy feature of the work at Centreville is the reorganization of the Epworth League, which bids fair to become a helpful arm of the church body. Bro. Adams, just up from la grippe, dined at the Centreville parsonage to-day, and left in the cold rain for Westwood, the home of Bro. H. B. McGehee, fifteen miles distant, bound thence for Percy Creek. He is a hero, and will do a great work among us if he keeps his health.

The Bethel Camp Meeting will begin July 25. Workers are being engaged, and a good meeting is expected.

BROOKLYN CIRCUIT.

REV. DR. BOSWELL: We were returned to the Brooklyn charge for another year and given as our assistant that faithful and energetic pastor, Bro. G. W. Hively. We have canvassed the work very closely, and expect wonderful things of the Lord on this circuit during the year. There has been a large drain on our membership by parties moving away, and some by death. We have dismissed more already this year by certificate than we did the entire of last year. Our new church here is nearing completion, for which we are thankful; but there is never a sweet without its bitter. Just as we thought of having another new church on the work, our hearts were made sad by a card that informed us of the destruction of our little church at St. John. This was a neat, cozy little structure, due to the efforts of the late Dr. Walker, of your city. May the richest blessing of Christ rest upon you, and your labors for him. Your brother in Christ,

W. L. HIGHTOWER, P. C.

A Young Girl

May be very old in suffering. She is very apt to neglect the earlier symptoms of disease. Often when she takes treatment it is the wrong treatment for her case. Very many young women write to Dr. Pierce and consult him by letter free. All such correspondence is strictly private, and womanly modesty is spared the shock of indelicate examinations, unpleasant questionings and offensive local treatments.

"I suffered with female trouble," writes Miss Agnes McGowne, of 1231 Rank St., Washington, D. C. "I tried various remedies but none seemed to do any permanent good. The doctors said it was the worst case of internal trouble they ever had. I decided to write to Doctor Pierce for help. I received a very encouraging reply and commenced treatment at once. I had not used the "Favorite Prescription" a week before I began to feel better, and, as I continued, my health gradually improved. It is improving every day and I still continue to take the medicine."

Consistent with its policy to constantly improve its service, the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad is now relaying its track between New Orleans and Slidell, a distance of twenty-nine miles, with new steel rails, weighing seventy-five pounds to the yard.

The entire line has been ballasted in the most approved manner from end to end, and, notwithstanding the increased price of steel, two thirds of the entire mileage has been relaid with 75-pound new steel rails, and the balance of the line will be relaid as rapidly as the material can be procured.

These improvements are not only an indication of the prosperous condition of the property, but an assurance of safety and comfort to travelers.

The entire Queen and Crescent system, of which the New Orleans and Northeastern forms a part, is now a thoroughly up-to-date system of railroads running the very best equipment in the most modern style.

TEACHERS' BUREAU.

The Board of Education, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has, under paragraph 111 of our Discipline, established a TEACHERS' BUREAU. The purpose of this Bureau is the advancement of Christian Education. We propose to do our best to secure for the graduates of our institutions, and for other competent persons, positions in our schools and colleges; but we guarantee a position to nobody. Applicants for positions will be furnished, upon request, with our application form, which will explain itself. Since the making of money is not the purpose of our Bureau, we will make our commutations with the greatest possible care. Presidents of our schools and colleges, and Boards of Trustees seeking teachers, will do well to apply to us. The facilities of the Board for this work are unusual. We have a constituency, preachers and laymen, of one million and a half. We request the pastors throughout our Connection to advertise this Bureau, and to notify us of any vacancy in any school, secular or Christian, as soon as it occurs. By so doing they will greatly aid us in promoting Christian education. Address Rev. J. D. Hammond, Gen. Sec.,

AN APOLOGY.

For some cause our engine refused to work last week, and we were compelled to have our printing done at an outside establishment. The folding had to be done by hand, and we could neither paste nor trim our papers. This is our apology for sending out the ADVOCATE as we did, and for being a day late. Such delays and accidents are not only vexing and troublesome, but expensive.

In protesting against the unlawful hanging of men our vocabulary was long since exhausted. The hanging continues, and we suppose it will until assaults upon women cease. Hanging does not lessen the number of criminals, and public sentiment, which is overwhelming against lynching, does not stop the hanging. No matter how emphatic a community may be in expressing itself against lynching, the moment one of its women is assaulted, judgment is dethroned, and the assailant, if caught, pays the usual penalty. It is the same way all over the country. To advise a different and better course is useless.

It is a common saying that "no law can be enforced unless it is backed by strong public sentiment." This is the excuse the public sometimes makes for the reign of lawlessness, and the faithless officer feels secure. But what about the officer's oath? No provision is made for him to institute inquiry as to the sentiment of the public. He has sworn to enforce the law. The public will not interfere and lynch him for doing his duty. To shelter himself behind public sentiment is evidence of cowardice, or that his own sentiments favor the law breakers. In either case he forswears himself and discloses his unworthiness.

An honest man had better follow the slow, though certain, lines of legitimate trade, and be satisfied to let well-enough alone, than to give way to the desire to get rich in a hurry by risking his small capital in speculation, or in the respectable form of gambling called "dealing in futures." On the supposition that both methods of dealing are right, everybody knows they are uncertain. The venture may prove fortunate, but it is far more likely to leave the investor bankrupt. Hundreds of men are to-day carrying sample cases, and drumming for a living, who, had they been content with their earnings, would be merchant princes or kings of finance. It is hard for some men to be satisfied with the allotment of Providence.

"THE SALOON MUST GO."

Brother Palmore was on the war path last week, with a hatchet more deadly in its execution than any ever wielded by Mrs. Nation. But, unlike Mrs. Nation, he did not use it so much in smashing demijohns, bottles and plate-glass, and knocking in the heads of barrels and kegs, as he did in hacking men who are opposed to prohibition, or indifferent and half-hearted in their support. If the charges he brings against men in high and low places is true, all he says is justifiable. We think, however, he has made statements that he can not prove. Perhaps a few men may be guilty, and Brother Palmore may be able to specify them by name, but to class the guilty ones as representatives of all, and thus make it appear that the ministry in its rank and file is cowardly in presence of the whisky devil, is altogether unfair.

We do not question Bro. Palmore's loyalty to the prohibition cause, nor his courage in defending it. We question the soundness of his judgment, if his leader in the last issue of his paper is a fair sample of his method in dealing with his brethren. There is too much insinuation, not sufficient evidence. He would have his readers believe that he has knowledge of the sins and shortcomings of men in their attitude toward the liquor traffic, but in the charges brought against the ministry he gives no names nor places. He leaves his readers in the dark. They dare not undertake to guess, lest they fix suspicion in their own minds on innocent persons.

As an example: Making light of the discussion as to whether the episcopacy is an order or an office, he says: "What does the demon of the liquor traffic care whether it is either or both, so long as he can use a Bishop at either $100 or $700 a night, and pay him out of funds largely contributed by American brewers?" That means, if it means anything, that a Bishop of some church has been used in the interest of the liquor business at from $100 to $700 a night, and that the money he received was contributed largely by brewers. But what Bishop thus sold himself to do the devil's work? What church he represents, whether Protestant or Romanist, whether Methodist, North or South, he does not say. What assurance have we from Brother Palmore that none of our Bishops are thus guilty? Another example: Declaring that in many instances those who compose the top crust of society "keep on hand wine and brandy for their 'stomach's sake,'" he adds: "The church expects her pastors who shepherd the top-crust membership to raise a great deal of money for educational, church extension and missionary work. How on earth can one be so unreasonable as to expect such shepherds to raise all this money and also thunder on total abstinence and temperance reform?" That is to say: the preachers who serve leading churches in order to raise much money for the cause of God, compromise principle, stifle conscience, and close their mouths against the evils of intemperance. This is a sweeping charge. Are all the preachers in city churches guilty? If there is one exception, Brother Palmore should have named him. If only few of them are guilty, he should have so worded his charge as to relieve the majority who are innocent.

Again: Brother Palmore knows of village preachers who, being warned by the devil's "imps" against "narrowness and fanaticism," adapt their preaching to suit the demand, and receive compliments for being "very broad," preaching "nothing but the gospel," and "not meddling with secular affairs." These preachers allow themselves to be bribed by fine suits of clothes bought with money largely contributed by "bartenders." Verily, some village preachers sell themselves at a small price! We need no longer wonder that many men who have no fear of God before their eyes allow themselves to be bribed with money.

Bro. Palmore's charges amount almost to "railing accusations," but they are so general that they convict nobody. And while they make him appear a man of courage, we should have respected him more highly than we do for his championship of a good cause had he named the guilty parties, or so definitely located them, as to leave their brethren, who are overwhelmingly in the majority, of all suspicion. But Brother Palmore is an extremist. His intentions are good. Besides, his sense of caution leads him to refrain from giving names and places. It would be "too literal." He is "too subtle and shrewd to attempt any such clumsiness."

We quite agree with our brother when he says: "In the name of Jesus Christ our King, the liquor traffic must die." We are willing to join him in a crusade against it, but we are very sure that he can not assemble crusaders and array them solidly against the enemy by the method he has adopted. Neither the ministry nor the church has yielded an inch to the brewers and distillers. What politicians and high civil officers have done is another question. That they are afraid of the rum power is too plain to be denied. To what length they would go in obedience to its demands, but for the ministry and the influence of Christians, who can tell? It is the moral power exerted by the conservative element—which is the saving element—that has saved the land and made it what it is. Foremost in this great work are the preachers of Evangelical Churches. Let us accord them due honor. If any are otherwise minded, let them be labored with, and brought to the right. Let us not use a rod on the shoulders of all for the purpose of punishing a few. It is not right.

WORTH OF A GOOD NEWSPAPER.

The worth of a good religious newspaper in a family would be hard to calculate. The lives of boys and girls by the hundreds have been shaped for good through the influence of a sound, religious church paper, particularly boys and girls who live in the country, and who have but little time to read and study except on Sunday, and but little money with which to buy books. It is often the case that the only thing new in the way of reading matter that comes into the family for long periods is the newspaper—the small county paper at that. How eagerly it is devoured by every member of the family. Every advertisement is carefully studied. The church paper, if the family is religious, is both a treasure and a fountain of wisdom.

Every reason that urges a Christian parent to secure for himself and family the very best preacher within reach should urge him to procure the best possible in the way of a weekly newspaper. This means that the family should be supplied with the church paper—the official organ. For Baptists there is nothing better than a Baptist paper. For Presbyterians there is nothing better than a Presbyterian paper. For Methodists nothing can take the place of a Methodist paper. In Louisiana and Mississippi the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is the official organ of Southern Methodism, constituted such by the overwhelming vote of the Annual Conferences, and for that reason appeals to the people for support. It gives them the news from the churches as no other paper can. This is worth much to the people who love and care for the success of Zion. Besides, it goes to the people from week to week freighted with communications from the brethren, and the very best selected matter from other sources. The editor also contributes what he is able to the general good. All things considered, the ADVOCATE is worth what is asked for it. And every Methodist stands in his own light, and hinders the development of his children in love and loyalty to the church, who, for any cause, declines to support it.

Notwithstanding many decline to take the paper, we bring no railing accusation. We know the reason they give for declining—at least, in the majority of instances. They say "the price is too high." In all candor we are obliged to say: they are mistaken. The majority of people who take that position compare the price of the ADVOCATE with the price of county secular papers, many of which are but half the size of the ADVOCATE. They also compare the ADVOCATE with the weekly issues of the great city papers, forgetting or not knowing that the weekly city papers are but reprints of the dailies, which cost the publishers nothing except for the white paper and press-work. If the ADVOCATE had a daily issue that made it self-supporting, we could send out the weekly as it is for less than a dollar a year, and make money. It is unfair to the ADVOCATE to institute these comparisons, and we call on our preachers to disabuse the minds of the people on the subject.

Nor is it right to compare the ADVOCATE with the cheap so-called evangelical papers that come to us from a different clime. The ADVOCATE stands for Methodism—Southern Methodism, the church of our fathers. For that reason alone it should appeal to the mind and heart and pocket of every Methodist family in Louisiana and Mississippi. Other papers, however clean they may be, have nothing of the sort to commend them to the patronage of our people. Let us stand by our principles and our paper!

NOT A BULLETIN BOARD.

The pulpit should never be used as a bulletin board. It is unbecoming as well as distracting to a devout and thoughtful mind. It is bad enough to be compelled to announce half a dozen religious services for the coming week. Even that is distracting to some extent. But to stand in the sacred desk and announce a lecture on a secular subject, or a church fair that has a purely material object in view, is worse. And the worst of all is to announce the loss of property, and to request the finder to please return. More than once we have known preachers to announce the loss of some man's cow, or horse, with all the descriptive marks, so that the finder would make no mistake in "taking up" the stray or stolen brutes. We knew a preacher once who, at the close of an interesting service, announced that he had lost a handkerchief, and would be thankful if the finder would return it. Somebody in the congregation had already picked it up, and, holding it aloft, the preacher claimed it, to the amusement of many and the disgust of others, for the handkerchief was nothing but common cotton, and very dirty.

We have sometimes become very tired listening to a long string of announcements at the close of the sermon; so many that we could not have remembered them had we tried, and those interested knew of the time and place as well before the announcement as after. And often the preacher repeats and exhorts. He does not know how long it takes him, or how tired the people get of hearing the same thing every Sabbath, and not infrequently twice the same day. Making announcements is a fine art that every preacher has not learned. Some of them do not better the matter by turning it over to—we can not recall the title of the officer, but we mean the man who reads the announcements.

THE HABIT OF CRITICISING.

Criticism, in its legitimate sphere, is important. It not only puts men who exercise in public, or for the benefit of the public, on their guard, but helps to correct their defects and bring out the best that is in them. The true critic is to be respected. Much that passes for criticism is not legitimate, and should have no influence over one of sound mind and judgment. Hyper-criticism is detestable.

Young preachers are peculiarly liable to fall into the habit of criticising. It is natural. They are in the formative stage of their ministerial lives, and exercise the privilege of pointing out each other's errors and shortcomings. As long as this is mutual and intended to be helpful, it is all right, and the more severe and searching, the better. But there is danger of keeping up the habit even to the extent of destroying all spirit of devotion. We have known the critical ear of a brother to be turned toward a preacher, and for the whole length of the sermon, instead of trying to hear and receive the truth, to be engaged solely in efforts to detect errors in grammar and pronunciation, or logic and rhetoric, or exegesis and general style of sermon-making and delivery. Under such circumstances criticism is out of place, particularly if the preacher is a man of age, and makes no pretension to great learning. If a young man, without culture, never having been blessed with advantages, instead of indulging in criticisms—the spirit of which often leads one to make slight remarks—it would be much better and far more brotherly to help him than to throw stumbling-blocks in his way. The fear of unjust and unnecessary criticism greatly injures timid souls who are conscious of their lack of culture and general information. These have not learned the difference between legitimate criticism and that spirit that prompts an individual to pick flaws merely to show his superiority. Let us beware, lest we fall into the habit of needlessly criticising a brother.

EPWORTH LEAGUERS OF NEW ORLEANS.

On account of the meeting of the State Sunday-school Convention, which begins on Tuesday eve, March 12, the Union Epworth League will meet a week later, March 19, at Algiers. GEO. D. PARKER, Pres.
March 4, 1901.

CLUB OFFER WITHDRAWN.

The clubbing offer with the Times-Democrat and Picayune, heretofore announced, is hereby withdrawn.

PERSONAL.

We had the pleasure of meeting, last week, Bro. J. B. Kent, pastor of our church at Plaquemine, La. He was in the city on business, and gave the ADVOCATE the honor of a call.

Prof. R. W. Jones, of Oxford, one of our stanchest Methodists, has been seriously ill during the past two weeks, but he is recovering, and, without backset, will soon be well.

Our readers will be glad to learn that Rev. W. D. Burroughs, whom we reported three weeks since as quite ill, has considerably improved. The prospect is that he will entirely recover.

Rev. C. A. Powell, of McComb City, on the supernumerary list of the Mississippi Conference, has greatly improved in health, and hopes to take his place in the ranks at the next meeting of his Conference.

Rev. B. T. Crews, pastor of our church at Minden, La., is doing good work and succeeding. He is an old Arkansas comrade of the editor. We have worked and rejoiced together. He kindly invites us to visit him, which we hope to do.

Rev. G. H. Jacobs, of Cockrum, Miss., has been in the throes of the grippe, but at this writing is better, and hopes to be able to do full work. If there is a truer yoke-fellow than Bro. Jacobs, or a more faithful servant of the Lord, we do not know him.

A greatly distressed wife, Mrs. L. C. Smith, of this city, desires the prayers of the preachers and Christians in behalf of her husband, who is afflicted. We trust her request will be granted, and that our Heavenly Father will restore the afflicted one to soundness.

Rev. J. D. Newsom, the Old Man Faithful of the North Mississippi Conference, has been abed with the grippe. The attack was severe and painful, but we are glad to know that he is now able to be up and to do some work. The grippe seems to be no respecter of persons.

Rev. J. A. Miller, of Patterson, La., informs us of the death of Miss Katie E Muggah, which occurred on the morning of March 4. Our church at Patterson, and the whole community, sorrow at this sudden and unexpected event. Bro. Miller promises a more extended notice.

A private note from Rev. Eugene Johnson, of Carrollton, informs us that the good people of his charge still keep up their acts of kindness to him and his family. Brother Johnson is doing fine work for the ADVOCATE. He is succeeding. We are under obligation to him for faithful service.

In a personal note to the editor, Rev. W. M. Young, presiding elder of the Corinth district, says: "I am through the first round. Everything is encouraging. Brethren all doing well—some excellent. The finances are better than last year for the first quarter." We thank our brother for kind words.

Rev. Geo. R. Stewart, well known thoroughout Southern Methodism as a successful revivalist, is at present engaged with Rev. E. N. Evans in a meeting at Baton Rouge. We have no particulars save that congregations are large, and that there is fine prospect of a great revival. May the fondest expectations of the brethren be realized.

The State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of Kentucky closed its Annual Session in Louisville on the evening of Feb. 22, ultimo. Bishop Galloway, who had been invited to address the convention, chose for his subject, "Young Men as Christian Patriots." The Louisville Dispatch characterizes the address as "masterly," and pronounces it the "crowning feature" of the occasion.

A card from Rev. J. O. Bennett reports the death of Hon. R. H. Spell, which occurred on the twenty-sixth ultimo. "He was a good man, a member of our church, and also a member of the Board of Stewards of this (Caddo) circuit. He loved the church, and was a true friend to his pastor. We shall miss him greatly. He leaves a wife and two little children, together with a host of friends, who mourn his death. Pray for his wife and children."

AT MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

Millsaps College has settled down comfortably for the second term, with an increased number of students, and a fine spirit of industry and activity among all members of the college community. The recent examinations, which, from different points of view, were voted "thorough" or "severe," have acted as a wholesome tonic in many instances, and in some others have effected a readjustment or, from another point of view, a "shake-up."

The library stores have recently received additions from several quarters. Major Millsaps has made another handsome gift to this most important adjunct of the college; especially deserving of mention is a fine morocco set of the Universal Encyclopaedia, which brings the library up to date for ready reference. Besides this gift from our founder, the income from the Martha A. Turner Library Fund, with the regular college fund received from fees, has been invested in well-chosen books. The library collection is already a very effective one, and these recent accessions bring it nearer perfection for our uses.

The recent heavy snow-storm prevented Dr. W. C. Black from giving his lecture, "Genesis and Geology," which he had promised the students on the occasion of the celebration of Washington's Birthday. We trust that the elements will be kinder if Dr. Black will renew his promise.

On February 24, at the First Church of Jackson, Dr. W. B. Murrah preached a notable sermon on Luke xix, 10: "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."

Last Sunday, March 3, at the evening service in the First Church, Bishop Galloway delivered the address, "Christian Manhood," which he recently presented at the convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations, held in Louisville, Feb. 21-22.

NOTICE.

To the Corresponding Secretaries and Treasurers of W. F. M. Societies, Mississippi Conference—

DEAR SISTERS: The close of the quarter is almost at hand, and it is my duty to inform you that your reports are due your district secretaries, and to report money to Mrs. J. P. Drake (our treasurer), at Summit, Miss.

March 1 closes our missionary year. At that time our record will have been made. I hope it will be a good one, and each woman can say, I have done what I could.

Let us at the beginning of a new year resolve to do greater things in our Conference. We are growing in numbers, and should grow in zeal.

I hope that you are interested in the General Southern Missionary Conference, which will meet in New Orleans. Our Conference will be represented by Miss Addie Marshall, Mrs. J. P. Drake and Mrs. J. S. Parks. Let us remember in prayer the Conference, and especially our representatives.

I am glad to say to you that Miss Elizabeth Hughes is quite well, and is taking a much needed rest at her mother's, at Daleville, Miss.

A letter from Miss Leila McNemar, at Saltillo, Mexico, states that she is well and much interested in her work.

Mrs. B. F. Jones has been appointed district secretary in place of Mrs. H. W. Featherstun, of Brookhaven district. Societies of that district will please report to her.

BOOK NOTICE.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN AND THE FLOOD. By J. C. Keener, D. D., LL.D., one of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Nashville, Tenn.; Dallas, Texas. Barbee & Smith, Agents. Price, $1.

This is the latest book from the hand of Bishop Keener. It deals with matters of interest to all Christians, and whether readers agree with the author or not, they will not only be pleased but profited by its perusal. The devout spirit which pervades the book, and the strong faith in God and his Word which is manifested, will arrest and command attention. The design of the book is to show:

"(1) That all life was destroyed by the flood in the western and eastern continents; that before the flood the western continents were the centers of animal life, but ceased to be at the flood; that life began after the flood in the eastern only, and that by miracle.

"(2) That every creature has been fossilized; . . . that all species were fossilized at one and the same time, and by the same electrical current, which was universal, instant, and directly upon the catastrophe of the flood.

"(3) That America is the great Eden continent.

"(4) That there is no fossil older than man; that bones and teeth of man have been fossilized, which gives an overwhelming support to the Pentateuch of Moses.

"(5) That creation was in time, and that time not very long ago; thus agreeing with Cuvier's estimate of the age of the human race.

"(6) That since the flood, for a period of four thousand years, the two Americas, North and South, remained silent as an old graveyard, and were, in fact, God's burial-ground.

"(7) The location of Eden."

The author, in his understanding and interpretation of the Mosaic account of creation and the flood, inclines to the literal rather than the scientific. Of this, however, we are not prepared to speak with authority. But this we know: the book is intensely interesting, and those who fail to agree with its conclusions will find it hard to answer the arguments. We advise our friends to get the book and read it.

FREE TO EVERYBODY.

Dr. J. M. Willis, a specialist of Crawfordsville, Indiana, will send free by mail to all who send him their address, a package of Pansy Compound which is two weeks' treatment with printed instructions, and is a positive cure for constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous or sick headache, la grippe, and blood poison.

SOME SUGGESTIONS.

MR. EDITOR: I agree with "A Millsaps Student," in the last issue of the ADVOCATE, and with him say, Let us all do what we can to make "our paper" one of the best in our church. The high order of reading that is now in it is worthy a place in every home. Right here let me ask what is the matter with the Epworth League Department? Is it of such little importance that it must be moved from "pillar to post"? Why not make it the most attractive corner in the paper? Where is our Louisiana editor? Can not the Leagues in the three patronizing Conferences send the editors matter enough to keep things moving? Let the pastor of each League appoint one to send in communications to the League editors, and let the same one take a few sample copies of the ADVOCATE and get subscriptions. How persons claiming to be loyal Methodists can afford to be in ignorance of the doings of their church is more than I can comprehend. Dear friends, look over the pages of the last ADVOCATE, and if fifty-two such papers are not worth two dollars, I do not know where you can make a better investment. Let us make a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether, and get the ADVOCATE into the homes of every Methodist family in this, the first year of the new century.

We see accounts of the North Mississippi and Mississippi Conference Minutes having been published. Where are ours of the Louisiana Conference? [They have been printed and distributed.—ED.] Things are moving off nicely in this, the Shreveport district, and everything indicates prosperity along all lines. May God bless the ADVOCATE and its editor, is the sincere wish of a "Leagner."

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."
REV. THOS. H. DORSEY, Arcola, Miss.
EDITOR.

A personal letter from Rev. H. P. Crowe, Friar's Point, Miss., bears the following item of interest: "We have a fine Epworth League and the best Sunday-school I ever had. More than 90 per cent. of the membership of the church are in the Sunday-school." Bro. Crowe is looking after the young people, as his custom has been since we have known him. He always succeeds, which is the natural result.

It is now time that all the District League Secretaries were beginning to plan for a District League Conference. We sometimes feel that there is no use to try, fearing a failure, but we should never fear failure when we are on the side of God and righteousness. Let us have a special District League Conference, and not make it a part of the District Conference or Sunday-school Conference, but let it stand for all it is worth. Let the district secretaries secure the promise of every pastor to attend the Conference, whether he has a League or not, and bring others with him. Let them be capable of helping in the work when they return to their fields of labor; spend considerable time with the best help you can get in preparing a suitable programme for the occasion. Be careful in your selections of persons to carry out the programme, though you need not imagine that you have to import some one to make a speech or read a paper. There is not a district in this great State but that has the greatest sufficiency of young men and women, with the older ones, who have not forgotten that they were once young, to make an Epworth League Conference the greatest success. Try it. Let us hear from you.

Monday, the twenty-ninth day of April, 1901, during the great General Missionary Conference to be held in the city of New Orleans—April 24-30—has been set apart in the programme as Young People's Day, beginning at 9 A. M., with the subjects:

1. "The Young People and the Church of the Future."

2. "How to Make the Epworth League Most Effective as a Missionary Force."

The supreme need of the hour is that the church be aroused to a sense of her responsibility and the dignity of her position, that of an ambassador of heaven with the same authority back of her and the same end in view as that which brought the Son of God on his mission of redemption.—V. C. Evers.

IS IT AN EPIDEMIC?

Vital Statistics Show an Alarming Increase in an Already Prevailing Disease—Are Any Exempt?

At no time in the history of disease has there been such an alarming increase in the number of cases of any particular malady as in that of kidney and bladder troubles now preying upon the people of this country.

To-day we see a relative, a friend or an acquaintance apparently well, and in a few days we may be grieved to learn of their serious illness or sudden death, caused by that fatal type of kidney trouble—Bright's disease.

Kidney trouble often becomes advanced into acute stages before the afflicted is aware of its presence: that is why we read of so many sudden deaths of prominent business and professional men, physicians and others. They have neglected to stop the leak in time.

While scientists are puzzling their brains to find out the cause, each individual can, by a little precaution, avoid the chances of contracting dreaded and dangerous kidney trouble, or eradicate it completely from their system if already afflicted. Many precious lives might have been, and many more can yet be saved, by paying attention to the kidneys.

It is the mission of the "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" to benefit its readers at every opportunity, and therefore we advise all who have any symptoms of kidney or bladder trouble to write to-day to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a free sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the celebrated specific which is having such a great demand and remarkable success in the cure of the most distressing kidney and bladder troubles. With the sample bottle of Swamp-Root will also be sent free a pamphlet and treatise of valuable information.

HOW TO MAKE BIBLE STUDY MORE HELPFUL.

Study it. Many suppose themselves to be studying when they are merely reading. Reading it with reverent reflection adds to one's understanding of it. But to study it is to apply the mind to it more closely, to search out its deeper meanings, to acquaint one's self with the facts of its history and of the mutual relations of its different portions, to inquire into the characters of those described in it and those for whom it was written at first, and how its appropriateness has continued equally perfect through all the intervening ages. Study it as you would study any other volume which you were determined to master.

Recognize at the same time its uniqueness and its special object. While you study it like any other work, remember that it differs from every other. It has an origin, a character, and a purpose peculiar to itself. It is God's message to men, to every man, to you. Whatever conflicting theories of its inspiration and composition may be advanced, this is agreed upon by all scholars: that the Bible, in a sense and a degree true of no other work, is God's word to mankind. History proves that no one who thus receives and studies it in earnest fails to gain a blessing from above, and that he who regards it less seriously fails to do it justice and to be enriched in heart.

While it is proper to apply to it the acutest critical scholarship of which we are masters, no study of it is either fitting or successful which is not supremely spiritual in purpose. It appeals to the soul. Its chief aim is to develop and sanctify character. It means to render daily life nobler and holier. Its teachings center in Jesus Christ, and it explains how to love him and to be beloved by him, how to imitate him, and how thus to renovate society. The most successful student of it, therefore, is he who studies it first and foremost with devoutness. Critical study may not be neglected, but spiritual study is even more important.

Study it, therefore, in order to apply its teachings to your own life. To know what its precepts are is not enough. They must be accepted and illustrated in conduct. Studied thus and thus applied, the Bible becomes what the Psalmist called it, "A lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."—The Congregationalist.

COURTESY TO THE AGED.

"Oh, father, don't! I have seen that all are properly helped." The old man thus reproved replaced the butter dish upon the tea table, while a pained look settled about his silent lips. But he so wanted to be helpful that presently he laid hold of the cake plate and would have set it in circulation.

"Oh, father, don't! No one is ready for that yet; do leave me to attend to things."

Reluctantly the trembling hand released its hold. It was very hard to find himself of no use anywhere.

"I thought they might be ready," he murmured, with a deprecatory glance toward the daughter, who sat straight and solemn with a frown of displeasure wrinkling her brow. It annoyed her to have her father show himself so far behind the times in methods of table service; to have him, despite her oft-repeated instructions and admonitions, relapse into the simple, unconventional ways of a long outgrown age. It fretted her to have him vary in the slightest degree from the latest established modes of etiquette. She failed to realize that he was her most deserving heaven-sent guest; that his harmless deviations should be endured and condoned rather than sharply rebuked.

An aged tree can not be bent like a tender sapling. Its eccentricities of growth must now be tolerated. To age, with its infirmities, its loneliness, its many deprivations, should be allowed all the privileges and exemptions we would accord a most revered guest. The most comfortable seat in the cosiest corner belong to it; the softest bed in the most desirable sleeping-room should persuade slumber to its eyelids. The food the aged one most craves should oftenest coax his declining appetite. So many tempests of sorrow have racked him, so many life battles have scarred him, that he has earned respite and repose. Turn to the aged only the sunny side of your nature. The country is yet uncivilized that does not try to pluck every possible thorn from the pathway of age; the heart is yet unregenerate that does not strive to make its rough places smooth.—Congregationalist.

A TRIP TO THE KLONDIKE.

"Josey's hateful! Her nose is always up in the air. I call her Miss Stuck-Up, and it suits her to a T. As for Mollie, she can't learn her lessons, and I never could have patience with a dunce. I meant to like Freda because she wears such beautiful clothes, but she's as vain as a peacock, and, as for Fanny Flurry! I suppose her name is to blame, but she never has time to speak to me. So you see, Carrie, that there is not a girl in the class whom I really like, except yourself." And here poor Nellie threw down her geography with a bang that startled her companion. "I don't see what you're made of; you seem to like them all! Do tell me why! Begin with Josey."

"Josey is shy; she carries herself stiffly, because she is trying to hide it, but, when you get her alone, she shows just how lovely she is. Perhaps you do not know that she has no mother and father, but she begged her guardian to take some of her money to pay for Mollie's schooling. Mollie is not a dunce, but her step-mother has always made her take care of her half-brothers and sisters, and this is the first time she has ever had any teaching. She is the most patient girl I ever knew. Freda? Did you ask? Well, I never did like Freda until one day I overheard Miss Miller tell mama that she had never known a girl with a kinder heart. 'She has been spoiled because she is so pretty, but if you want to know the real Freda (these are almost Miss Miller's words), you should go with her on her weekly visit to the Children's Hospital and see the smiles on wan little faces when she comes near.' After this I liked her ever so much, but I am more fond of Fanny Flurry, though she tried my patience sadly at first with her quick, jerky ways; she always appeared to me as if something had put her out and she was hunting for a lost temper," and Carrie laughed a little, silvery laugh.

"Well?" asked Nellie, "what made you change your mind?"

"I found her crying one day, and when I begged her to tell me her trouble, she said she was afraid the doctor would make her leave school, that her spine is growing crooked. 'Oh! it does hurt,' she added, 'and it is so hard not to be cross, but I have to work at home, because mama is always busy with her shopping and visiting tours, and the children wish me every spare moment.'"

"You certainly are the queerest girl!" ejaculated Nellie. "I'd been at school with these girls for six months before you came, and yet there is not one of them I know as well."

"Better take a trip to the Klondike as Carrie has done," said a gentle voice, and Miss Miller stepped from the bay window with its heavy hangings.

"The Klondike?" queried both. "Yes, my dears, another way of expressing a search for gold;" and with a smile of approval for Carrie, a gentle caress and "wish you good luck" to the bewildered Nellie, she was gone.

If any of my young readers will locate a claim, I should like to hear about it.—N. N. S., in Intelligencer.

SPEAKING THE TRUTH.

While the truth is always to be spoken, if anything is said, it is not always necessary to say anything. We may feel very keenly about certain matters, and be thoroughly convinced that our view is the correct one, and yet have regard to timeliness and the feelings of others in the expression of our opinions. It may not be cowardice at all, but simply the self-restraint which comes from a wise judgment of opportunities and conditions, or a regard for others, that seals the lips. In household life one has frequent occasions to act on this principle. The inopportune declaration of what you think or know may alienate the closest friends and sow discords never to be uprooted. It is no defense whatever to say that you spoke what you thought, or that what you said was true. Neither the law of frankness nor veracity puts you under any obligation to outrage others' feelings. Paul declares that we are to "speak the truth in love." By heeding the qualification, "in love," we shall be saved from a multitude of errors. Speaking the truth to put others in the wrong and exult over them, to magnify ourselves, to make others despicable or ridiculous, what a chasm there is between those things and "speaking the truth in love!"—The Watchman.

WHAT SPLIT THE LOG?

"There is nothing like giving a boy a little encouragement once in a while,' said a wealthy downtown merchant the other day. "I know I owe a great deal to a remark a crabbed old farmer made to me when I was quite small.

"I was trying to split a cross-grained hickory log, and as our wood pile was close by the roadside, my efforts attracted the notice of the farmer, who stopped his team.

"I was greatly flattered by his attention, because he was the crossest and surliest man in town and never took any notice of us boys, except to sit in his orchard with a shot-gun in his hand when the apples were ripe. So I put in my best licks and covered my hands with blisters, but the log refused to split. I hated to be beaten, but there seemed no help for it. The old man noticed my chagrin.

"'Humph! I thought you'd hev to give it up!' he said, laughing.

"Those words were all I needed.

"I made no reply; but the way that axe-head went into that log was a revelation to me. As I drove it into the knots, they yielded. There was a cheerful crackle, the gap widened, and soon the halves lay before me, and the farmer drove off discomfited.

"But I never forgot that scene. When I first went into business, I made mistakes, as every young man will. But whenever I got caught in a doubtful enterprise, I remembered that my friends were standing around waiting for the chance to say: 'I thought you'd have to give it up!'

"In spite of himself, that old farmer gave me the key-note of my success.

"So you see that if a boy has any grit in him, he is bound to profit by the right sort of encouragement."—Pluck.

BE YOUR BEST AT HOME.

Are you seeking to be your best to those nearest to you? If not, you may be quite sure you are missing some of life's purest joy and highest service. How often the teaching of the Christian home is discounted by the want of earnest effort to please and gladden and serve in the family circle. To those nearest to us God has given a stronger claim upon us than to any others in the world. We would have children taught to be their best in speech and manner to those at home; to dress at home more carefully than for going into company, etc. The conscience of a child generally responds at once, and heartily, to such regulation; and the benefits secured in the home are immense. If all Christian parents were as careful to be considerate and gracious in speech and deed toward the members of their own household as they are toward some of their acquaintance, who have not a hundredth part of the same claim upon them, many grave evils and disasters would be averted.—Life of Faith.

GOOD ADVICE.

In 1831, when preaching to a large congregation of young men, Dr. Lyman Beecher said: "If any man can invent a more speedy way for sinners to go to hell than the theater, he ought to have a patent right for his infernal ingenuity." That was a good many years ago, but since then the theater has not improved. Some of its friends have tried to purify it, but have signally failed. To-day the plays which pander to the vile and appeal to all that is base and sensual in man, are the plays which are the most popular and pay the largest dividends. The theater of the present day is ruining the morals of almost countless thousands of our young men and young women. Christians who love God and who wish to be used in the Lord's service will leave the cursed institution alone. It is of the devil. Give it a wide berth.—Selected.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

To the W. M. and Wardens of Newton Lodge No. 57, A. F. and A. M.:

Your committee appointed to prepare a tribute of respect beg to submit the following

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father has seen fit to call from labor in this Lodge to refreshment in that Lodge above our friend and brother, J. T. WATTS, whom we loved for his pure life, his fidelity, his earnest endeavor to do good for his fellow-man, his love for his Lodge, his church, and every duty in the walks of life. "Brotherly Love, Relief and Truth," was his motto, with a heart full of love for all and hatred for none.

Resolved, That we feel keenly our loss and mourn his death, but rejoice in the belief that he is happy in the presence of our Supreme Grand Master in the New Jerusalem, in the company of the host of loved ones who had gone on before.

Resolved, That while we bow in submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well and for our good, knowing that we can not, if we would, recall our dear friend and brother, that we will strive to emulate his virtues, and do the work designed for us on the "Trestle Board" as becometh good and true Masons.

Fraternally, T. H. SELBY,
C. H. REW,
T. C. VENERET,
Committee.

Newton, Miss., Jan. 14, 1901.

The report was received and ordered spread upon the Minutes, and copy furnished the family, and the Mississippi Baptist and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE asked to publish.

M. F. WILLIAMS was born Dec. 19, 1852, at Bentonsville, Attala county, Miss., and departed this life July 17, 1900, in Kosciusko, Miss. Between these dates was spent a very notable and useful life.

Bro. Williams was a worthy son and highly respected brother of a large and influential family. Early in life he devoted his energies to obtaining an education by such means and from such sources as were within reach, and thereby qualified himself for teaching, in which profession he spent most of his life. He was one of the most successful and popular teachers of the country. As a citizen, he was public-spirited, conscientious, and devoted to his country; was influential for good always, and represented the highest standard of public morality. He was most affable and congenial and a perfect gentleman in every sense of the word. He was liberal and benevolent; all charitable objects received his sympathy and attention. As a companion and father, his equal would be hard to find; so gentle, so much sunshine, and so perfectly devoted to the happiness and best interest of each member of his family; self-sacrificing and wholesouled in making provision for the physical, mental and spiritual welfare of his children. To raise them to be ideal Christians was his chief concern. As a Christian man, he was a faithful member of the church, devout and pious, never wavering and never betraying any trust the church reposed in him. He bore the official burdens with Christian manliness; knew and loved the doctrine and polity of his church. His profession was experimental, spiritual, and assuring, illustrating the Christ-life in his home, the school-room, and community. His last illness continued for months. He suffered untold agonies, but his resignation was perfect. His departure was triumphant. His life and faith are a rich inheritance left to his family. Their loss is great, and bearable only by believing in and cherishing the blessed promise that there will be a happy meeting in the city beyond.

J. H. SHUMAKER.

MRS. ELIZA BRIDGES, wife of E. V. Bridges, and daughter of John and Jane Sistrunk, died at her home at Beach Grove, Copiah county, Miss., Feb. 1, 1901.

Sister Bridges was born in Pike county, Miss., May 1, 1835; moved with her parents to Copiah county when about four years of age, and lived in the same house until her death. She was married to Mr. E. V. Bridges, Dec. 28, 1859. She leaves husband, three sons with their wives and children, one brother and three sisters to mourn their loss. Her health began to fail about two years ago, and gradually grew worse until the end came. She joined the M. E. Church, South, early in life, and lived a consistent Christian. She loved her church; was quiet, peaceable, wise in council, true and faithful.

Sister Bridges was conscious to the last, and said she was ready to go, giving instruction and directions to the last, bidding her husband and children good-bye; also an aged mother sister, having lived together all their lives, and passed away without a struggle, leaving a sweet smile upon her face. We left her to rest in the family graveyard to wait the resurrection of the last day. "He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

R. BRADLEY.

Mrs. LIZZIE RANDALL was born Sept. 5, 1868; was married to Mr. A. B. Randall, Oct. 15, 1891, and died Dec. 7, 1900. Her early life was spent in and near Pope's Station, Panola county, Miss. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church. When she married she moved to Maryland, Leflore county. There she did not have the privileges of her own church, and she worshiped with her husband, who was a Methodist. She was a true Christian character, loyal to this church (Methodist); responded to all calls made upon the church. Her mother, Sister Moore, preceded her to her heavenly home in May, and the shock was so great she scarcely rallied in strength from that time. She leaves a husband, brother, and sister, and other relatives dear to her, to mourn their loss.

It was my privilege to be acquainted with Sister Randall. In closing my year's work as pastor of the McNutt charge, she was at my last appointment, the first Sabbath in December, 1900. She talked freely of our parting, and enjoyed the services to the fullest. I left for Conference the following Tuesday. When I returned she was no more. She had passed away to her home beyond the skies, where no parting comes.

Her former pastor and friend,
JOHN RITCHEY.

Bro. JAMES MCCARTY was born May 5, 1850; married to Miss Laura O. Harkey, Jan. 25, 1872, and died peacefully Dec. 10, 1900. He was a man possessing gifts and graces above the average, and he used these gifts to make home pleasant and attractive, and to have an influence for good over those with whom he came in contact. He possessed a sunny disposition, and was a friend and companion of the young, and was ever ready to give them counsel and advice. He was a recognized leader in his church and in his community, and he will be greatly missed. The writer has known him from his childhood, and loved him dearly. He was honest, true, and faithful; punctual to attend the services of the sanctuary, and careful to see after the welfare of his preacher, and his house was truly the preacher's home. He leaves a large and dependent family. May God bless and guide his sorrowing widow and dear children! The writer (who is now the pastor of his family) conducted the funeral services at Harperville in the presence of a very large audience, and then assisted in burying him with Masonic honors, of which institution he had long been a faithful member. Peace to his ashes.

IRVIN MILLER.

Mr. MAX WILLIAMS was born Feb. 22, 1842, and departed this life Nov. 17, 1900. He was in poor health for some time before his death, and seemed to realize that he would never be well again. The death of one of his sons who had been a great stay and support to him saddened his life very much, but he came down to death without a murmur.

Bro. Williams was a kind neighbor. The grief manifested upon his death evidenced the esteem in which he was held. He loved the family circle. He counted nothing hard that he could do for his wife and children. His greatest concern seemed to be for their future welfare.

Bro. Williams was a good citizen. For four years he represented his district upon the Board of Supervisors, and was an efficient officer. He was never connected with the church, though he professed conversion some years since. His wife and six children are left to mourn their loss. May the God of all grace comfort them!

E. S. LEWIS.

Whereas, Bro. Z. M. MAYES, for a long time a lay member of the Quarterly Conference at Crowley, La., and a faithful and devout member of the M. E. Church, South, has been called from labor to reward; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we have sustained a great loss, but our loss is his gain, and we bow in submission to the divine will, and urge our people to emulate his example.

Resolved, That we tender our sympathy to the bereaved family.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be spread on our Minutes and published in the papers.

GIANT FLOWERING CALADIUM, "NEW CENTURY."

A New Species, and the Grandest Foliage and Flowering Plant yet Introduced.

Leaves three times as large as any other Caladium, having a heavy, leathery texture and a bright, lustrous, glossy-green color, which is remarkably handsome. It does not produce a bulb, but is increased by suckers, and is perennial. The leaf-stalks are strong and tall, holding the mammoth leaves well above ground. Leaves 3 to 5 feet long by 2 or 2½ feet broad; perfectly immense, and make a plant which for tropical luxuriance has no equal. Added to this wonderful foliage effect are the mammoth lily-like blossoms 12 to 15 inches long by 7 inches wide; snow-white, changing to cream, with a rich and exquisite fragrance so powerful as to perfume a whole garden, filling the air with fragrance for a long distance. Plants bloom perpetually all summer in the garden, or all the year round in pots. Not only is it the grandest garden or lawn plant, but as a pot plant for large windows, verandas, halls or conservatories, it rivals the choicest Palms in foliage, to say nothing of its magnificent flowers. Thrives in any soil or situation, and grows and blooms all the year. As many as 6 to 12 flowers rise successively from the base of each leaf-stock. Regardless of all we can say, the plant will astonish every one; so novel, effective and fragrant.

Strong plants, which will bloom this summer, 50 cts. each: 3 for $1.00 postpaid.

OUR CATALOGUE FOR 1901—New Century Edition—greatest Book of Flower and Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs, Plants and New Fruits, 184 pages, 800 illustrations, 12 colored plates, will be mailed free to any who anticipate purchasing. We offer many Great Novelties.

HISTORY OF METHODISM.

"A SHORT HISTORY OF METHODISM." By John W. Boswell, D. D. Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn. 60 cents.

This is a work, the like of which should have been written many years ago. Every Methodist, particularly every young Methodist, should know something of the history of the great denomination which, in a single century, has moved to the first place among Protestant bodies. The histories written by the great authors who have made their mark on Methodism are, however, too voluminous for popular reading, and there has long existed a demand for just such a book as this from the pen of Dr. Boswell. In very condensed form it presents all the main facts in the history of Methodism, and gives a bird's-eye view of the growth of that church from the days of Wesley to the present. Whether Dr. Boswell's book will be appreciated as it should, is a question that can not now be answered, but certain it is that the Methodist who fails to place this book in the hands of his family misses a great opportunity.—St Louis Christian Advocate.

We send the above book, with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, one year for two dollars, cash, both to new and old subscribers.

THE INAUGURATION.

Mr. McKinley was inaugurated President of the United States for his second term on Monday, the fourth of March. The day at Washington was very disagreeable, the ceremonies of the occasion taking place in a pouring rain. The accounts—which, of course, were full and complete—in the large daily papers indicate that preparations for the day were on a larger and more magnificent scale than ever before, the occasion being more like the coronation of a King or Emperor than the inauguration of a President in the land of Washington and Jefferson. At each recurring inauguration complaint is made of the departure from "Jeffersonian simplicity," but the complaints go unheeded. They are needless. The country will never return to the simple ways of our fathers. It has grown too strong and too rich. Those who manage being decidedly of the opinion that all public functions of the kind should be in keeping with the ability of the people. The inaugural address, though dignified in character and tone, was plain and simple. The sentiment of the country in regard to the address, of course, is divided, men arraying themselves according to their political opinions. In this connection we express no opinion, as we are "not in politics." We may be allowed to say, however, that though Mr. McKinley has allowed some things under his administration which we think wrong—allowing Attorney Griggs' interpretation of the anti-canteen law to stand, for example—he has made a good President. He has looked well to the interests of the country. His position has been a very trying one, and still is, in consequence of the troubles in the Philippines and in China. During his administration the country has reacted from a state of depression to one of great activity and prosperity. This reaction we do not consider as attributable to Mr. McKinley, or to his party; but it has laid on him and his party a tremendous responsibility in the administration of the country's revenues. The temptation to extravagance is great. We hope the President and his advisers may do as well for the coming four years as during the four years past.

MATTERS IN CHINA.

The troubles in China seem to be progressing toward settlement. Two of the leaders of the Boxers have been beheaded, and others adequately punished. The question of indemnity will be next considered. This will necessarily consume a good deal of time. If the press dispatches are at all reliable, another matter of importance, especially to all who are interested in the progress of the gospel, has been virtually settled. We refer to the question of religious freedom in the Empire. It has been well understood all along that there would be no settlement of the troubles between China and the powers that did not include the freedom of religion. "In the German Reichstag, a few days ago, Dr. Lieber, a Roman Catholic, leader of the Centrist party, introduced a resolution calling upon the government to see to it that the final treaty with China should establish the status of foreigners in China, and that it should provide for the free exercise of the Christian religion. To the same intent the British and American missionaries in Pekin also presented to British and American ambassadors a formal statement and appeal, asking that former treaties protecting missionaries be reaffirmed; that hereafter all Chinese be left free to accept Christianity without injury to their political prospects; that missionaries be allowed to live in the interior, own property, and receive passports, etc." In accordance with the demand or appeal of the powers, "the Dowager Empress has issued what is in effect a decree of religious freedom for the Empire." Thus another point has been gained.

STOPPED A LYNCHING.

Governor Yates, of Illinois, has shown determination in dealing with a mob that does not always characterize governors. A man, arrested for assault on a woman, was in a short while arrested. He was lodged in the Springfield jail for safe keeping. He was indicted for the crime in the county in which it was committed, and was to be transferred to the county town for trial. "An armed mob took possession of the town with the avowed intention of lynching the accused. Governor Yates thereupon sent four companies of the State troops with the prisoner to see that the orderly processes of the law prevailed. At sight of this force the valor of those who intended to avenge one crime by committing another speedily evaporated. The man was duly arraigned, pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to the punishment by law decreed. He is now undergoing that punishment." The Times-Democrat, from which the above quotation is taken, further says: "Governor Yates has made no new discovery. He has simply obeyed his oath of office, and used the powers given him by law to preserve the State's peace. His action in the Greene county case, as the first conspicuous act of his administration affecting the whole State's welfare, is an auspicious beginning of his career as governor. It makes Illinois an example to other States of which every citizen of this commonwealth may well be proud."

THE WAR IN AFRICA.

There is no sign of a speedy close of hostilities in South Africa. Not a great amount of fighting is being done, and what is done is more in the nature of skirmishing bouts than regular pitched battles. The Boers are unable to meet the English in force, and the English are unable to entrap or so surround the Boers as to capture them, or force them to terms. With overwhelming numbers and unlimited supplies the British are bound to succeed in the end—at least, so it looks at this distance; but the Boers will worry them a long time. In strategy, quick marching and counter-marching, the British seem to be no matches for the Boers. In the last skirmish Gen. DeWet, it is said, lost heavily in men and stores, but he made good his escape, and will, doubtless, turn up unexpectedly at another point, to the vexation of his enemies. The English will not be content with anything less than the unconditional surrender of the Boers, and the Boers say they will fight to the end. Nor will the nations, however much they sympathize with the Boers, undertake to intervene, lest they make a breach between themselves and England. So the war must drag along until the Boers are either worn out, or are overwhelmed by England. To make concessions to the Boers would destroy the prestige of England among the nations, and this England can not afford to lose.

A SORE DISAPPOINTMENT.

The defeat of the Rivers and Harbors Bill just at the close of Congress was a sore disappointment to the citizens throughout the great Delta. Perhaps others were also disappointed, but none are as much interested as those living along the Mississippi river, on both sides, from Memphis to New Orleans. The defeat of the bill is attributed to the spirit of revenge on the part of the majority, who were chagrined because of the shelving of the Ship Subsidy Bill, which, it is said, was a pet measure of the leaders, and also one much favored by the President. The defeat of the bill postpones important work, but does not destroy the prospect of ultimately securing the necessary appropriation. If the reason assigned is the correct one, it shows that grave and dignified Senators may be moved by the spirit of selfishness manifested by children, sometimes expressed by the words, "Tit for tat; you kill my dog, I'll kill your cat."

AN ECHO.

BY REV. J. M. WEEMS.

Our friend "Gilderoy" says of Mrs. Nation, "I can not say that I approve her methods, but I do glory in her success." With him I, too, glory in her success; but wherein he sees success, and glories in it, others may not see success, and yet find cause for glorying. I do not consider that much of a success that merely destroys a few unlawful "joints" in Kansas, and that sends a railroad into court, with the hope of sending her to prison for her protest against its right to aid the State in an infraction of law. As men see, and count, and glory in success, the conclusion, as it relates to Mrs. Nation, may not be considered a very great success. The "joint" has no standing in law, and, therefore, dares not come into court and plead either the charge of house-breaking or the loss of property; but the great State of Kansas and the greater railroad corporation both have standing in law, and, as the next friends of the lawless "joint," they appear in court and charge Mrs. Nation with house-breaking—a very serious charge, whatever her motive or her provocation might have been.

But, after all, it has been aptly stated that the philosophy of all law is the rigid enforcement of law. It is this philosophy that lies at the very root, and that gives energy to all mob enforcement of the law. And I shall dare to say further that neither the law nor the people are responsible for the enforcement of law by mob violence. The responsibility for all such acts lies with that antecedent mob who has sworn to execute law, and yet stand at the bar of public opinion as a host of perjured villains, on the side of the criminal and against the enforcement of law. The official who pardons a criminal against the law and the testimony, or who refuses to prosecute a criminal who lives and acts in defiance of both, is as surely a mob as is the infuriated community that avenges the outrage upon the person of a defenseless woman. Do I favor mob law? A thousand times no! But if you are going to regenerate this ugly tree, and have it bear good fruit, doctor its roots and change the nature of its sap.

Then what has been Mrs. Nation's success? We may not fully know until the great State of Kansas and the greater power of a railroad corporation have executed their threat to put her in prison for violations of the law. Up to this time she has too clearly revealed to the vision of a dull, but a mighty, people the real thief, for the mighty forces of a State and of a railroad to hide themselves behind the cry of "Stop the thief." All eyes are turned on them now, and Mrs. Nation will only be seen as the little pebble that sinks out of sight in the great waters it has disturbed. Her hatchet may lie away and rust, or it may live in historic page and poetic rhythm, but the thought she has breathed into the brain and heart of humanity of that other lawless hatchet that is smashing hopes, and lives, and homes, and integrity to the State, and of immortal souls to the lowest depths of a hopeless hell, will live on. They may call her crazy, but those who imagine the men and women of this age do not think, and, thinking, will fail to act, will find, to their sorrow and everlasting shame, that it were better to be crazy than to challenge the manhood and womanhood of a mighty people. I glory in this success, and deplore the official lawlessness that made Mrs. Nation a law-breaker.

A NEW "KEY."

BY MRS. L. C. SADLER.

Looking over the Directory columns of a late copy of the New Orleans Picayune, I noticed that at "The First Church of Christ" services would be held by Mrs. Mary B. G. Eddy (Christian Scientist); subject, "Mind." There was also a Bible lesson, with scriptural texts and correlative passages from the text-book, "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures."

Of all the new things that the new century is already unfolding before the eyes of the expectant optimist and the doubting pessimist, we have here a new "key to the Scriptures." It is presumably able to unlock all mysteries that have puzzled Bible students for so many ages. Tesla's signal from the man on Mars, wireless telegraphy and the cable telephone, all pale before this new "key to the Scriptures."

Having read much of Mrs. Eddy and her "Christian Science," I was interested at the bare mention of a "key" with which she was to open all doors of doubt about scriptural truths, and let the light of "Mind" in on the benighted souls of Christians. Having been told by some that have heard her that many Christians who "have itching ears" are often seen among her listeners, I could but wonder how those that had once known the Christian experience could so belittle their common sense as to run after such "false philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ," as St. Paul says of all such teaching. As of old, these "Christian scientists, mind-healers and spiritualists" are trying to break up God's true church. Any old or new thing they can start up they would offer as a substitute for Christ and personal salvation.

How can anyone be the dupe of such a set of speculators on human credulity, let alone Christians? These Christian Scientists, theosophists, metaphysicians, magnetic-healers, and other varied assortments of worn-out and new frauds, with their "keys to the Scriptures," all constitute a ridiculous humbuggery to be hated and shunned by all who ever felt or hoped to feel completeness in Christ. How can a professed Christian sing,

> "Thou, O Christ, art all I want;
> More than all in thee I find,"

and then run after these pretenders that teach that "Mind" is "all you want" and all you will "find," for the whole pith, the whole object from beginning to end is to leave Christ out, and exalt themselves, and parade their delusive theories with new-fangled words and phrases, thereby trying, with their "vain deceits," to catch 'the very elect,' if it can only be pumped into their listening ears. To those who are rooted and grounded in Christ these false babblers have no affinity, however much they may infest their whereabouts, for they know in whom they have believed, and on that Rock they stand.

NOTES FROM OUR MISSION ROOMS.

THE GOSPEL CAN MAKE ITS OWN WAY.

It is a matter of sincere regret that we can not have Bishop Wilson with us at our Missionary Conference, to open on the twenty-fourth of April. For years secretary of the Board of Missions, and afterwards in charge of our mission fields, he gathers up into his thought and life, perhaps more than any other representative of our home church, the aggressive forces of a gospel which is being preached in the regions beyond. The message from him in attendance upon a great gathering of nearly five hundred Christian workers is a trumpet blast. He seems as full of hope as the missionaries themselves. He exclaims: "Japan belongs to Christ. The Eastern sky is aglow with the light of day near at hand."

A quotation from a recent letter is full of assurance: "Meanwhile another ground of hope for Japan is in the fact, with this article opened, that the forces of the gospel are at work in the land. There has been of late years little or no opposition to them. The ministers of Christ are free to deliver their message in any part of the land. The Word has not been without effect. Christian churches have been organized, and many native preachers have become earnest propagandas of the truth. Enough has been done to demonstrate here, as in all the world, that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. Christian schools have faithfully inculcated the principles of the gospel along with all the best learning of the times. The result, even to this time, has justified the expenditure and labor."

JAPAN: THE COUNTRY, COURT, AND PEOPLE.

Rev. J. C. C. Newton, D. D., formerly of our Japan Mission, and now a member of the Virginia Conference, has made an admirable contribution to missionary literature by his work on Japan. A competent critic writes: "The book is solidly packed with facts—historical, statistical, descriptive, religious, and otherwise. Tersely, yet clearly presented, it covers the whole field more completely than any volume known to the writer. It is reliable and accurate, and in this respect differs greatly from some volumes produced by certain travelers and correspondents, who, sojourning in Japan but a few weeks, obtain most of their facts from guides, books of travels, or foreigners whose opinions of missionaries, and their work in that and other oriental lands, is generally in inverse proportion to the corruption of their lives. The author, on the other hand, both knows and loves Japan, and has given us a book which will commend itself to all right-minded, intelligent readers, and to those who desire to know and love the truth."

The Programme Committee of the General Missionary Conference to be held in New Orleans has made no mistake in assigning to Dr. Newton the subject, "A Survey of Our Eastern Fields—Japan." The delegates may expect a clear and definite perspective of the situation in a country whose future will bear so strongly upon the destinies of Korea, China, and other oriental powers.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Our Trinity congregation in Charleston, S. C., already have the sum of $13,000 subscribed toward the new church they contemplate erecting at an early date.—Raleigh Advocate.

Rev. Geo. M. Hull, of Steen's Creek, Miss., says: "I am doing well in my work here. The parsonage will soon receive repairs, which will make it one of the best in the Jackson district."

The Florida Christian Advocate says Rev. W. F. Alexander, who is every way worthy of the confidence of the people, has gone to Cuba to preach. He has been studying Spanish some time.

Prof. A. G. Murphey, president of Logan Female College (Ky.), and a prominent layman in our church, died suddenly, sitting in a chair, on the morning of the twenty-sixth ultimo. His death will be severely felt in Kentucky.

The Book Committee of our church, in compliance with the order of the last General Conference, is arranging to build a branch Publishing House in China. For the purpose the Board of Missions will turn over to the committee a suitable lot in China on which to erect the building.

"There are ten Congregational Churches in Massachusetts that give more money for missionary and benevolent uses than they spend in maintaining their own churches." So says one of our exchanges. It would be interesting to know something of the inner life of these churches.

Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Baptist Theological Seminary, preached at our Fourth Avenue Church, Louisville, on Sunday morning, Feb. 24. His sermon was much enjoyed. What does Brother Eaton think of that? The first thing Dr. Mullins knows he will go the way Dr. Whitsitt went.

"A Treatise on Cigarettes and Other Forms of Tobacco," by Dr. J. S. Hill, of Greenville, Texas, discusses in a short and practical way the evil effects of the tobacco habit. Thousands of slaves to tobacco would gladly break their chains if persuaded it is possible. If anyone is interested, let him write to Dr. Hill.

There is quite a difference between the statement of "Veritas," in the St. Louis Advocate, and the Midland Methodist as to the subject of discussion by the Nashville Preachers' Meeting on a recent Monday morning. "Veritas" said the subject was "How to get uniformity in the use of the form of service prescribed in the Book of Discipline." The Midland says, "Dr. D. C. Kelley was appointed to discourse on the proper use of our formulas." As stated by the Midland, the discussion was timely.

Through the courtesy of Rev. W. G. Evans, editor, we have received a copy of the Minutes of the Fifty-fifth Session of the Louisiana Conference, held at Baton Rouge, Dec. 13-17, 1900. This annual, in mechanical execution, is equal to anything of the kind we have seen. It is the work of the Ogilvie-Harper Printing Co., Shreveport. The editor has done his work well. He has not only given the Minutes of the Conference, but introduced many features that add interest and value to the annual. The church throughout Louisiana would be blessed by its general circulation.

Christian Advocate.

What Our Editors Say.

LET THE HOME HELP.

After all, the home has the heaviest responsibility in the work of teaching the truth of God and of aiding in the salvation of the soul. God looks there first, and makes there the strongest demand. He declares: "These words which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down and when thou risest up," etc. No Sunday-school, or pulpit, or any other agency relieves the home of its high duty. Let that never be forgotten. It follows that the home should steadily second every effort to teach truth to its children or to save them. Not attempting to put its duty away, but doing that and helping any who try to assist. The Sunday-school is, without doubt, one of the best helps of the home, and the home owes it to itself to make the most of this splendid agency. It should join in the studies, or at least encourage and assist the students. A word from a father or mother—anything to show interest—will mightily reinforce the superintendent and teacher. Neglect in the home renders ineffectual much faithful work in the school. We beg parents to realize the value of the Sunday-school and the necessity of helping them. Teach the lessons during the week, send the children regularly—or better still, go with them—ask about the school when they return, and enforce the lessons that have been taught. The conversion and development of your children may be the great reward.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE REVIVAL AT HAND.

What means this turning by so many preachers away from the use of sensational methods, and the confession that the time is worse than wasted in the preparation and delivery of ethical lectures as a means of leading men to Christ. Why should men of culture get "down in the dust" before God, and from this condition of "double destitution" cry to God for mercy and to man to repent? It is that the pulpit is getting back to the eternal truth of the Book, and finding it sufficient in its revelation, and true in its declarations. It has been some time since so many preachers were content to preach the direct, positive gospel of Jesus Christ. Is the revival at hand? Yes. If we will prostrate ourselves before God, confess our guilt and throw ourselves on the mercy of God in Christ Jesus, the revival, pervasive, widespread, and saving, is near us. What will come with it? That need not bother us. If God come into the consciousness of our people, we can trust him to bring what to him seemeth wise. Shall we have mighty demonstrations? If God so will it, they will not hurt. Shall high tides of emotion sweep through individual hearts and over assemblies? By all means, if the tides are spring and regulated by him.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

THE RELIGION OF PEACE.

The opponents of Christianity may scoff at the idea of universal peace and pronounce it an idle dream, but the great International Court of Arbitration which has just been constituted is an evidence that the idea is making headway among men. Wars, violent, ferocious wars will, from time to time, occur, but their horrors will be mitigated by the labors of the Red Cross and other benevolent agencies, and, without doubt, friendly intervention, offered at a proper time, will shorten their duration. In time, the general sentiment of mankind educated up to the point where Christian principles are given the fullest realization, in fact, will put an end to all war, and usher in that reign of peace for which pious men have hoped for ages. Men say that it is late in the world's history for such a change to come, but how do they know? For aught we can tell, the human race may endure upon the earth for millions of years, and the time may come when historians will look back on the first six millenniums of our history as a grown man now contemplates the first six years of his childhood.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

OUGHT TO BE REVIVED.

Years ago it was the uniform practice for the Sunday-school teacher to conduct his class directly from the school-room to the church, and to sit with them and oversee their deportment during the hour of service. It is most desirable to revive this custom wherever parents themselves can not or will not discharge this duty. Nothing could be more seemly than to see parents and children seated side by side Sabbath after Sabbath in the temple of God. Would it not in many instances foretoken a higher communion and saintlier service in the Upper Temple? Will not pastors from the pulpit and at the fireside impress upon parents their obligation in this regard to their offspring? Can we wonder that our children grow up in irreligious habits, and stray away in later years from the church, when they are not trained to attend and appreciate the house of God and its services? May we not hope for a happy change in this respect? It will mean much for the interests of the church and the spiritual welfare of the young.—Baltimore Christian Advocate.

SHOOT LOW.

"Shoot low," was one of the orders of Cromwell to his men when engaged in battle. The wisdom of the order is apparent, for high shooting passes over the heads of the enemy. It is not the business of soldiers to shoot in the air. A civil officer, when he sees the mob gathering, sometimes shoots in the air in order to frighten, but not to injure, the mass of excited humanity surging toward him. But the trained soldier, with the surging foe in front of him, has serious work to perform. He shoots to kill, and he does not want to aim too high. So, in preaching, the minister has something more to do than to entertain his hearers. His work is great and his responsibility serious. He needs to aim low in order that the truth may do execution. A great deal of our preaching is above the heads of the average listener. Hence it misses the mark completely. Like Cromwell's order to his soldiery, we say to the ministry, "Shoot low," and execution will follow.—Texas Christian Advocate.

THE PREACHER'S GREATNESS.

No effort, inspired by ulterior motives and resulting in mere sensationalism, can be of use to the world. The newspaper which pursues a course of deception, defamation, and excitation of the public mind, in the belief that this is newspaper activity and success, will sooner or later collapse. So the preacher who justifies his barren sensationalism with the plea that it enlarges his congregation and extends his reputation is sure to stand some day in the ashes of his failure and echo the words of the wise man's "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." To preach the gospel in its simplicity, purity, and power—to introduce men to God in the earnest hope of bringing about an intimate acquaintance—this is the preacher's immortal greatness.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

BE PATIENT WITH THE ERRING.

Be patient with the weaknesses of your fellow-man. None of us are perfect, and it is natural for a brother occasionally to get himself befogged and become entangled in the meshes of doubt and ignorance. In such condition he is not able to perceive his bearings very clearly, and thus he drifts from his proper moorings. He then comes to the conclusion that the whole world is at sea, but it is because he is in that condition himself. He simply needs a little nursing, mixed with patience, and by and by he will come round all right. Do not rail upon him and severely condemn him, but help him in the time of his need and give to him a little kindly sympathy, and the probability is, you will save him to himself and to the church.—Texas Christian Advocate.

SUFFERED ENOUGH.

We can hardly wonder that women have become excited by the evils of the liquor business. It is enough to arouse any one with a heart and to produce desperation. The world has suffered enough to create a revolution, and if men will not revolt against liquor selling, the better sex will do it. The real wonder is that women have not done so long ago. Toleration of the liquor business is something not to be thought of. To license it is a crime against society and religion. To endure it is to submit to the worst evils under the sun. The strain has gone so far that human nature could stand it no longer, and there is no telling how this revolt is going to end.—Florida Christian Advocate.

PUSHING YOUNG PREACHERS.

BY REV. J. F. SCURLOCK.

Young preachers may be young in years and young in the ministry, or they may be old in years and young in the ministry. In either instance they must be regarded as young preachers. From this class the Conferences draw their supply to fill the vacancies of those who, from age or afflictions, are compelled to fall out of ranks. They are the hope of the church. It is of this class that many important things may be written. Pushing them in Conference is the only fact which may be considered at this time; and, if pushed, it is for many reasons. The first one which is given is, because they are popular. When a young man has an attractive person, entertaining social qualities, and a magnetic delivery, he will of necessity become popular. His popularity may be ephemeral or permanent, for it evidently depends not only upon these, but upon their continuance. It may be that these do not comport with genuine humility. It is rarely the case that one who becomes such is truly pious, and regards his ministry as a paramount means of saving sinners. Where great attainments of this character have been reached, it is usually accompanied with conceit or self-consciousness of superiority. He thinks more of himself than he ought to think, and he becomes vain, and this vanity, sooner or later, culminates in the big head. This is not necessarily the case, but a slight observation shows that it rarely ever fails to take that turn. When a young man is idolized he becomes a spoilt specimen of ministerial assumption, for very soon he undertakes to lord it over God's heritage. A spoilt preacher is like a spoilt child; he is fretful, complaining, and selfish. He wishes the best appointments, and feels chagrined and mortified if he does not get them. Very soon we hear that he is not appreciated, and that he intends to locate, if a change does not take place; and yet he is pushed because he is a favorite of the people. But does popularity embrace solid worth? By no means. And can they be relied on in the forefront of the battle? This can not be affirmed. We can not affirm that such preachers are great for this does not consist in an acquired public notoriety. Many preachers of talent, and whose abilities are acknowledged by all classes, have never been popular. This does not become our standard by which to judge of the measure of intellectual merit; yet these popular young preachers are pushed, year after year, up toward the zenith of Conference honors.

2. They are pushed because of family considerations. When applying for admission into Conference, we often hear the presiding elder and others represent them as belonging to an excellent family, or one of note. There can be no objection to his honorable descent, for we are all glad to have such young men among us. But to make that the ground upon which they have greater claims to preferment than others, and at the same time detriment to their real claims to favor, is unjust. However, some preachers lay great stress upon such an honorable distinction, and in some way they take occasion to show it in a very conspicuous way. Others come up for admission, but they have no such ancestors back of them to give them character or prestige. It may be said of them that they are good cases, but no fulsome eulogies are heard to fall from the lips of any one in the Conference room. It is taken for granted that great men have great sons, but it does not follow that the sons possess the talent of the parents. Everyone should build upon his own merits, and not upon that of others. If character is thus built, it will be permanent and something of which to be proud; otherwise it will be a failure.

3. He is pushed on the account of educational attainments. We believe in a thorough education, and in an educated ministry especially. We should be the last to underrate intellectual power, either in or out of the ministry. The mind should be developed by a rigid and careful discipline. It should be thoroughly cultivated. Education helps to make the preacher, but it does not wholly make him. He must have good common sense, a large share of prudence, and genuine piety. Some educated men have no discretion; they may be said to be educated cranks. Again, you will find them impracticable in preaching, visiting, and in the administration of discipline. When well balanced, and education has been given the right direction, they will succeed better than when deficient in either one or both. But it is usually the case that they are pushed on account of superior educational acquirements. More prudence is to be exercised in such cases than has been hitherto exercised.

4. Because the young preachers desire it, and project plans for that purpose. It may be said of this class, as with many others, that they have a moderate share of ambition. There is every probability, when this is deeply implanted in the nature, that it will sooner or later crop out. Its cultivation will cause it to take deeper root, and its growth will become more vigorous. It will soon begin to take on a type which proves the real purpose of the preacher. If he does not stand high in the estimation of his brethren, he looks around for a stepping-stone to it. The purpose he has in view is worked for all that it is worth. He not only uses his own talents and energies, but induces others to champion his cause. He goes at it with a good will, and whilst he gets others to push him, he pushes himself with all his powers. So pushing is not done altogether by others, but by the person himself.

These views are penned with a true fraternal regard for the young preachers, but with a correct notion of what is right and wrong in the promotion of young members.

A CHALLENGE TO THE CHURCH.

BY REV. P. L. COBB.

Never in the history of the Board of Missions have so many thoroughly qualified men been eager and anxious to go to the foreign field. Nearly a dozen graduates of Vanderbilt University, most of whom have had experience on the home field, and a number of other picked men from our Conference colleges and secular institutions, are ready or offering for service. Some of these are growing restless because they are not sent out. But what can the Board of Missions do? The failure on the part of the church to supply funds renders the Board powerless to act.

While this large force offering for our foreign work is ready to go, the need on the field grows greater, and the cry for help more insistent every day. What shall we do? Our hearts burn within us. These voices at home and abroad are to us the voice of God. We have prayed for open doors, and they have been opened to more than a billion people. We have prayed the Lord of the harvest, and he has prepared laborers by the score. How long shall our indifference keep the workmen from their work? We are at a crisis. God is calling us and stirring the church in more ways than one.

Just at the time when the great need is of funds to send the waiting laborers, God has prepared a force to assist in the cultivation of the resources and intelligence of the home church. Only a few days ago it was our great pleasure to meet in a conference preliminary to the Students' Summer Campaign twenty-two of the choice men of the Vanderbilt Theological Department. The meeting was spiritual and enthusiastic. Dr. Lambuth presided, and at the close gave opportunity for those present to enroll themselves as campaigners for the Summer. Seventeen responded, and four others gave their names later, making twenty-one in all. They will go among the churches without money and without price, and present the cause of missions. Assistance will be rendered League officers and Sunday-school superintendents in organizing for missionary work. They will sell missionary libraries, but receive no profit from them. The only cost to the church will be the nominal sum of their legitimate traveling expenses. This has never exceeded two dollars per church, and usually is estimated at one dollar and a half. Free entertainment can always be provided. It is a great benediction to any home to have the presence and influence of these consecrated young men.

In the name of these students, in the name of the men who offer to go to the foreign fields, in the name of our brethren on the foreign field who have been waiting for help until hope has most died within them, in the name of the Christless ones, and in the name and for the sake of our Master, Jesus Christ, who is calling us, we plead for greater activity. We call on those who should be leaders to join in an organized effort; we call on our people to inform themselves on the subject, and we plead for larger giving of time and money, but most of all for giving of self.

GOLDEN WEDDING.

The golden wedding of Mr. James Watts and his gentle wife was an occasion that will long be remembered by all who were privileged to attend, and is certainly worthy of mention. This noble pair, who have journeyed together as husband and wife for fifty years, have a large family of ten grown children. All the children are married, save two, and have families of their own. Death never robbed them of any of their children. All were present with their children and children's children, unto the third generation.

The golden wedding was celebrated in the beautiful home of their daughter, Mrs. B. F. Ormond. The decorations were beautiful and suggestive. From the library and wide halls, through the spacious parlor, was a vista of gold chains and golden chrysanthemums. The chains were emblematic of the unbroken family of father, mother, six daughters and four sons—all noble specimens of womanhood and manhood. Over the wide stairway in the hall loops and loops of golden chains fell in portiere fashion, and above them the motto in gold letters, "God is Good," and the dates 1851 and 1901. In an alcove of the parlor hung a large golden bell. Underneath sat the aged couple, handsome still, and both well preserved.

Bro. Watts has ever been a loyal Methodist, faithful to his church and pastors, and the Lord has wonderfully blessed him and his. As they smilingly received the congratulations and good wishes of their two hundred guests, I could but admire the noble-looking and happy bride and groom of half a century. Two of the bridesmaids were present, aged and white-headed, but their hearts still warm and their love as fresh as fifty years ago.

After the crowd assembled Mrs. Van Hook, the lovely granddaughter, but now the wife of one of our ministers and the mother of two children, went to the piano, and the pastor, Rev. J. M. Weems, and presiding elder, Rev. G. A. Gnice, took their places beside her, and near the aged couple, and began singing the Doxology. All rose to their feet. Then the pastor voiced the feelings of all present in a prayer of praise and thanksgiving, after which Rev. H. W. Van Hook read a selection from the Sacred Word. The pastor then made an appropriate and feeling talk, and all the assembly joined him in singing, "How firm a foundation!" Rev. G. A. Gnice then led in prayer, and closed with the benediction.

Soon the dining-room was thrown open, and every guest seated at the table. Before us was spread an old-time feast. Words can not picture it, but when each began to discuss it, the silence was ominous. There was nothing lacking.

The gifts were numerous and valuable; the most elegant given by the family. An elegant silver service, lined with gold, of ten pieces were given by the ten children. A beautiful silver bowl, gold lined, from the grandchildren, and an elegant water set from the Watts family, of Newton, Miss. There was a large array of souvenirs from friends far too numerous to mention. Two poems were read and appreciated—one by Col. Power, of Jackson, Miss., and the other by Mrs. R. S. Woodward, widow of Bro. Woodward, of precious memory.

Before the guests departed they wrote their names in a "Guest Book," whose gilt decorated pages were nearly filled. All unite in pronouncing this one of the grandest and most successful events they ever attended. Even the groom enjoyed it more than the one fifty years ago, when a pair of tight boots marred his comfort. All felt it was good to be at this golden wedding, and wish for our Brother and Sister Watts many years of golden blessings, before they go hence to enjoy the home prepared for the faithful. May the blessings of God rest upon them and their children! S. G. WEEMS.

ARE WE ALL FOR CHRIST?

In the February number of the Mississippi Lsagner, which contains many good things, I find an advertisement which is not at all in harmony with the title of the paper. It is an advertisement of the "Mardi Gras" Carnival at Mobile.

Do we not, as preachers, preach against such things? Then why put such advertisements in papers that are supposed to stand between our young people and the world? I, for one, wish to put myself on record as objecting to such inconsistency. Let us be "All for Christ," and not a part for Christ, and a part for Mardi Gras. C. M. CROSSLEY.

Walnut Grove, Miss.

A professor in Bonn was about to operate on the tongue of a young man who was suffering with a cancer on that member. Before beginning the operation the professor said: "If you have anything to say, you had better say it now, for after the operation you will never be able to utter a word." The young man said: "Praised be the Lord Jesus Christ," and he never spoke afterwards. That was the best thing he could have uttered. No wonder that all present were very much touched, and that tears stood in the eyes of the professor.—Southern Churchman.

The divine wisdom has given us prayer, not as a means whereby to obtain the good things of earth, but as a means whereby we learn to do without them; not as a means whereby we escape evil, but as a means whereby we become strong to meet it.—Robertson.

The world's great need to-day is light—light which leads to God. And the great work of the church to-day is the same as it has been in the past—namely, to open the words of God to the world, and so give to the world the needed light.—Christian Advocate.

We can not have the spirit of Christ and the spirit of the world at the same time. They are irreconcilable in their very nature. One is ambition; the other is ministering. We must make our choice.—Exchange.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

COLUMBUS DISTRICT.

The first round on Columbus district, North Mississippi Conference, for the current year has just been finished. The preachers were prompt at their posts and ready for industrious action. They have their work well in hand, and are moving with good hope for full results on all points. Receipts were sorely short last year, due to the heavy failure in crops. Most farmers are buying corn now to use in the tillage of this season's crop; yet even in the rural sections the stewards in all but two circuits have readily held up the allowance for their preacher. The tendency is to better support and for better parsonages. True, there is a very wide margin for this tendency yet to fill, but the growth of a healthy tendency is of much moment; it can be cultivated so as to ripen into the most blessed fruit. Nowhere on the material side of our work is improvement more needed than for adequate provision for preachers in charge and their families. Substantially, the itinerant ministry is the whole of working Methodism. To support that is essential to the life of the whole, and is a debt, not an alms.

The Winter has been open—not a single hard freeze—and the advance in field work gives promise of good crops. Our Father is gracious in all these things. The Lord reigneth. Let us seek more earnestly for the things that do not perish with their using; the things that are not seen are eternal.

The home of our brother, E. S. Lewis, of Brooksville charge, is made to rejoice in what is believed to be the full recovery of Sister Lewis from her long, distressing illness.

CEDAR BLUFF.

The prospects were never more flattering, in the experience of this preacher, than now. The people received us very kindly, and have in many substantial ways shown their appreciation of us, and they keep it up.

Our Quarterly Conference convened on the sixteenth ultimo, and there was nothing to mar the pleasure of the occasion except that our presiding elder, Dr. Sullivan, was sick and not really able to preach, though he did preach, and my only comment is, that Dr. Sullivan will do to preach at Conference or anywhere else. Reports showed a decided advance over first quarters for previous years on this charge. Every church was represented in the Board of Stewards, and they voluntarily raised the preacher's salary. I have visited all but about fifteen of my entire membership, and finished two "rounds" without missing an appointment, notwithstanding all my family (including my horse) have been sick since I began.

The parsonage was almost entirely unfurnished when we came, but the present writing finds it furnished almost complete, and it was done without "suppers" and "bazars," too. I believe the day is dawning when this will be one of the best circuits in the Columbus district, and may the kind Father help this pastor to make it such!

With best wishes for the success of the ADVOCATE,

E. E. LANGFORD.

BELMONT CIRCUIT.

DEAR EDITOR: Our work consists of six churches—three in Tishimingo county, two in Ittawamba county, Miss., and one in Franklin county, Ala., and it is called the Belmont circuit.

Some of the brethren tried to discourage us before we arrived here, but I wish to say I was more than pleased with the work, and feel thankful that we were sent here. We find some as good Bible students here as there is anywhere, and people who will stand by their young pastor at all times.

Though we are far from home and loved ones, our lot is "cast in pleasant places," for we receive a cordial welcome in most every home, and the people, both Christian and sinner, seem to take an interest in the church. Though our church paper is not taken by any member, there is a great number of religious papers taken. We hope to have the ADVOCATE circulated before the year closes. The prospect is good for a great advancement this year. We ask the prayers of all Christians, that our efforts may be crowned with abundant success.

WALTER W. JONES.

SARDIS DISTRICT.

We have met all the appointments on the first round except one—Tyro circuit, last Saturday and Sunday. Bro. Graves, the pastor, was quite sick at the same time. He was taken with congestion on Friday; was thought to be better Saturday. He has won the hearts of his people, and has promise of a glorious year.

We have a most hopeful outlook on the Sardis district. The salaries of the pastors have been increased in the district several hundred dollars; the reports for support of pastors for the first quarter the best we have known; more Sunday-schools run all Winter, and larger attendance than usual. There has been an accession of forty-six to the church. The preachers and the people seem to be ready for every good word and work. You will hear better things than this before the end of this year.

We do not forget the ADVOCATE. It is growing in interest and favor with people. God bless you in your work.

W. S. LAGRONE.

SHANNON, MISS.

Rev. S. A. Brown, our pastor at Shannon, Miss., says: "We have had an accession of twenty-one members on Shannon circuit—seven on profession of faith. We see many encouraging signs. Our need is a revival of religion. We are praying and laboring for it."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MINDEN, LA.

DEAR DOCTOR: I am moving on nicely at Minden, where I had served four years as presiding elder. My Official Board raised salary $200 over last year, and the ladies have had the church painted and the parsonage put in good shape, building new gallery floors and foundation, etc. My congregations are good, and I have added twenty-one to the church by certificate, and I am encouraged to work, preach and pray for a gracious revival of religion. May God bless you in your work as editor of our organ. I read your editorials and remember the good old days in Arkansas Conference, where we were together. Come to see me and preach several days for me, and I promise subscribers.

Fraternally, B. T. CREWS.

BUNKIE, LA.

We have started out well on the new year at Bunkie. Have had seven added by profession of faith, three by certificate, and four by baptism, since Conference. Some join the church nearly every service. Our Sunday-schools and prayer meetings have taken on new life. Fine congregations wait on the ministry of the Word.

Our first Quarterly Conference was a success in every way. Our faithful and painstaking presiding elder, Bro. J. D Harper, was present, and proved himself worthy of the high position he occupies, both in the pulpit and chair.

N. J. ROBERTS, P. C.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT.

The first round is almost finished, and the work so far has been very satisfactory. The preachers all went promptly to their respective works, and in good earnest began the labor of the year. Most of them have their work well in hand, and are very hopeful for the results of the year.

The work in Meridian is in better shape than it has been for a long while. At Central the congregations are immense, and the finances far in advance of what they were at the same time last year. The Sunday-school is, perhaps, the largest in the State, having in actual attendance two weeks ago 420. If there is another school that can beat this, we do not know of it. The other three churches are doing equally as well, and if appearances do not deceive us, East End will not be the only one to report all its finances in full at the end of this year. The preacher at South Side says they are raising sand down there for a parsonage, and they soon hope to turn the sand into mortar for the foundation. The official membership, on the whole, seem to be very hopeful. There has been no disposition to cut salaries, and in but one instance has this occurred. Several of the Boards have raised the assessment for the preacher-in-charge, and this of their own motion, and all seem to be hopeful that the assessments will be paid in full. Our motto for the year shall be, "A revival in every church, and all assessments paid."

G. A. GUICE.

Meridian, Miss., March 5, 1901.

MEADVILLE, MISS.

The new century brought to the Natchez district a new presiding elder, and to Meadville circuit a new pastor. It is safe to say that they have made impressions for good.

Our first quarterly meeting was well attended, and the collections were pronounced very good. Our pastor seems enthused with his work, and we are praying for advancement along all lines of church work. He has organized a Ladies' Aid Society, and plans are being discussed for needed improvements on our parsonage. We labor under a great many disadvantages, as ours is a country work, but willing hearts and hands are listed in the Master's service.

(MRS.) L. A. FLOWERS.

MATHERVILLE CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: We are planning for a glorious revival this year. We want to make a forward move on every line of church work this, the beginning of a new century and year. I rejoice over the warm reception given me on my return to Matherville by the members of the charge, and my prayer to God is, that I may lead them to loftier heights in that heaven-born experience that comes to us through faith in the Son of God. Success to you and the ADVOCATE.

R. H. BARR.

Said a heathen to a missionary: "There must be something in your religion which makes you come all the way out here to tell us of it. I am sure I would not go so far to tell you of mine." Nothing is perhaps more likely to impress the minds of pagan people than the evidence that missionaries afford that the good news is worth telling.—Exchange.

His Terrible Cough.

Few things are so depressing and weakening as a constant cough. Few things are as discouraging as a cough that will not yield to treatment. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures coughs when all other medicines fail, because it is more than a cough medicine. The cough is but a symptom. "Discovery" makes new and pure blood, heals the lacerated tissues, and gives the body the needed strength to throw off disease. It cures the cough by curing the cause of the cough. There is no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, nor other narcotic in the "Discovery."

"I had a terrible cough something over a year ago and could find nothing to stop it, or even to do me a particle of good," writes Mr. J. M. Farr, of Cameron, Screven Co., Ga. An inquiry into the characters of the men who composed the Sanhedrim at the time of our Lord's arraignment before it, and the manner in which that trial was conducted.

Consistent with its policy to constantly improve its service, the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad is now relaying its track between New Orleans and Slidell, a distance of twenty-nine miles, with new steel rails, weighing seventy-five pounds to the yard.

The entire line has been ballasted in the most approved manner from end to end, and, notwithstanding the increased price of steel, two-thirds of the entire mileage has been relaid with 75-pound new steel rails, and the balance of the line will be relaid as rapidly as the material can be procured.

These improvements are not only an indication of the prosperous condition of the property, but an assurance of safety and comfort to travelers.

The entire Queen and Crescent system, of which the New Orleans and Northeastern forms a part, is now a thoroughly up-to-date system of railroads running the very best equipment in the most modern style.

TEACHERS' BUREAU.

The Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has, under paragraph 615 of our Discipline, established a TEACHERS' BUREAU. The purpose of this Bureau is the advancement of Christian Education. We propose to do our best to secure for the graduates of our institutions, and for other competent persons, positions in our schools and colleges; but we guarantee a position to nobody. Applicants for positions will be furnished, upon request, with our application form, which will explain itself. Since the making of money is not the purpose of our Bureau, we will make our nominations with the greatest possible care. Presidents of our schools and colleges, and Boards of Trustees seeking teachers, will do well to apply to us. The facilities of the Board for this work are unusual. We have a constituency, preachers and laymen, of one million and a half. We request the pastors throughout our Connection to advertise this Bureau, and to notify us of any vacancy in any school, secular or Christian, as soon as it occurs. By so doing they will greatly aid us in promoting Christian education. Address Rev. J. D. Hammond, Gen. Sec., Nashville, Tenn.

THURSDAY, MARCH 14, 1901.

Not a few are of the opinion that they are honoring the church by accepting membership, and giving it their time and means. They are, perhaps, not so much to blame as we are prone to think. The appeals under which they consent to come in are sometimes of such a character as to impress them with the thought. When such is the case, the preacher is as much to blame as the unlearned sinner.

The man who is most learned, the most polished, that preaches best, and has the greatest number of admirers, is not necessarily the best minister in the town. That title belongs to the man who manifests the mind of Christ, and comes nearest imitating his example. The life of such a man is an unanswerable epistle. His daily ministrations give force and effect to his pulpit teachings. The value of such a minister to a community can not be computed in dollars and cents. The Day will declare it.

We have ritual sufficient. What we have is between high-churchism, on the one hand, and the looseness and lack of order on the part of those who extemporize their own forms, on the other. We know nothing more beautiful in their simplicity than our order for the administration of the Lord's Supper, the ministration of baptism, solemnization of matrimony, etc. Withal, they are dignified, and command respect. Our mode of worship needs no enrichment; everything is done "decently and in order." Had we double or thrice the amount of ritual, it would not help us to be more spiritual. We are formal enough. We desire no strange fire introduced into our sanctuaries.

The Presbyterian Confession of Faith has remained unaltered since it was framed about two hundred and fifty years ago. As the exponent of Calvinism, it can not well be improved. It is thoroughly consistent. It can not be changed or modified in the manner demanded by the progressives without taking out of it the key-stone. That done, the whole system will go to pieces. If it was true when written, it is true now, and should be let alone. If it is not true, and our Presbyterian brethren are so persuaded, the sooner they substitute another, the better. To give way to popular clamor without change of conviction would be evidence of time-serving. The man who would do so could not be trusted to defend the vital principles of the gospel.

HOLINESS.

As to holiness, all well-informed Christians are profoundly agreed on two things—the meaning of holiness, and its absolute necessity. But, strange to say, many who thus agree deny the commencement the possibility of a sinless life. It would be hard to explain this inconsistency. A few thoughts on the subject may be helpful.

What is holiness? Is it that moral quality of heart and life without which there can be no communion with God in this world, nor salvation in the world to come. These are blessings secured to man through the atonement. To enjoy them, he must be holy. For this reason holiness has been characterized as "the central idea of Christianity;" an idea clearly perceived, when it is considered that every effect of the Holy Spirit in his operations on the mind and heart is for the purpose of effecting holiness. This is true in the inception work of grace, as well as in the advanced stages of Christian experience. The sinner under conviction, penitent, and laboring under the burden of guilt, desires to be free in order to be holy. In the agony of his soul he prays, not only for a right spirit, but for a clean heart. His first experience is soul-liberty in freedom from guilt, and consciousness of the cleansing power of the blood of atonement.

This doctrine, we think, is amply sustained by the Word of God. We learn something on the subject by studying our Lord's conversation with Nicodemus. This man came to Jesus in order to be taught. Jesus talked to him, if not as a sinner, at least as one wholly outside the kingdom of God, and plainly informed him that he "must be born again." Nicodemus could not understand how it was possible for one to be born after reaching mature years, but he did understand what is meant to be born. He asked no questions on that point, evidently knowing that Jesus intended to inform him that only by a second birth could one become a son of God. Nicodemus also knew that sonship implied likeness of nature, heirship, and all the privileges of one born into a family, whether of king or peasant. Everybody knows that such is the case. As our Lord selected the method of recruiting families and securing heirship as an illustration of the method of entering into the kingdom of God, we do no violence to the truth by saying that when a man is born into the kingdom of heaven, born of the Spirit, he becomes a son of God, an heir of God, and, as such, is entitled to all the blessings and privileges that such a relation can possibly bestow. Having become a son of God, he can not be denied his privileges.

As a child partakes of the nature of the father, and becomes an heir, and is entitled to the blessings which belong to him by virtue of his relation, at the moment of birth, so one born into God's family at once possesses the God-likeness, and is recognized as an heir of God and a joint-heir with Jesus Christ our Lord. No probation is required. As time advances, he may become more and more like God, as a son becomes more and more like his father, but he is no more a son at the end of his three-score years and ten than he was in the beginning of his life. So the Christian may grow more and more like God as he grows older, but he is as much a son, and as thoroughly identified with the family of God, when first born as at the end of years. Admitting these facts, we are prepared to say, it is impossible to separate sonship in the family of God from a state of holiness. There can be no such thing as an unholy child of God. The very thought is repugnant to reason and Scripture.

In addition to the information we gather from the interview with Nicodemus, we have a practical illustration of the subject in the case of the impotent man recorded by St. John. Jesus found this man at the pool Bethesda, vainly waiting for some man to help him into the water. He could not move quickly enough to get in first, and while trying another stepped down before him, and deprived him of the benefit of the healing water. Jesus said, "Wilt thou be made whole?" and seeing the readiness with which the man responded, and his eagerness to be cured—for he had been afflicted for thirty-and-eight years—he was told to rise, take up his bed, and walk. His obedience was prompt, and the cure was instantaneous. "Immediately the man was made whole." This was a miracle of physical healing, but it is not an illustration of the power of the Son of man to forgive sins, and of the instantaneous work of grace on the soul, as in the case of the man who was sick of the palsy, then it is worth nothing only as a piece of history showing the power of Jesus over nature. But that more was intended than the mere healing of disease is evident from what Jesus afterward said to the man when he found him in the temple. "Behold, thou art made whole: sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee." It is possible that some sin against nature might have been responsible for the man's physical condition, but, if so, the forgiveness of the sin accompanied the healing, and the work was as complete in one case as in the other. Then the wholeness which followed the command of Jesus, if this transaction is to be taken as an illustration of the power of grace, is an assurance that when the soul is regenerated, the moral nature is made whole, and at the moment of the new birth. If holiness means moral soundness, this conclusion can not be avoided.

Is holiness an experience or only a moral state? It is both. The state and the experience come together. In the order of thinking this state precedes the experience, but it is hardly compatible with the divine goodness to bring a soul into a state of holiness, and withhold the consciousness of its existence—a consciousness so necessary to the happiness of the soul redeemed from sin.

In saying that holiness is a state of moral purity, imparted the moment we become sons of God, it must not be inferred that perfection, or maturity in grace, is imparted. That would be contrary to nature. It is equally contrary to the law of grace. The dominion of sin is broken, and new-born souls feel that they are sufficiently mature and strong to resist all evil influences. Alas! how sadly mistaken. But we are persuaded that the temptation to sin is often taken for sin itself, and men are led to believe there is no such thing as freedom from sin. The temptation to sin, coming sometimes in one way and sometimes in another, keeps men on the alert, and constantly employed in cultivating grace, and strengthening themselves in the hope of the gospel. By and by, after many struggles and hard fought battles, and exercise of supreme faith in God, the soul enters a higher state of grace, remaining in which, Satan ceases to tempt, and the soul is at rest. We fail to see, however, that exposure to temptation, and the fact of temptation, is an evidence of corruption. In a state of holiness alone can a man resist temptation, and feel that he is complete in Christ.

WHO WILL COME TO THE RESCUE?

We would advise all the gentlemen of a certain town in West Tennessee, who, in the moment of exposition for the nation, not only acknowledged the value with which he was charged, the chief of police and several of the officers had selected one of the most prominent young women of the town for a similar fate. For the sake of our common humanity we hope the report is exaggerated. It is bad enough, and shed blood more than sufficient to know, that on the impulse of the moment one of our innocent women be seized and subjected to shame which she had rather die than suffer; but to be told that they are selected by the half-dozen, and conspired against as the victims of lust, is not only unbearable in thought, but enough to put every man in the community under arms, and on guard, ready to shoot on the least provocation. With an avowed intention of that sort on the part of a set of brutes, black or white, what else but a crusade to the death can be expected?

A conspiracy of that nature reveals a depth of infamy that, under given circumstances, would not stop at outrage, but would lead to murder and burning in order to conceal the crime. Should it prove successful in one place, the women in other towns would likewise fall victims to conspirators. The end no man could foresee.

In the light of such a confession, who is safe? What mother, wife or daughter can walk about the streets, or even remain in their own home alone, and feel secure? What can be done? All the good talk and exemplary life of Booker T. Washington, the lover of his race, and other men of like mind and heart, have failed to make an appreciable impression, save on the comparatively small number that come under their care and influence. This fact helps to make the solution of the social questions involved more difficult.

Where are the Bishops and other leaders of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church? They have, from the very beginning of the existence of their church, set a splendid example as gospel preachers; entirely eschewing politics, and declining to essay the control of elections, etc. Might they not make special efforts to rescue their people from their wickedness and save them from the ravishers's fate? Bishop Lane, a true man of God, and his co-laborers are near neighbors to the town in which the evil conspirators live. They might do good missionary work in that community. They might not save the conspirators, but they could so influence the colored community generally as to restore confidence between the races, and avert further outrage and bloodshed. Something must be done. The sooner it is done, the better. Who will come to the rescue?

WHERE ARE THE MEN?

For years past we have noticed a steady decline in the number of men in our congregations. In some places their absence is alarming, and the inquiry: Where are the men? is in place. This inquiry engaged our thoughts in one of our churches not many months ago. The average number of persons were present, but, exclusive of the preachers, only four grown men were in the house, and less than half a dozen youths. Have our men grown indifferent to the cause of God and the interests of their souls, or are they so steadily employed during the week that they are compelled to rest on Sunday? If the latter, there is a slight excuse. But we are not persuaded that such is the case. There is too great a demand for the Sunday newspapers and the street cars are too well patronized. The absentees in this city are not to be found in much greater number on Sunday on the railroads to favor the week-end trips, nor are they generally engaged in trade nor in other pursuits requiring, but they are studying and planning or it may be, engaged in passing their views. In any case they are not at home resting. The case calls for serious reflection, and wise action on the part of the pastor and his faithful co-laborers. Some cases are past remedying. The church-going habit, when never formed. And we are seeing a generation of boys and girls who are following in their footsteps. Every time we go to church on Sunday morning, no matter where, we meet troops of children going home from Sunday-school. They will never know what it is to attend preaching. They will never learn to love the church.

GOOD LITERATURE DAY.

We hope the brethren of the Louisiana Conference will not think that we intend to be officious in calling attention to the two resolutions of their last session in regard to good literature.

On motion of Dr. C. W. Carter, "the first Sunday in March was appointed as Conference Good Literature Day." The recommendation of the Committee on Church Publications, which was adopted, provided that "each pastor, on some one Sunday during the year, preach a suitable sermon for the occasion, and present the claims of our books and periodicals."

The first Sunday in March has passed. Many brethren, we dare say, were hindered by reason of various things, from observing that day, but the committee's resolution left the selection of the day to the pastor. He is to select "some one Sunday during the year." Naturally, we expect the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to have a large share of consideration on that day. We expect its claims to be fully presented—not because of any merit in the paper itself, but because it is the organ of the Conference, and entitled to a hearing and support.

The paper needs all the help it can get at this time, and is entirely dependent on the preachers. If they do not act as agents and bring it to the attention of the people, but few of them would support it. Perhaps many would never hear of it. This is the way all church papers are supported. Under existing conditions, no other way can be devised.

We appeal to all our preachers, not only in the Louisiana Conference, but throughout the whole of our patronizing territory, to come to the help of the ADVOCATE. You, my brethren, need the ADVOCATE. It needs you, and can not get along without your assistance. Let us help each other!

DEATH OF REV. J. S. OAKLEY.

Rev. J. S. Oakley, a member of the North Mississippi Conference since 1872, passed to his heavenly rest about midday on the seventh of March, at his home in Winona, Miss. This event was not wholly unexpected. He had been long in ill-health, having suffered from a stroke of paralysis, the effect of a fall on the ice a little more than two years since. Several times since the stroke he rallied, and his friends entertained hope of complete recovery. But every attempt to preach injured him, and it became apparent that all hope of restoration was vain.

Bro. Oakley was one of our very best men—a leader in our Israel. He came to us from England when very young, perhaps less than twenty years of age. He was received on trial, and from that day to the day of his affliction he remained true to the trust reposed in him, always ready and willing to serve wherever the authorities thought he ought to work. He filled appointments in his Conference from the lowest to the highest, and no man was more acceptable. He was uniformly successful. The brethren honored him. For many years he was secretary of the Conference, and twice represented the body in the General Conference. For the present we say no more. Other pens will be employed to do him honor. We mingle our tears with those of the bereaved wife and children, and pray the Father in heaven to give them grace and comfort.

PERSONAL.

Rev. E. W. Dodson serves an appreciative people at Algiers, just across the river from New Orleans. He is doing good work among them.

Dr. John Matthews, pastor of McKendree Church, Nashville, who has been sick with the grippe, has recovered sufficiently to resume his work.

Rev. Tom Carter, professor in Tulane University, preached at Parker Memorial Church last Sunday morning. The people were delighted and edified.

The grippe is no respecter of persons. It smacks Bishops as well as common mortals. Bishop Morrison had an attack that kept him in doors several days.

A note from Rev. T. W. Adams, presiding elder of the Natchez district, kindly invites us to attend his District Conference. Providence permitting, we expect to be on hand.

We thank Rev. J. T. Murrah, of Shaw, Miss., for kind words and something more substantial. He is working in the interest of the ADVOCATE. We hope to see him and his good people during the District Conference in May.

In Dr. Black's notice of his night school at Jackson, Miss., he says he made a mistake. The sentence: "To secure a faculty I appealed to the teachers in the graded schools," ought to have read, "to the teachers in the graded schools and a few other persons."

The death of Mrs. C. F. Smith, wife of the pastor of our church at Jacksonville, Texas, occasioned widespread sorrow. She died at Magnolia, Miss., where she was visiting relatives and friends. We greatly sympathize with our brother in his distress.

Rev. E. A. Tucker, pastor of Red Banks, North Mississippi Conference, is happy in his work, and the members of his charge have made valuable improvements in and around the parsonage. The people of his charge are among the very best in Mississippi.

The Central Methodist says: "Bishop Galloway's visit to Louisville was much enjoyed. He preached at Walnut Street, where he was listened to by as many people as could crowd into the church, every chair and even the pulpit steps being pressed into service. His theme was 'Christ the Model Teacher.'"

Prof. G. G. Hurst, principal of Steen's Creek (Miss.) High School, has been elected for another term of three years. Prof. Hurst has done fine work, and has maintained the high standard of the school over which he presides. Prof. Hurst is a true and loyal Methodist. So says his pastor.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney sends the following and note: "Mrs. E. J. Wyse, a life-long and faithful member of our church at Pickens, passed to her reward on the morning of the first instant. She loved her Lord and his church with a devotion that is rare. A suitable memoir will be sent you shortly."

We thank Rev. J. D. Ellis for an invitation to attend the Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Convention at McComb City. We accept the invitation, and will be on hand, Providence permitting. Brother Ellis and his good people are planning to build a new church and a more commodious parsonage at Palmetto Home.

Rev. W. W. Woollard, presiding elder of the Aberdeen district, says: "Rev. J. W. Ramsey, at Fulton, Miss., has made a good start in his work. One of the best Quarterly Conferences I have held was his first." We thank Brother Woollard for two good lists of new subscribers. He is recommending the ADVOCATE to the people of his district.

NOTICE.

The Mississippi Conference Sunday-school Board has decided to offer two prizes (first and second) to the Sunday-school pupils under seventeen years of age who give the best written answers to a set of twenty questions from the Book of Matthew during the session of the Sunday-school Convention at McComb City, March 28-31, 1901.

Prof. J. A. Moore, Rev. B. F. Lewis and Miss Mabel Coker are the Examining Committee.

Let the committee prepare the questions, and let all the scholars who purpose contesting for the prize be on hand during the convention.

ANOTHER CORRECTION.

I notice in the Minutes of the Louisiana Conference that the financial report of the Algiers Church is incorrect. I want to say through the ADVOCATE that everything was paid in full. For education, reads, "Assessed $17.77, paid nothing," and should read, "Assessed $15.38, paid $16.70." I consider this due the good people of Algiers, who not only seemed willing, but anxious that every cent of the assessment be paid.

NOTICE.

Corinth District Missionary Institute and Epworth League Conference will be held at Guntown, March 26 and 27, 1901. The first day is given to Epworth League interests, with an Epworth League rally at night; the second day given to the cause of missions. A good attendance is expected.

NOTICE.

SARDIS DISTRICT.

Owing to the sickness of myself and the preacher, Bro. Graves, the first Quarterly Conference on Tyro circuit failed at Fredonia. The meeting was not a failure. Bro. W. N. Duncan, L. P., from Sardis, and former pastor, was there, and held three profitable services.

If the brethren will meet us at Looxahoma on the thirty-first of March and April 1, we will preach Sunday night and Monday, and hold Quarterly Conference on Monday.

W. S. LAGRONE.

A Correction.

The Minutes in Sunday-school and League Department, Arcadia district, has the following mistake: Gansville circuit has the Calhoun report, while Calhoun is left without any report at all. I know that Gansville has the Calhoun report by reference to stub of statistics. We have one League of 42 members; 3 Sunday-schools of 145 members; $62.85 raised. H. W. LEDBETTER,

LET ALL THE PEOPLE SING.

"O come, let us sing unto the Lord. Sing his praise in the congregation of saints." (Bible.)

"In all our congregations let the people learn to sing, and use our own hymn and tune book." (Methodist Discipline.)

The reason why many do not sing and "learn to sing" is in the want of our own books in the home and in the church. They are the very best for our people, and, as to cost, they are as cheap, and cheaper than the cheapest. The regular wholesale prices are as follows: Hymn and Tune Book, board covers, per dozen, $4.80; Hymn Book, words only, cloth, per dozen, $2.40; Young People's Hymnal, note, per dozen, $3; Young People's Hymnal, word, per dozen, $1.

Now, listen! During the month of March, I will send any of the above at prices named with 10 per cent. off on cash orders, the purchaser paying transportation charges. In ordering books with the music, be sure to state whether round or shape note is wanted. Who will be the first?

AT MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

Under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association of Millsaps College, Bishop Galloway delivered an address, "Young Men as Christian Patriots," at the First Church of Jackson, the evening of March 8. This is the address which was given by Bishop Galloway, on Feb. 22, at Louisville, Ky., during the Y. M. C. A. Convention, and which was widely published and commented upon at the time. It was especially interesting in view of the questions at present agitating the public mind. The discourse was adapted especially to young men, emphasizing the obligations laid upon them by the exigencies of modern life, and it was received with enthusiasm by the exceptionally large number of young men in attendance.

Dr. A. M. Muckenfuss, professor of science, has recently been appointed by the United States Census Bureau to prepare the introductory statement of the forthcoming statistics of the manufactures of Mississippi for the past decade. He reports that the State will show a greater progress for the past decade than during any similar period preceding. This publication will appear in about six months, and may be had on application to the census office.

President W. B. Murrah has accepted the invitation of Tulane University to be present at the inauguration of Dr. E. A. Alderman as president. The induction into office will be accompanied by imposing ceremonies, and representatives of the principal colleges and universities of America will be in attendance.

For the second time Dr. W. C. Black has been obliged to postpone his lecture, "Genesis and Geology," which he promised to the students on March 8. He is suffering at present from severe hoarseness due to a continued cold.

Rev. H. T. Cunningham, pastor at Vaiden, who is a member of our Senior Class, is being congratulated by his friends, the occasion being the addition of a girl baby to his household.

In former years it has been the custom for the Senior Class to take short trips of investigation to various points in the State. This year Dr. Muckenfuss is planning to make geological investigation the chief object of these excursions, and the class will operate in the region about Jackson, within a radius of perhaps fifty miles, and chiefly along the route of the A. and V. railroad.

During his recent visit to Millsaps College Dr. John F. Goucher, president of the Woman's College of Baltimore, manifested much interest in the scientific departments and museums. He expressed a desire to contribute some geological specimens to the collections, and, as a result, the director of the museum at Baltimore has recently sent notification that the gift of specimens will soon be forwarded.

LEARNED, Miss., Feb. 24, 1899.
DEAR SIRS:—I do not want to be without a supply of your Emmett's Colic and Hots Cure as long as I own an animal subject to the above named diseases. Am a farmer, owner and breeder of horses, cows and hogs. I have used the Specific in a good number of cases, and in every instance, found it fully as good as recommended. There is an increasing demand for it here among the farmers. Yours,

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY
Business College of Grenada

This school is still enrolling pupils from every section of the State, and positions are filled with the pupils as soon as they have completed the course.

We make it so pleasant for the students by giving them lines of work that they become perfectly charmed, and never know when enough has been accomplished.

This school will, in the near future, issue an Accountant, a production from the Principal's pen. This will contain many new features in the counting world, whereby many valuable things of Book-keeping may be learned without a teacher. The shortest forms of interest will be given, and many easy principles in mathematics will be fully explained.

At this season the housekeeper must look specially after the baking powder.

As she cannot make good cake with bad eggs, no more can she make cake that is light, delicious and dainty with inferior baking powder.

Royal Baking Powder is indispensable for the preparation of the finest food. It imparts that peculiar lightness, sweetness and flavor noticed in the finest cake, biscuit, doughnuts, crusts, etc., which expert bakers say is unobtainable by the use of any other leavening agent.

There are cheap baking powders, made from alum, but they are exceedingly harmful to health. Their astringent and cauterizing qualities add a dangerous element to food.

WOMAN'S KIDNEYS.

Women as Well as Men Suffer and Are Made Miserable by Kidney and Bladder Troubles.

TO PROVE WHAT SWAMP-ROOT, THE GREAT KIDNEY REMEDY, WILL DO FOR YOU, EVERY READER OF "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE" MAY HAVE A SAMPLE BOTTLE SENT FREE BY MAIL.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root investigated by "CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," none seem to speak higher of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy than the one we publish this week for the benefit of our readers.

Mrs. H. N. Wheeler, of 117 High Rock St., Lynn, Mass., writes on Nov. 2, 1900: "About 18 months ago I had a very severe spell of sickness. I was extremely sick for three weeks, and when I finally was able to leave my bed I was left with excruciating pains in my back. My water at times looked very like coffee. I could pass but little at a time, and then only after suffering great pain. My physical condition was such that I had no strength and was all run down. The doctors said my kidneys were not affected, and while I

Did Not Know I Had Kidney Trouble,

I somehow felt certain that my kidneys were the cause of my trouble. My sister Mrs. C. M. Littlefield of Lynn, advised me to give Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root a trial. I procured a bottle and inside of three days commenced to get relief. I followed up that bottle with another, and at the completion of this one found I was completely cured. My strength returned, and to-day I am as well as ever. My business is that of canvasser, and I am on my feet a great deal of the time, and have to use much energy in getting around. My cure is therefore all the more remarkable, and is exceedingly gratifying to me."

MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

Swamp-Root will do just as much for any housewife whose back is too weak to perform her necessary work, who is always tired and overwrought, who feels that the cares of life are more than she can stand. It is a boon to the weak and ailing.

MRS. H. N. WHEELER.

How to Find Out If You Need Swamp-Root.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs. The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work. So when your kidneys are weak or out of order you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

Many women suffer untold misery because the nature of their disease is not correctly understood. They are led to believe that womb trouble or female weakness of some sort is responsible for the many ills that beset womankind.

Neuralgia, nervousness, headache, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, rheumatism, a dragging pain or dull ache in the back, weakness or bearing down sensation, profuse or scanty supply of urine, with strong odor, frequent desire to pass it night or day, with scalding or burning sensation,—these are all unmistakable signs of kidney and bladder trouble.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are sleeplessness, dizziness, irregular heart, breathlessness, sallow, unhealthy complexion, plenty of ambition, but no strength.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy that science has ever been able to compound.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty cent and one dollar bottles at the drug stores everywhere.

EDITORIAL NOTICE—Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder remedy, is so remarkably successful that a special arrangement has been made by which all our readers who have not already tried it may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail. Also a book telling all about kidney and bladder troubles and containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured by Swamp Root. Be sure and mention reading this generous offer in NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

MISS PRISSY'S PERCEIVINGS.

"All I kin say is, that them that hezn't seen Mandy Willis's quilts hez missed somethin'," remarked Miss Prissy, impressively, as she sorted out her scraps. "Some folks seem to think that patchwork is jest patchwork; but ez I perceived long ago, there's ez much dif'rence in patchwork ez there is in people, ev'ry bit. I've seen dozens of Mandy's quilts, fer she made sech beautiful ones that the Summer boarders used to order 'em, 'nd give her redicklous prices, too, 'nd I never saw one that wuzn't in its way ez pretty ez a picter. She made up the curusest patterns, 'nd sometimes she'd use only two colors in a quilt, 'nd sometimes half a dozen, but each quilt she made looked prettier than the last. That's what she used to say: 'I'm learnin' all the time, Prissy, 'nd you'll see the next one'll be better'n this.'

"The queer thing wuz that it didn't seem to matter much what kind of materials you gave Mandy, either. I sometimes used to think that she took a kind of pleasure in unpromisin' stuff. There wuz a lot of dull brown caliker that she once hed that I couldn't perceive enny place or use fer but the top of the fire. 'Land sake,' I sez, 'burn it up, Mandy, fer that's all it's fit fer.' But she jest laughed, and afterwards she showed me the quilt, 'nd there wuz two other shades of brown in it besides, 'nd a queer green, 'nd plenty of white; it doesn't sound pretty, but it wuz, 'nd the pattern wuz perticklerly handsum, all wavy 'nd graceful. I'd like to hev hed it myself, fer it jest took my fancy.

"Then Mandy did one in blue 'nd white—one of the Summer boarders bought it for a portcere, ez she called it, to hang at a door 'nd keep the drafts out. I've seen quilts used to stop up winder panes when they were broke out in Winter, 'nd that's shif'less enuff; but why city folks can't keep their house doors mended I don't see—but that's neither here nor there. Mandy didn't keer what 'twas wanted fer, ez long ez it pleased the boarder. 'Nd the next one she did wuz all colors, 'Joseph's coat' she called it when she wuz a workin' on it, 'nd if Joseph's coat wuz ez pretty ez that quilt, I don't wonder his brethren wanted it. It hed a sorter in-'nd-out pattern, all soft 'nd bright, 'nd another boarder, that Summer, snapped it up quick, I kin tell you.

"I nuse to think that Mandy's life wuz ez much of a triumph ez her quilts. She wuz crippled, 'nd hed her brother 'nd his wife livin' with her and graspin' fer ev'ry cent she got, 'nd the wife hed an ugly temper. But I never perceived that Mandy let them things worry her. She loved her brother 'nd she loved the children, 'nd if Mis' Willis wore on her, she never let on about it. She wuz allers neat 'nd nice, 'nd cheerful ez a robin, 'nd I never went 'nd sat with Mandy fer five minutes 'thout feelin' it hed done me good.

"There wuz Jedge Woods's wife, jest across the road; she hed ev'rything heart could wish, 'nd yit she wuz allers frettin'. Mis' Woods went on the plan of the old sayin', that where you can't git a large worry, you can make a small one do. She made patchwork quilts, too—not to sell, of course, but jest fer her own beds—'nd I wish you could hev seen 'em! She made a silk one, 'nd bought part of the silk fer it, right new out of the store, but I wouldn't hev hed it in my house fer a gift, 'twas that ugly. Ef Mandy could only hev hed the makin' of it!—but then, Mandy never dreamed of covetin' any one else's materials. She could always do with what she hed.

"I often think of Mandy's patchwork, now she's dead, 'nd wonder if she hedn't oughter be a kind o' parable to the rest of us. The materials of life ain't allers what we'd choose, 'nd yit there's wonderful possibilities in 'em fer everybody. It's the pattern that counts, 'nd the dark colors kin be fitted into the quilt ez well ez the gay ones. A pile of scraps doesn't allers look promisin', 'nd ef a body goes to work in Mis' Woods's fashion, it ain't promisin', either; but Mandy's prettiest quilts wuz made out of jest sech scraps. It's ez easy to try 'nd be Mandy's kind ez it is to be Mis' Woods's kind. Life may be patchwork, but we kin make it beautiful or ugly, fer all that; fer, ez I say, there's ez much dif'rence in patchwork ez in people, 'nd ez fer ez I kin perceive, the dif'rence is made by the people, and ain't in the nature of the patchwork materials," and Miss Prissy pursed her lips shrewdly as she ripped away on a seam.—Helen Ross Laird, in Wellspring.

WHAT LOVE DID.

Two gray-haired men were walking along the street, one of them carrying a bouquet of beautiful and fragrant flowers.

"Wait a minute," said the latter as he stopped before a small cottage and rang the bell. A little girl opened the door. She smiled as she took the flowers. "I know who they're for," she said. "They're for gran'ma."

"Yes," assented the giver, "with my love."

"Well, I do declare!" observed his friend, as they passed on. "You surprise me! I had no idea you went around leaving flowers and your love with old ladies."

"Just with one old lady," laughing. "You see it is this way: When I was a boy, this dear old lady's son and I were chums. We were going away to school. I was an orphan. I left the house, where I had been boarding, with a heavy heart. No one cared that I was going away; no one would miss me.

"I stopped for Dan—that was my chum's name—on my way to the station. As I entered the yard he and his mother were saying good-bye. The hot tears rushed to my eyes as I saw Dan's mother kiss him.

"'Good-bye, my boy; God bless you,' I heard her say.

"No one had kissed me. No one had asked God to bless me. Well, God was not blessing me, I said to myself bitterly, and then my tears vanished. I felt defiant and set my lips hard. Then Dan's mother looked up. She must have read my feelings in my ugly face. 'Good-bye, Davie,' she said, gently, holding out her hands to me. I know my face looked stern and hard. I pretended not to see the outstretched hands, and I wouldn't look into her face. I was turning away without a word of farewell, when she called, oh, so sweetly, I can hear her now, even after all these years: 'Davie, my dear boy, aren't you going to say good-bye to Dannie's mother? Aren't you, Davie?' I turned and took her hands; the loving compassion of her voice had won me from myself and my despair. I held close to her while she kissed me. Then gently loosening my grasp of her hands, she threw her arms about me.

"'Good-bye, Davie,' she said; 'I love you, too, my boy, and may God bless you.'"

The gentleman's lips quivered.

"The world grew bright to me then and there," he continued. "I had something to live for, and I did my best in school and college. Over and over that tender good-bye of Dan's mother rang in my soul. 'Good-bye, Davie; I love you, too, my boy, and may God bless you.' God has blessed me."

"Where is Dan?" asked his friend.

"Dan died six years ago; that is his little girl who came to the door. It was an awful blow to the dear old lady when Dan died, and she has never been strong since that dark day. But she has been so good as to tell me that I bring much sunshine into her life, and I thank God that I am able to do so."—New York Observer.

ONLY A CUP OF TEA.

A group of bright-faced young women were chatting together in the parlor over their afternoon tea when a distant knocking caught the ear of the pretty girl hostess.

"Excuse me a minute, please," she exclaimed, springing to her feet. "I mustn't leave that knock unanswered, for I suspect it is mother's washerwoman bringing home our clean clothes."

The surmise was quite right. Mrs. Knott, the washerwoman, stood at the back door with a heavy willow basket in her arms. She was a slight little woman who always looked too frail for the hard work she was obliged to do. This afternoon her lips were almost colorless and there were dark rings under her eyes. She was almost breathless from her long walk with her heavy burden, and her chest heaved spasmodically.

"Come in and sit down while I get the money," said the girl, sweetly.

She stepped into the adjoining room for her purse, and as she came back the white face of the woman at the door stirred her sympathetic heart to a sudden quick pity.

"How tired you look!" she cried. "Wait and I'll get you a cup of tea."

She had flashed out of sight in an instant, and was back again before Mrs. Knott had recovered from her surprise. On a dainty tray she carried a cup of delicate china from which rose a tempting fragrance.

"Drink this," she said. "I'm sure you'll feel better."

The woman's hardened hand trembled as she took the cup and hastily drank its contents. The warmth seemed to spread through her chilled, exhausted body. Yes, her heart, too, felt the comfortable glow. A minute before she had been worn out, discouraged, hopeless. Now a new courage stirred within her. As she had climbed the steps she had thought how sadly insufficient for her needs the pay for her work would be. Now she thought of the necessities it would purchase for her children, and her face grew bright. She went out into the dusk and dampness of the late afternoon with a step that was no longer hopeless.—Forward.

A FEW REQUISITES.

Every house should have a few requisites, such as pens, ink, paper, envelopes and postage stamps, in some place where everybody can find them without trouble. A pencil and pad should be at hand, so that visitors who wish to leave written messages may do so. A hammer and nails, a gimlet, a screw-driver, a ball of twine, a pair of scissors, and a supply of wrapping paper should be in a convenient place. Thrifty women save the strings with which parcels are tied and the paper in which they are wrapped. A package of old linen, a surgical bandage which comes in a tight roll and may be procured at the druggist's, salve, linseed oil and lime water for burns, camphor, paregoric and quinine should be part of every mother's outfit.

Work in the kitchen is simplified if the supply of pots and pans is sufficient, and if egg-beaters, apple-corers, chopping knives, and other must-haves, are at the housewife's hand.—Exchange.

Indoor gymnastics of the "upside down and violent type," when indulged in to excess, are said to induce various physical ills in after life. In the endeavor to develop one specialized set of muscles, the harmonious balance of the physical forces of the body is destroyed. The athlete, with the arms, shoulders and chest of a Hercules, may have puny legs, an irregular heart, or some other form of weakness. "What the man of to-day needs most," says a recognized authority in the science of physical development, "is not athletics, but plenty of fresh air in his lungs. Instead of violent exercise that weakens him for hours afterward, he needs to learn how to breathe right, stand right and sit right."—Youth's Companion.

MRS. ELIZA COULTER, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Hunt, and wife of J. K. Coulter, was born Jan. 31, 1848, and died at our home near Oakland, Miss., Sept. 8, 1900. Her remains were laid to rest in Oak Hill Cemetery, Water Valley, Miss. As her pastor in 1887, I first became acquainted with her and her devout Christian family. She was ever loyal to her church and thoroughly consecrated to her Lord. She was one of the main factors in erecting and furnishing "Antioch," one of the prettiest country churches I have ever served. She was gentle, pure, and true to every Christian principle; devoted to her family and friends. She talked freely of her departure, admonishing each friend and loved one to live "righteously and godly in this present world." For two days before her death, as she realized she was nearing "the beautiful gates," she had her loved ones sing her favorite hymns, and would join in the songs herself. She leaves a fond husband and two noble daughters, besides many other relatives and a host of friends, to mourn their loss. Her eldest daughter is the wife of Rev. H. T. Gaines, of Iuka, Miss. She lived and died in the faith, and, no doubt, has reached a glorious reward.

O. L. SAVAGE.

W. B. DUROUGH was born in Crawford county, Ga., Aug. 6, 1818, and joined the M. E. Church, South, in his thirteenth year. He was married to Miss Malinda Thornton in 1843. Several children were born to them. After the death of his first wife he married Miss Mary Jane Parker, Aug. 25, 1853. He moved to Alabama, and in 1857 he moved to Mississippi. He kept up his identity in the church. He was a licensed exhorter and a useful man in my protracted meetings. He was a power in the church. He was very feeble for some time; suffered intensely for the last eighteen months, but did not complain. He would praise the Lord all through his sickness. During the last three weeks he spoke often of going home to heaven, and would ask those around him to meet him. He often said he was ready and waiting for his Lord to call for him. He passed calmly away on the sixteenth of February, 1901, leaving his aged wife and dear ones with the consolation that he entered into that rest that awaits the people of God. His funeral and burial services were attended by a large concourse of relatives and friends.

A. F. FOSTER, L. E.

MRS. E. J. BIGHAM was born in Tennessee in 1828. In 1842 her family removed to Mississippi. March 23, 1844, she was married to S. B. Bigham, with whom she lived over fifty-six years, till Aug. 31, 1900, and who still survives her. Five daughters and a son, children of this marriage, also survive. About her fifteenth year she was converted, and for fifty-seven years she was a member of the church and a devoted, pious Christian. She was a lover of the Bible; she read its pages; she sang the songs of Zion; she was a woman of prayer; she was a lover of her church, and its ministers were her honored guests. An industrious housekeeper, her well-kept home was open to her friends, and her hospitality was boundless. She was a faithful, helpful wife, and a devoted mother. The last act of her life was to minister to her suffering daughter. Hers was a life spent in the quiet and unobserved performance of duty. She was a woman of prayer and faith, and her faith made her faithful to every duty in life. Her home, so long blessed by her labors and love, can never be the same. After these years of service she passed to reward from Pontotoc county, Aug. 31, 1900.

N. G. AUGUSTUS.

TRUMAN, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kellam, was born Aug. 11, 1897, and died Jan. 30 1901.

"Truman," as he was affectionately called, was a remarkably bright and loving child. Happy was the home where all day long his busy feet "made music through the halls," and his childish prattle was sweetest melody to the mother's ear. But, alas! the little form, with snowy hands folded over the breast, has been borne to the quiet graveyard. He was sick only two days, and died with congestion of the brain, when the gentle Shepherd wafted him to his heavenly home, where his little brother was at rest, and where he so often spoke of going to play with brother who had preceded him a few years. He will be sadly missed, but God knows best. He is now where there is no more pain, no more sorrow, no more death. May a loving Savior sustain the father and mother in this hour of bereavement!

DELIA GUY.

MRS. MARY SAXON FARMER was born in Mt. Carmel, S. C., July 10, 1842, and died in Buckatunna, Miss., Feb. 2, 1901. She joined the Methodist Church at the age of twelve years. She was married to D. C. Farmer, Dec. 13, 1859. She was the only daughter of Edward and Charlotte Branscomb. The religion of Sister Farmer was manifested in her home and community. She was a faithful, affectionate wife; a devoted, exemplary mother, and a kind, considerate neighbor. While she suffered much during the last years of her life on earth, yet she bore her afflictions with a degree of fortitude, patience and faith that was truly sublime. Those who knew her best were not surprised to see at the close of her pilgrimage that she had the victory over death, and entered, through faith in her precious Savior, the church triumphant. She left her husband, Rev. D. C. Farmer, and four children on this side of the "valley of the shadow of death," who will miss her sadly, but are comforted with the assurance that she is now safe in the heavenly world with the two dear children, who preceded her to the happy spirit land.

J. T. NICHOLSON.

ANDREW, son of Bro. W. C. and Sister Ida Wetherbee, was born Nov. 15, 1885, at Waynesboro, Miss.; was converted and joined the Methodist Church in 1891, and died Sept. 10, 1900.

No unpleasant recollections cling around his memory. A better boy to parents, and, indeed, to everyone, scarce ever lived. He was never guilty of a mean act, and tried to do right in every way. He was gentle, respectful, and kind to all, and had a warm place in the heart of all who knew him. He loved his Sunday-school and church, and was punctual in attendance. Such testimony is borne to his excellent disposition wherever he was known. At Quitman, where his membership was, his death was a grief alike to schoolfellows and teachers, and many are the kind expressions of regret I have heard there. His illness was of short duration, and its termination unexpected, but he trusted Christ for salvation, and none can doubt it is well with the child. That God may sanctify this affliction to the good of the bereaved family is the prayer of their pastor,

A. T. BELL.

MRS. MARY E. ANDERSON (nee Howell) was born in North Carolina, Jan. 1, 1820, and died at the home of her son, J. C. Anderson, near Mt. Olivet Church, in Panola county, Miss., Feb. 6, 1901. She moved to Mississippi in early life and married P. E. Anderson. To them were born four children, three of whom survive her death. Rev. H. D. Howell, of the Mississippi Conference, is her brother. She was a consistent member of the Methodist Church for fifty years. She died of heart disease, living only two and three-fourths hours after she was stricken. As soon as she was taken sick she told her son that her time had come. She died a triumphant death, shouting the praises of God from the time she was stricken to the last moment of her life. Her last words were, "Blessed Jesus!" I thank God for such lives and such deaths as here.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Resolutions on the death of Rev. R. W. BAILEY, adopted by the Quarterly Conference of the First Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss.:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in his all-wise providence, to remove from the walks of men our beloved and honored brother, Rev. R. W. Bailey, our former pastor; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death the church has lost a devout Christian, an able minister, and a faithful pastor.

Resolved, That while we bow with Christian resignation to the will of our Heavenly Father, we can not but deplore his death in the prime of life, and in the midst of a brilliant and useful career.

Resolved, That the memory of his devoted, self-denying ministry will ever abide with us as a benediction and an inspiration.

Resolved, That we extend to his bereaved family our heartiest sympathies, and pray that the richest blessings of our Heavenly Father may ever attend them.

Truthfulness, frankness, disinterestedness and faithfulness are qualities absolutely essential to friendship, and these must be crowned by a sympathy that sets us into all the joys, the sorrows, and the interests of the friend that delights in all his upward progress, and when he stumbles or is ill, assists him out the helping hand, and is tender and patient even when it condemns.—Mary C. Young Women

The entry into womanhood is a critical time for a girl. With her whole being undergoing a change, the seeds of female troubles are sown. Little menstrual disorders, if neglected at the time, will follow the woman all her life and grow into fatal complications. That female troubles are robbing homes and filling graveyards, proves this. Yet, irregular and painful menstruation are often permitted to go on, sapping the life and energy, while Wine of Cardui, the positive relief for these ills, is on the shelf of every drug store. Wine of Cardui helps the maiden sustain the shock of puberty by inducing a painless and natural menstrual flow. When once this important function is started right, a healthy life will usually follow. Wine of Cardui is an emmenagogue of great power, and works wonders in strengthening the delicate and sensitive female organs. Many young women owe their lives to Wine of Cardui. No woman should give up hope until she has given Wine of Cardui a trial. If thousands have secured relief through it, why not you?

WINE OF CARDUI

Tully, Kas., Feb. 24, 1899.

I have suffered untold pain at monetrual periods for a long time; was nervous, had no appetite, and lost interest in everything; in fact was miserable. I have taken four bottles of Wine of Cardui with Black-Draught when needed and to-day I am entirely cured. I cannot express the thanks I feel for what you have done for me.

I am in my seventy-third year, and for fifty years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion, constipation and biliousness. I have tried all the remedies advertised for these diseases, and got no permanent relief. About one year ago, the disease assuming a more severe and dangerous form, I became very weak, and lost flesh rapidly. I commenced using Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir. CIGARETTES.

Every parent should send 10 cents to Dr. J. S. Hill, of Greenville, Texas, and get a copy of his new pamphlet on "Cigarettes, and Other Forms of Tobacco Using." Every boy should read this little book, for the reason if he uses cigarettes, he will stop their use, and if not, he will never commence smoking them. This booklet will be of great value to all whouse tobacco in any form Get it.

Dr. J. S. HILL, DISCOVERER OF ANTINARCOTINE. Medical Director Narcotism Hospital Co. Greenville, Tex.

THIS KNOCKS THE FAKERS OUT.

I TAKE ANY CASE OF Morphine, Opium, Cocaine, or Whiskey Habit, cure them, bear all expenses, and do not require one cent till they have been cured from one to three months. There is no other firm under the sun but ours that can do this. They all want the money before the patient has time to know he, or she, has been cured. We do not need the money till the patient is satisfied.

I am the first man who ever discovered a quick, positive, permanent cure for Whiskey or Drug habits. Since I have discovered and used my treatment others have professed to have it, and even advertise it. They are spurious. My treatment is endorsed by leading physicians, and by pastors of all denominations who know of the cures I have made. IT NEVER FAILS.

My Hospital is in Greenville, in beautifully situated grounds, the building is new, modern, up-to-date. Patients find a comfortable home, with park and beautiful lake for recreation until cured. Those who desire may come and go unknown to any one else.

THE WHISKEY HABIT.

There are many treatments for the whiskey habit. Indeed, you can find them at almost every turn. I am glad to state that I have a cure that has borne the test in the very worst cases in the United States for over six years. I can positively guarantee to cure any case of Whiskey habit inside of ten days that can be found. I have been improving my treatment from time to time, and now have it so perfected that I can cure with no inconvenience to the patient. The patient can eat three square meals a day and sleep like a baby at night while taking my treatment. See my guarantee elsewhere. All patients for this habit are required to be treated at the Hospital.

THE MORPHINE HABIT.

I am aware that this is a very delicate subject; that there are thousands of the best men and women in the land who have unconsciously formed the habit of using morphine. I am sorry to say that, in most cases, physicians are to blame. But no matter how formed—once in the habit the next thing is to cure it. There are thousands of so-called cures; many of them propose "No cure, no pay;" but my observation has taught me that almost all of such really require the patient to pay in advance after getting him into their power. I do not do this—do not have to, as I know I am positively going to cure him. I not only do not want your pay until you are cured, but I do not even require it to be deposited in my name, but the patient deposits it in his own name until he is satisfied of a cure—and I give him three months to know it, if he wants it. But all morphine patients must come to the Hospital for treatment.

THE TOBACCO HABIT.

My treatment for chewing, smoking and snuff-dipping can be sent by mail or express. This is a "home cure" which you can use with directions I send, without coming to the Hospital. Price, $1.00 a box; six boxes (a guaranteed cure) $5.00.

I want to say to every broken-hearted wife, mother, sister or daughter, that "ANTINARCOTINE" will cure any person on earth of the Whiskey or the Morphine habit. I can give you many hundreds of names of those who have written me letters of gratitude for curing them or their loved ones. I get them by almost every mail. The one below is a sample:

ALBA, TEXAS, January 17, 1901.—Texas Christian Advocate: To Whom It May Concern—I was a victim of the whiskey habit over 20 years. No man was ever in a more ruined condition than I was. I went to Dr. J. S. Hill, of Greenville, Texas, in November, 1899 and was quickly and permanently cured. I never suffered any pain during, nor after the treatment. I never have any craving or desire to drink since. D. C. SCARBOROUGH, M. D.

I will be glad to furnish you other names on application.

IT HAS NEVER FAILED

To cure a single one of the two or three thousand cases where it has been tested.

You get cured first—You pay afterward. J. S. HILL, M.D., GREENVILLE, TEX.

HISTORY OF METHODISM.

"A SHORT HISTORY OF METHODISM."
By John W. Boswell, D. D. Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., 60 cents.

This is a work, the like of which should have been written many years ago. Every Methodist, particularly every young Methodist, should know something of the history of the great denomination which, in a single century, has moved to the first place among Protestant bodies. The histories written by the great authors who have made their mark on Methodism are, however, too voluminous for popular reading, and there has long existed a demand for just such a book as this from the pen of Dr. Boswell. In very condensed form it presents all the main facts in the history of Methodism, and gives a bird's-eye view of the growth of that church from the days of Wesley to the present. Whether Dr. Boswell's book will be appreciated as it should, is a question that can not now be answered, but certain it is that the Methodist who fails to place this book in the hands of his family misses a great opportunity.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

We send the above book, with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, one year for two dollars, cash, both to new and old subscribers.

MOSQUITOES.

Mosquitoes will have attention, if not in one way, they will in another. Heretofore they have attracted attention by their music, and their persistent efforts to draw blood. Coming in droves, as they sometimes do, people have been compelled to "bar" them from their presence. They have always been common pests, but until recently they were never suspected of spreading pestilence. Away back in the past it was thought there was some connection between them and malarial diseases—not that the mosquitoes produced the diseases, but that the same conditions which produced one also produced the other. Now it is said that mosquitoes propagate yellow fever. By their bite they communicate the germ that produces the disease. It is not affirmed that this is the only way the fever is produced, but that such is "the most efficient cause of its spread in yellow fever localities." Experiments are now being made at Havana which, it is said, will settle the matter beyond dispute. One who has been engaged in making the experiments says: "Certain apartments are filled with yellow fever filth of all kinds, with a degree of temperature and an amount of moisture exactly similar to the conditions which breed yellow fever. Here animals, and, in some cases, medical men, expose themselves with a view to determining just how far contagion and infection can be spread under the worst possible conditions. In other apartments the best sanitary conditions prevail, except in the presence of mosquitoes, confined in jars and allowed to circulate through the room when an experiment is being made. It has been demonstrated beyond a doubt that these mosquitoes, when once inoculated with the yellow fever germ, communicate it by their bite, the disease developing in from two to three days. In other rooms there is another class of mosquitoes, which, by actual experiment, have failed to convey the disease. In the rooms where yellow fever filth is located individuals have lived for from thirty to fifty days, showing that there is no danger from this cause." It is but right to say in this connection that in the estimation of other scientific men the propagation of yellow fever by mosquitoes is not an established fact.

SAVE THE FORESTS.

Twenty years ago some of the trade journals were printing statistics to show that in five years' time, at the then rate of converting standing pine into lumber in Michigan, the supply of timber would be exhausted. At that time the cut was about 1,000,000,000 feet annually. The cut continued to increase, however, and at the end of the period, at which it was predicted the pine would be exhausted, the cut reached the phenomenal figure of 3,292,189,914 feet. This was for the year 1888. Even this did not exhaust the supply, for the cut ran along in the neighborhood of three thousand millions of feet for several years, thus proving that there was a great deal more timber in the State than had been estimated. The general truth of the prophecy must be accepted, however. If the cut is to be pushed at the top notch, and no effort is made to get a new growth of timber, the time comes at length when there will be no more trees to cut. Michigan provides the object-lesson. Last year's pine output was but 129,921,408 feet. The end is in sight. We of Alabama and Mississippi should profit by this lesson. If Michigan had instituted a department of forestry for the culture of her forests, a goodly supply of timber could be cut annually, and yet the sorests maintained practically intact, and as a source of profit for generations to come. The millmen have made considerable inroads into our Southern pine forests, but not to anything like the extent that has been suffered by Michigan. It is not too late to take the matter in hand and save something for our grandchildren. It is the duty of the State to protect those who are to come after, and not allow them to be utterly despoiled of their heritage. The present generation does not greatly care about it, for the forests will last our time; but the State is a continuing entity. The prosperity of its people is a matter of concern, and it should have an eye to the future, and to the conditions under which its children in the next century are to live.—Mobile Register.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

The telegraph is the marvel of the age. It is wonderful to communicate long distances by wire. It is more wonderful to send messages without wire. The country was startled when a few months since it was reported that a message had actually been transmitted and received without wire. The first experiment was made between points only a few miles apart. Now messages are transmitted between points one hundred miles, or more, distant from each other. The government is making experiments to determine the value of the discovery. Secretary Wilson, of the Agricultural Department, is pushing the experiments along the Virginia and North Carolina coasts. The work is being done under the immediate supervision of Prof. Willis L. Moore, chief of the Weather Bureau. The stations now in operation are at Hatteras and at Roanoke Island, in the Pimlico Sound, N. C. Workmen are beginning the erection of a station at Cape Henry, which will be the third station. When this is finished the two remote stations will be 127 miles apart. The three points now are connected by a government telegraph line, but this line will be abandoned on the completion of the Cape Henry station. If these experiments prove satisfactory, repair stations will be abandoned, which will be an immense saving to the government.

A DISAPPOINTMENT.

It will prove a great disappointment to leading colored men and their friends, who have shown interest in the welfare of the black people of the South, to learn that their only attempt at cotton manufacturing has proved an utter failure. A great deal of money was invested in a mill at Charleston, S. C., to be controlled and operated exclusively by negroes. It has been hinted some time that the experiment was a failure. The labor was not only unreliable, but lacking in skill. The projectors and owners of the mill have abandoned the enterprise. The machinery has been purchased by white men and moved to Gainesville, Ga. This, it is said, "finally closes the experiment of negro labor in the manufacture of cotton goods in the South." But this by no means proves the unfitness of the negro for all lines of manufacturing, or for labor where more or less skill is required. We have seen colored men working side by side with white men laying brick, and they were expert. We have seen them at the carpenter's trade doing as good work as the best. Booker T. Washington is training hundreds of young ones to useful employments. He may succeed in working them successfully in a cotton mill. At present, however, there is no special demand for negroes in the capacity of cotton spinners.

ST. LOUIS LETTER.

BY REV. J. W. CUNNINGHAM.

Since 1874 Centenary Church, in this city, has had four pastors who had served our church in New Orleans. The first was W. V. Tudor, the second John Mathews, third Beverly Carradine, and fourth S. H. Werlein. Dr. Tudor, after an absence from St. Louis of thirteen years, has been here on a week's visit. He came at the suggestion of the present pastor, J. H. Young, and by invitation of the Official Board. On Friday night a reception was given Dr. Tudor in the Sunday-school room of the church, under the management of the Ladies' Guild. The visitor came from a presiding elder's district of Richmond, Va. He had served Centenary Church eight years, St. John's Church two years, and the St. Louis district two years. The reception had been announced in the churches of the district, and was designed specially for a meeting between the visitor and those whom he had known during the days of his sojourn here. Two hundred and fifty, or more, came from different congregations to greet him. He surprised the people by his ability to call the names of those who approached him. After all had the opportunity of speaking to him, and to indulge in a feast of cake and ice cream handed around, Dr. Tudor indulged in some reminiscences of his labors in the city. His face is smoothly shaven and his hair is white. He is said to be seventy-one years old, but does not appear very patriarchal for one who has reached so great an age. I have not heard anyone call him "Old Dr. Tudor" or "Old Bro. Tudor." Dr. Mathews succeeded Tudor at Centenary, and was with Centenary and St. John's eleven years. Long before he was as old as Tudor now is, he was generally called, "The Old Man," "Old Dr. Mathews," and "Old Bro. Mathews." About ten years ago I talked with a woman in a hospital who claimed to be eighty years old. She said she sometimes heard Father Mathews preach, and personally knew him, although she was a Baptist. When I left her she said, "When you see Father Mathews, tell him that you saw me." I mean no disparagement of the ancient pastor of Nashville's principal church, for I confess that I was married when he was a boy; "leastways," he was in his "teens." Several years ago I heard him say to a congregation, "You call me old Dr. Mathews, but I'll bury half of you yet."

Dr. Tudor preached on Sunday morning, March 3, in Centenary to a congregation filling the house, indeed filling the galleries. People were there from different churches in the city and some from the country. On account of this unusual gathering of Methodist saints the communion was the largest I have ever seen in that church. The visitor was in the morning Sunday-school. By a test rising it was ascertained that of four hundred persons present only twenty-five had memory of him. His talk to the school was pleasant. Its three superintendents had been boys under Tudor's pastorate. At night he preached to a full house. Both morning and evening considerable time following the benediction was spent in handshaking between the people and the pastor and presiding elder of former years.

On Monday morning Dr. Tudor indulged in a pleasant talk to the Preachers' Meeting about his ministry in St. Louis, and received a vote of thanks for the same.

On Tuesday the Ladies' Aid, at their regular meeting, dined Dr. Tudor and several of the pastors and their wives.

The visit of Dr. Tudor was one of the most agreeable incidents of his ministerial life. Just the same sort of invitation that brought Dr. Tudor to this city was given to Dr. John Mathews to spend a week in St. Louis. But the "old man eloquent" could not see his way to come. Should he find time to come hereafter, his coming would be attended with like demonstrations. In both invitations the amiable spouses of the preachers were included.

St. Louis, Mo.

STATE PROHIBITION.

BY MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS.

It may be necessary to recall the public mind to the fact that in December last the Mississippi Annual Conference unanimously passed a resolution as a part of the "Report of the Temperance Committee," of which Rev. J. E. Carpenter was chairman, urging the passage of a State prohibitory law in Mississippi, for the reason that "it is believed the only way to hold the counties we have already is to banish whisky from the adjoining counties."

The District Conferences meet in the Spring all over the State, and the friends of this cause are depending upon them to re-echo the voice of that great and wise body of Methodists who have always been ready for the next step in the march of moral problems. The action of the several District Conferences should be some one's special care beforehand, in order that the rush of other business may not leave so important a matter to take its chances.

Mississippi is in as bad a state respecting non-enforcement of law as Kansas. Christian male conscience seems paralyzed in regard to the illegal sale of liquors. "Blind-tigers" are everywhere, and there is an endless procession of jugs from our thirteen "wet" counties into our sixty-two "dry" ones; yet the very men who voted these counties "dry" submit to the nullification of their hard-earned victory, while women are wringing their hands and breaking their hearts over the apparent helplessness of the situation.

State prohibition will at least destroy our interior jug trade, and will diminish the opportunity of the jointist. If what we have in way of law fails to protect, is it not time to substitute something more hopeful? The women of Mississippi turn in this crisis to the Christian people who have already declared their faith in new defenses. Everywhere in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of America there is increased membership and activity. The past year was, perhaps, the most fruitful since its organization. There is also an undertone and a spasmodic energy among the temperance people of all names that indicate a great potential movement awaiting the faith and determination to actualize it. There should be such a tormenting of Christian conscience as will let no man or woman rest under such contempt of law as exists to-day in Mississippi; such a setting aside of the will of the great majority of voters, not to mention the practically solid will of the white women of the State.

It was a manly, heartening word "Gilderoy" spoke recently in these columns for Mrs. Nation. However questionable her methods may be, she has done a splendid deed in arousing the Christian home, the Christian church and the Christian press for enforcement of law. She has done what no man in Kansas seemed brave enough to do: has made the law-breaker respect the law.

The world awaits with intense interest the verdict of the Kansas court as to which has the greater claim to the protection of law—saloon bars and mirrors and fixtures illegally used, or boys and men and homes and mother-hearts illegally used by the illegal sale of illegal drink. But the final word on this subject will not be spoken by the Kansas court, but by that infallible tribunal—the hard common sense of the common people.

Notes on the Twentieth Century Fund in the Mississippi Conference.

A review of the reports made at our Annual Conference shows that the total of our paid and unpaid subscriptions as reported to that date was $15 555.33. Nearly half of this was from First Church, Jackson, and the Yazoo City Church, though most of the subscriptions in those two pastoral charges were still unpaid.

Brookhaven reported the largest amount of cash—$663.75. It consisted mainly of specials for Whitworth College. It was said at Conference that Port Gibson had paid more than this for the Port Gibson school, but it was never officially reported.

Up to the session of Conference, Shubuta and Quitman had paid $301.30—the largest amount of any charge—towards the general, undirected fund. This was more than half of what the whole Meridian district had paid.

In the Seashore district Lumberton and Poplarville charge reported nearly as much as all the remainder of the district. But most of the subscriptions of that charge were still unpaid.

Only one regular circuit of the whole Conference reported as many dollars as it had members, and $85.75 of its subscriptions were still unpaid.

Other charges that deserve mention as having done well in the comparison thus far are: Sharon, Silver Creek, Vaughan's, Bolton, Utica, Magnolia, McComb City, Summit, Crystal Springs, Roxie, Gloster, Woodville; but in all these places the work is unfinished.

Hattiesburg, Central—Meridian—and Crawford Street, Vicksburg, have done something, but hardly a speck compared with their ability. And, whilst Magnolia is mentioned among those that have done well, yet their report shows that the liberality of the Magnolia members does not equal their prosperity, or else that they have failed to appreciate the importance of this movement.

As soon as Brandon has paid the subscriptions that were enrolled there in 1899, that charge can easily take rank among those that have done the best in this matter.

Jefferson Street, Natchez, and some other places have postponed attending to this cause altogether until 1901, and it is hoped that they all will be heard from soon.

We have many Methodists in the southern half of Mississippi, each of whom gained more last year than was raised throughout the whole Mississippi Conference for this noble cause. Their plea, generally, is that they are "tearing down their old barns to build greater," and that, therefore, they can not attend to this now. Oh, for power in the pulpit everywhere to cause our prosperous citizens to understand the things that are for their peace!

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Bishop Thoburn will preach the opening sermon at the General Missionary Conference, to be convened in New Orleans the last of next month.

Bishop Morrison will preach the commencement sermon for Logan Female College on Sunday, June 2, and Dr. J. H. Pritchett will deliver the literary address, Tuesday, June 4.

We call the special attention of all who are interested in typewriters, and desire to purchase, to the short advertisement of Pastor J. W. B., at Brookside, Ala. Write to him and ask what he has to offer you. He may be able to supply just what you need.

Dr. W. K. Piner is arranging for extensive dedicatory exercises for his new church at Bowling Green. Drs. Hoss, Tillett, Barbee and Massick are among those who will preach on the occasion. The exercises will embrace two Sabbaths, the first and second in June, with the intervening week.

The city authorities of Bello Horizonte, the capital of the great State of Minas, Brazil, have presented our missionaries with an entire square, with the proviso that we build a church and residence upon it within the next four years. We require at least $6,000 for this purpose, and hope that it will be forthcoming.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

Our brethren of the M. E. Church, especially in the East, are stirring the question of the removal of the time limit to the pastorate. It appears that the claim is now set up, that it was the radical element that did it, and that it was done without previous agitation. These points are well taken, and if we mistake not, this quadrennium will witness a full discussion of the whole matter, and a revolution may come.—Central Methodist.

The visible results of the Louisville Walnut Street revival were very encouraging. At least one hundred were either converted or reclaimed, and the number joining the church by profession and certificate during the meeting will reach fifty, or more, while several who were converted will become members of other churches. In many respects the meeting bore the type of an old-time revival meeting.

The Richmond and Baltimore Christian Advocates, which, for several years past, have been printed on the same press, and were practically one except in name and editorial matter, have now consolidated, and the one paper is the organ of the Virginia and Baltimore Conferences. Dr. J. J. Lafferty and Dr. S. K. Cox are editors, with Rev. H. M. Hope, associate and business manager. We wish the enterprise under the new arrangement abundant success.

The New Century Education, reporting the Twentieth Century Fund for February, says: "Our returns for this month are unsatisfactory. Only a few secretaries have reported, and yet we have reason to believe that others are making an effort to get complete statistics in their various Conferences. By next month we hope to have a full report. The returns for February show an increase in the fund of only $2,015.08. The East Texas shows an increase of $2,365.08, the Mississippi of $5,500, and Korea of $150, while the Louisville, through a mistake in former reports, shows a decrease of $6,000. The present status of the fund is $1,432,540.71, leaving $67,459.29 still to be provided for."

Wm. Our Editor Says.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY FUND.

The Twentieth Century Fund offering should interest us more than all the past. In some places very little has been done, and the men or the pastors have not in the whole work to do it either case the work ought to be at once entered upon. It is not so far in the summer, when many of our people will go away on their annual vacations. Our time return is limited, when demands will be urgent. Therefore, these Winter and Spring months should be utilized to the uttermost. At least the subscriptions should be secured. Collections could come later. If the plan of an offering from every Methodist—or even from the most of them—is to be realized (and this ought to be) pastors and their committees must come to hand-to-hand work. Offerings may be begun in meetings of the congregations; they can only be completed by calls upon individuals. It is that way in the collections our people are trained to make every year; it must be so in this great special thank-offering. Brethren, begin this week. It is a duty—and you will, we are sure, to do your duty. When this year ends let it find you able to say, "I have done my duty in reference to the Twentieth Century Revival and the Twentieth Century Thank-offering."—Southern Christian Advocate.

WINNING SOULS.

The Book declares that "he that winneth souls is wise." Wise because it is the most important and the most enduring of all work, and wise because only by wisdom, heavenly wisdom, can souls be won. Beside the winning of the soul and the wisdom needed to win it put down the oldest and equally important fact that the only business of Christians on this earth is to win souls for Christ, and you have a trinity of truths of such tremendous moment as to fill with awe every thoughtful person who really wants to make life yield a full return for God. There are declared to be five ways or means through which we may win souls. They are by the life, as good examples; by the lip, that is, testimony or personal work with others; by service, or doing good to others; by prayer and by money. Then here are five open avenues, along some of which every single Christian in the world may walk in an effort to win others for Christ. A few there are who can make use of all these agencies, nearly every one can use at least four of them to some extent, and not one so poorly equipped but can use one—prayer. How many are you using? Are you winning souls?—Central Methodist.

THE SCIENTISTS' REWARD.

The scientific investigation in the field of philanthropic research merits genuine public consideration. Wellington received two millions, with stars, ribbons, decorations and a dukedom for adding a dozen armies in defeating Napoleon. Bye the bye, Dr. Adam Clarke and Lord Palmerston, good judges, rated Wellington as a dull man of mediocre parts, but a lucky person. What honors ought to come to the discoverer of chloroform—annihilating pain! Or the discoverer of the antidote (serum) to hydrophobia. The Twentieth Century will garnish and reward the scientists who jeopardize life to save life. The salve of the conqueror of a Plague will rest upon a brow as white and serene as that of the fairest lady in the land. Let the world of the future see to it that the best of its many honors are bestowed upon those who, with their patient and unselfish toil, have made it possible for it to live in health and happiness.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A GOOD POINT.

The responsibility of collecting the salaries of our pastors in localities where they have committed to the care of the pastors at home. As pastors in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, we can not evade this sacred responsibility. Would we desire to shift so holy a responsibility even if we could? We may interest the services of others in collecting the money from the membership of the church, but the duty remains ours to see that every dollar of it is paid. How often do we, as pastors, feel that the shortage in our salaries could have been collected if our stewards had been more diligent and faithful. Is it ever true of us that the shortage in the salaries of our missionary pastors might have been secured if we had been more diligent and faithful stewards? "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."—Alabama Christian Advocate.

OUR BIBLE.

The Bible we need is a Bible that magnifies the soul above the body, the law of God above human desire, spiritual religion above selfish enjoyments, eternity above the present moment, truth and right above persons and majorities, and makes sin worse than suffering—a Bible that holds up sin as the greatest evil in the universe; and such is the Bible we have.—Florida Christian Advocate.

DEFECTIVE METHODS.

The very methods that have so largely characterized the evangelistic efforts of the church during recent decades indicate a consciousness of lack of vital power. What other meaning may we reasonably attach to the disgusting exhibitions of sensationalism in the pulpit and of vulgar charlatanism in the conduct of so-called revivals to which we have been treated at

PROMPT PAYMENTS.

The preacher is certainly not exempt from the demand of equity. There are not many more ready to unnecessary reputation and consequent limitation of influence than the making of accounts here and there and yonder without a speedy settlement of the same. The borrowing of money from leading laymen is not a good symptom, and when it becomes frequent and pronounced the disease has reached a dangerous stage. To most temporary assistance is not dishonest, of course, but the habitual borrower is a handicapped man. And if he is in a prompt-pay and economic about paying back, his usefulness will soon be as dead as the proverbial doornail. If the supplicant is a layman and the supplicated a preacher, then surely the rule does not vanish in a vapor. Far be it from us to say a hurtful thing of those who are embarrassed by financial burdens. We have had to go in debt, and to borrow money; we can sympathize keenly with the oppressed. But it is worth much to look the world in the face and to know that every obligation has been met.—Midland Methodist.

ACCORDING TO YOUR FAITH.

According to your faith be it unto you. This does not mean that success however desirable and lucrative will in any sense of the word attend a blind or unreasoning faith. Intelligent faith has truth for its foundation. The truth and the promise run in parallel lines. We believe because the Word underlies our faith. Whatever the Word says is possible for faith to accomplish. If anything is not the child of truth and faith, but of error and imagination. There is no failure to the man who has faith and works with God. All things in the divine life are possible to him. It is the faith that overcometh the world.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

REV. JOSEPH SYKES OAKLEY.

BY REV. T. W. LEWIS.

Of all the members of the North Mississippi Conference who have been conspicuous in giving successful service to the church during the past quarter of a century, no name stands higher than that of Joseph Sykes Oakley. Coming to us from the Wesleyan Methodist Church, England, in 1872 when just twenty years of age, he soon took high rank among us as a preacher of great acceptability. He was born at Sheffield, England, Nov. 1, 1852, was converted under the preaching of a local preacher in the seventeenth year of his age, and immediately began to exhort the people to repent and believe the gospel. His parents, Charles and Margaret Oakley, took him to Sunday-school when he was only four years old, and trained him up in the doctrine and admonition of the Lord. Under their supervision he memorized many texts of Scripture which he quoted on appropriate occasions.

He was granted license to preach June, 1871, and in September, 1872, he was granted full authority to preach as a local preacher. Seven days after this he left the shores of his native land and came to America, and at the Conference, in 1872, he was admitted on trial. In 1876 he was received into full connection and ordained deacon by Bishop Doggett, and in 1878 he was ordained elder by Bishop Pierce. Dec. 11, 1872, he was married to Miss Ella J. Harrison, who lived at Pocahontas, Tenn., the ceremony being performed by Dr. J. D. Cameron. Let us notice, first:

His home life was beautiful. The penetrating wife learned to save him from every care that he might devote himself entirely to his work. His devotion to his wife and his fondness for his children were admirable traits in his character. They leaned on him for support, and he on them for love, and one scarcely sees a happier household than it enjoyed. When we stood at his grave the tears came to many eyes as the weeping widow and fatherless children saw him put away, their stay and support in the years gone by.

Again: Brother Oakley was a man of charming personality. He was fine looking; his dark eyes beamed on his friends; his large frame and high forehead presented a picture of majestic power, and his voice had a peculiar sweetness that charmed the ear and held the attention. His memory retained the faces and names of his friends in a remarkable way, and his conversation sparkled with many a pleasant reminiscence and glowed with many a witty quotation. He was at home in the field of letters, and hence was the center of attraction in many a circle. His charming personality drew friends from all classes, for he knew men, and was equally at home with the poor in his cabin on the prairie, and with the rich in his mansion in the city. His sunny nature brightened all that it touched, and blessed all that came within the reach of its magnetic power. He was pre-eminently successful as a pastor. He believed in work in system, and as the pastor of a large circuit he so organized a great deal of it. Being fond of men, having a warm sympathetic heart, he was easily the best pastor of the people. The young men found him a trusted friend, and the old men a safe adviser. He was in every conference never-ceasing in his efforts to bring sinners to Christ, everybody's friend loved by all.

As a preacher Brother Oakley stood easily among the best. He did not care like Mahaney to be served on a silver tray, but he served the people his Lord, that were true with thought and power. Every sermon from the matter of careful preparation, and were masterpieces of splendid thought and eloquent diction. His familiarity with the standard authors of poetry, fiction and history enabled him to embellish his sermons with the choicest sayings of the great masters. When he preached his people were edified, strangers were charmed, and the cause of God built up. Never dealing in slang or commonness of any kind in the pulpit, he was regarded as an ideal preacher. His career in the Conference covered every grade of appointment. Beginning with Jonesboro circuit in 1872, and ending with Durant district in 1896, his active ministry embraced a period of twenty-six years—a life of rare usefulness and of great accomplishing. Among the other charges he served are Black Hawk, Carrollton and Greenwood, Starkville, Water Valley, Columbus, Greenville, and Holly Springs.

For nine years he served as secretary of our Conference. He was twice elected a delegate to the General Conference, and at Baltimore he served as secretary of the Committee on Itineracy.

For nearly two years he was unable to do much work, and was placed on the superannuated list.

At high noon, Tuesday, March 7, 1901, in the city of Winona, Miss., surrounded by his wife and six children and a few faithful friends, he passed away.

On Friday his funeral was conducted by Dr. J. D. Cameron, assisted by a number of his ministerial brethren. He is gone, but not forever. We shall see him again.

"There let me join my friends above
That have obtained the prize
And on the eagle wings of love
To joys celestial rise."

THE FUNERAL.

At 2 p. m., Friday, March 8 1901, in the Methodist Church, Winona, Miss., in the presence of a fairly large congregation, the funeral services of Rev. Joseph S. Oakley were held. Dr. J. D. Cameron conducted the service. He had performed the ceremony when Bro and Sister Oakley were married, had baptized all their children, and was his close friend for twenty-five years. He met the remains at the door, and read the burial service, "I am the resurrection and the life," etc. The choir sang softly, "Asleep in Jesus." The congregation then joined in singing, "Nearer, my God, to Thee." T. W. Lewis read the 90th Psalm. Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan read the selections from First Corinthians, and W. M. McIntosh led in prayer. The choir then sang, "The Beautiful Gate." Dr. Cameron took for his text Paul's famous words, "I am now ready to be offered," etc. At the grave T. H. Ramsey read the closing lesson, and J. W. Ball offered the prayer and pronounced the benediction.

T. W. LEWIS

A SWEET-TEMPERED LETTER.

MR. EDITOR: Will you suffer a word from one who, at least in the eyes of his brethren, is an old man? There are two important periods in a minister's life. First, when he enters the ministry, young, buoyant and hopeful, with the thought of cheering society and saving souls from death. The second is the time when his brethren say he is no longer able to do the work of a minister and must be laid on the shelf. But it has come to pass with this writer. At the last session of the Annual Conference of North Mississippi, without warning, I was placed on the superannuated list. Forty-three years I have spent in preparation for and in the traveling connection without a break or complaint; have done the work assigned to the best of my ability. I had thought the time would never come when I must ask for a place to rest, but did not dream it was so near when I would be put on the list. I see that one of the brethren said to me to-day: "I am sorry you are superannuated." I was with an humble "Better I put me by doing for a rainy day?" It is always some one's rainy day" to minister of the gospel, more rather than most other people. For a preacher of small salary to look for the various calls from the poor and needy, for parsonage missions, education and other enterprises of the church, is to try to money for immediate emergency impossible. I would not therefore advise young preachers to stop their ears to urgent, even pure-stringed appeals; any of these no other calls of mercy. Nay, verily, heed them all the rule of crossing the dead line as this writer did, without a dollar and not a penny to spare with which to buy one.

I have tried to lay up some treasure in heaven, and I see that not a blessing on divers, several or that depend in the kindness of many friends here and elsewhere. So soon as my superannuation was known the kind people of Yazoo took steps to secure a home, and wrote me to come and live among them. May the blessings of our God rest upon all the people who had a hand in this deed of mercy. Acting upon the generous invitation, we came, and are domiciled in a comfortable little home, which will be our own as soon as the good ladies having the matter in hand shall have secured the widow of the purchase money.

Life changes in the beginning of old age. My one thought and aim has ever been the good of the church. No time for anything but work, work. Now my life must be changed to suit the new conditions; something must be done to support those dependent upon me. It is hard to bend at old tree, but it must bend to other pursuits. The years are gone, and I pray God to accept and bless the money and the labor that I have been able to use to benefit others and make the rising generation far surpass even the best of this.

Respectfully J. F. EVANS.

Yazoo, Miss.

INCONSISTENCY.

BY INQUIRER.

MR. EDITOR: I have been reared in the Methodist Church, have sought ever to be loyal to her authorities, but there are some inconsistencies in the practical application of Paragraph 129 in our Discipline.

We have in the field certain evangelists who are local preachers or traveling preachers, whose characters are passed by the Annual or Quarterly Conferences to which they belong. To say the least of it this indicates that they are blameless in their lives and loyal to the church. Some of our preachers can invite these evangelists to assist them in their meetings where the presiding elder thinks the preachers have sense enough to manage their own work, and no objections are entered. In other instances the presiding elder says, "You can't have that man in my district," although he can go into the Nashville district or any other district, and our churches are open to him.

Now, it seems to me if that evangelist has violated any law of our church, or professed to believe and teaches that which is contrary to the doctrines of our church, his character ought to be arrested; otherwise he goes with the approval of our authorities, and any preacher ought to have the right to call in one of these brethren, when he so desires, to assist him in a meeting.

I notice Dr. Carradine, for instance, has access to the pulpits of our Northern Methodists, and while his character as a Methodist preacher is approved by his Quarterly Conference, yet thousands of our pulpits are closed against him.

Mr. Editor, I am not a "second-blessing" man, yet I have a great many friends who are, and I find myself unable to give a satisfactory reason to them for our inconsistency in administration. INQUIRER.

THE MUSTARD PLASTER.

The drawing power of mustard when applied to the anatomy is known to all, and distinctly remembered by all who have had experience with it. Its power to improve the attendance at Sunday-school is another story.

In a certain town within the patronizing territory of this ADVOCATE on a recent Sunday the superintendent was late—an unusual thing for him. In opening the school he said: "I am not much given to making excuse but I see that one of the teachers is absent to-day. I am late this morning not because I was not up in time for I was up at six o'clock and had the privilege with me at the same hour. I am late now and if it be under the disadvantage of various and sundry aspects and a—mustard plaster." A young lady who earns her living by daily toil and is sometimes hindered to "rest" on Sunday, was present on this occasion by the urgent solicitation of a godly lady teacher. She said to the teacher, "If the superintendent can come under such discipline I shall never again let trivial excuses keep me away." This demonstrates that with a little effort, just a little, the attendance on all church meetings could be easily doubled.

March 28, to secure special rates given by railroads, must purchase regular one-way ticket to Natchez, and at the time of purchasing ticket procure from agent certificate that full fare has been paid. These certificates, signed by Conference secretary, will secure special tickets for return passage at one-third fare.

All expecting to attend should send their names promptly to Miss Florence Kerr, Natchez, Miss. Let Friday, the twenty-second, be set apart as a day of fasting and prayer. Pray for an outpouring of God's Holy Spirit upon the work and workers. MRS CLARA H. COPE, Conf. Cor. Sec.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society, at Ruston, has been changed to April 4-7, and promises to be one of unusual interest.

Miss Belle H. Bennett, of Kentucky, president of the society, is expected to be present, and all who can do so should avail themselves of the privilege of hearing her talk about the work. She is a highly-cultured and wholly-consecrated Christian woman, and her life is devoted to the upbuilding of this branch of the work of the church.

Let every auxiliary in the Conference elect delegates at once, and notify Mrs. W. K. Duncan, of Ruston. A cordial welcome is also extended to visitors.

The railroads have agreed to give a rate of one and one-third fare on the certificate plan, provided there are fifty in attendance.

All delegates and visitors must be careful, when purchasing their ticket, to ask for "a standard form certificate" from the agent, as it constitutes a receipt for the full fare paid going, and when signed by the secretary of the meeting, and vised by the special agent at Ruston, it is available for the one-third fare rate returning. If this is not done, there will be no reduction.

Rev. J. R. Moore, of Monroe, will preach the annual sermon.

Dear sisters, let each one of us, with a deep sense of personal responsibility, make this ninth annual meeting a grand success by our prayers and presence.

Let each auxiliary in the Louisiana Conference be represented, and their work reported, and may this coming annual session prove a season of great spiritual uplift to the workers, and a great move forward all along the line! MRS. E. R. KENNEDY,
Rec. Sec.

FROM DR. R. S. TRIPPETT.

MR. EDITOR: I take the liberty of making a short extract from a letter just received from Bro. Trippett, of Doncaster, Yorkshire, England. He's many friends in Louisiana will be glad to hear from him.

JOHN T. SAWYER.

"I thank you very kindly for the interest you take in my welfare, and I am also laid under meny obligations to the Conference for their kindnese to me; bnt God is good, and in my old age and weakness he still snpplies me with temporal and spiritual blessing. The different branches of the Nonconformist Churches of Great Britain are holding a simnitaneous mission throughont the entire country. It commenced in London the week of the Queen's death, and all the Free Churches and chapels were crowded, and a great amonnt of good was accomplished. It is now being carried on in the provincee, and continnes to prosper. The mission had thoronghly taken hold of the ohurobes, and great success had crowned their efforts. The church members have been quickened, pentecostal displays of the Spirit of God have been realized, and many precious souls have been saved. And the work still continnes. To God be all the glory. I see to-morrow you are to be with Bro. Randle at Davis Springs. I wonld like to be with you. I attended a camp meeting there some years ago. We had a fine time. And you have my old and fast friend and brother, R. J. Harp, and his family, with you. God bless them all. Oh, how I would like to meet with you all here again on earth! It may not be, bnt, thank God! we shall have a glorious meeting up yonder. I am very feeble, tronbled with shortness of breath, not able to walk much, though I get ont in fine weather a little. My preaching days are over, bnt my prospects for eternity brighten every day, and Christ is very precious to me. Give my regards to old friends whom you meet on your district."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

LAKE ARTHUR, LA.

We arrived at the parsonage in Lake Arthur, La., Dec. 28. Although the weather was very disagreeable, we found some of the good ladies at the parsonage, who had prepared a nice, warm dinner for ns, and we were ready to do justice to the dinner. The people here gave us a kind reception, and the brethren made a liberal assessment for the pastor's support, and are paying as we go thus far.

Our congregations are growing some at Lacasine, and are very good at Lake Arthur. I believe the spiritual condition of the Lacasine Church will compare favorably with any congregation with which I have been privileged to worship. The Lake Arthur Church, although right near the camp ground owned and managed by the Louisiana Holiness Association, is far from a satisfactory state, spiritually, and yet there are some true, devout souls here who are praying and laboring for a much-needed revival.

We have been able to put $100 additional improvement on the parsonage begun by my predecessor, Bro. Blocker. The house, a two-story, eight-room building, is now quite comfortable. The Ladies' Mite Society has raised $30 for a cistern, which will be very much appreciated by myself and some other itinerant (after my four years expire). We hope to begin a meeting March 17 in Lake Arthur; assisted the first week by Bro. Tucker, of Lake Charles. There are some indications for success.

tainly a fine showing when we consider the fact that the Methodists have a very limited congregation in point of numbers, but it is evidently very large in point of devotion to their church. It must be a source of gratification to Dr. Parker to see the healthy financial status of his church here in Marksville, and we know he feels justly proud of it.

"On Sunday morning Dr. Parker preached to a large congregation. His whole sermon was a love-feast. In point of doctrine, it was sound, logical and practical. In oratory, it was forceful and convincing. His evening service was also largely attended, and while his morning sermon was truly grand, his evening discourse was grander. The able divine held his congregation in mute attention from beginning to end. Every word that fell from the lips of the 'grand old man' received an appreciative echo from the hearts of his hearers."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

SOUTH SIDE AND POPLAR SPRINGS.

DEAR BRO. BOSWELL: A short note from South Side and Poplar Springs would not be out of place just at this time, and, I think, will be cheering to God's people, especially those who have labored here for him. We fully made up our mind before leaving for Conference that if the Lord sent us back, that we would begin at once to work up a parsonage. So while at home after Conference I gathered up my old carpenter tools (for I did some carpentering before entering the ministry), and as soon as I got back to South Side, I began to talk about a parsonage. Some said, Yea; some said, Nay; and others shook their heads and said, "It could not be done." But we went into it by the help of Him who knows no failure, and now, after two months of walking, talking, praying and preaching, we find ourselves in possession of a beautiful lot one block from the church and building material being put thereon. Work will begin on the building in a week or ten days, and in a month or two we expect to be domiciled in the most pleasant manner this side of heaven for a Methodist preacher—in a comfortable, cozy parsonage. We have had seven accessions since Conference—three on profession of faith. We expect to hold a revival the latter part of this month.

Our League is doing good work. The Literary Department deserves special mention. It has arranged for a series of five lectures for the Winter and Spring. Rev. J. M. Weems, pastor Central Church, gave the first on Friday night, first instant; his subject being, "The Men and Women of the Future," and every one who heard it pronounced it very fine.

Our church at Poplar Springs is among the best in the Conference for its size. We expect to finish it this year. God bless the ADVOCATE and its editor.

L. F. ALFORD.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

REVIVAL AT GOODMAN.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: We have just experienced a gracious revival at Goodman, one of the churches on the Pickens circuit. Not less than 25 professed faith in Christ, besides many lukewarm and worldly church members pledged anew to live closer to God. Bro. W. M. McIntosh preached for us ten days. I know of no other man among us that God seems to honor more in the conversion of souls. The fact that he can lay aside college work, and go into a meeting and have success in leading souls to Christ, shows that he is under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. He refutes the idea in his life, that it is the part of a college president's equipment to be as dry as a bone. Whatever else we do well, we ought to be soul-winners.

Bro. Nesbitt, one of the seniors from Millsaps College, led the choir for us two days. He is fine help in a meeting, and is as gifted in song as he is tactful in getting others to sing the sweet songs of Zion. It is my desire to lead at least a hundred souls to Christ during the year, and put a church paper in every Methodist home; and to Christ be all the praise.

R. H. B. GLADNEY.

Pickens, Miss., March 8, 1901.

HERNANDO CHARGE.

We have been most kindly received here in every respect. Have been pounded repeatedly and abundantly insomuch that three months have not consumed the last of the good things given us. The co-operation of this people has been exceptional; never saw or had better. They rented and furnished a preacher's home, and set to work and built a nice, neat, elegant parsonage, and we are now living in it. The good women are still adding articles of comfort in the way of furniture, matting, etc. Congregations have been splendid all the while; on some occasions extraordinary. We hope to do much good here this year.

BEN P. JACO, P. C.

MARIETTA CIRCUIT.

DEAR DR. BOSWELL: I am now on my fourth round on the Marietta circuit. I have preached twenty-seven times; held prayer meetings and visited quite a number of homes. We have had our first Quarterly Conference with fine interest and good report. Our presiding elder, W. M. Young, was with us, and did us some good work. We think we have as good a presiding elder as any in the Conference. The opportunities here are very great. The fields are surely "white unto harvest." We are hoping and praying for a great year. Our prayer meetings and Sabbath schools are starting well. We hope to send some new subscribers to the ADVOCATE soon.

Your brother in the work,

J. D. SIMPSON.

RED BANKS CHARGE.

Rev. E. A. Tucker, pastor at Red Banks, sends the following interesting note: "I am highly pleased with my charge. My people have re-papered my parsonage, also have built a new fence around it, as well as added many other improvements and conveniences since Conference. They have paid nearly one-fourth of assessment for preacher in charge and presiding elder. Have sent off a part of my Conference collections. Everything on up-grade. The District Conference convenes at Victoria this year. The editor has a pressing and cordial invitation to be with us."

COCKRUM CIRCUIT.

Rev. G. H. Jacobs, Cockrum, Miss., says: "I am well pleased with my charge. A good people and a fine field for work. I have been kept indoors for six weeks, but hope to get out in the near future. The ADVOCATE is growing in favor with those who are taking it. May the Lord bless you in your work."

DR. PIERCE'S Favorite Prescription

"I am so grateful to you for your advice," says Mrs. Sidney B. Oakes, of Whitmell, Pittsylvania Co., Va. "When I commenced your medicines I had been treated by different doctors for three months or more, but would only receive partial relief for a short while and then would be worse than before. Was confined to my bed most of the time. At the time I commenced your treatment my left side was completely paralyzed. Had no desire to eat anything; bowels costive all the time. Nerves were all unstrung, so I could not bear the least noise. I also suffered from diseased ovaries and female weakness. But thanks to my Maker and you, after following your advice, I am able to do all my washing, sewing and house work in general. I haven't had a spasm in two months. Left off medicines about one month ago. Didn't think it necessary to continue them longer. I have taken about seven bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, seven of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and two vials of 'Pleasant Pellets.' I heartily recommend those medicines to all suffering as I was."

BRIEF OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of two hundred words, or less, we print free of charge. For every word over two hundred we charge one cent a word. No friend who sends an obituary likes to see it shortened. But the editor, for self-defense, is obliged to set these down in every case. To avoid this, let those who write confine themselves to the limit. If it is desired to have a longer one, then cancel and send with the obituary one cent a word for all over two hundred. The easiest way is to send the postage change. This will save time and trouble. The rule will not be applied to obituaries of preachers, or preachers' wives or widows. Neither poetry nor poetical tributes will be inserted.

Some editors who are masters of simple English now and then say funny things in dead earnest. As an example take the following from one of our city contemporaries, who does not like Mrs. Carrie Nation and her way of smashing saloons in Kansas: "If everyone was to rise up and go out on the war-path and destroy the cause of the effect, what would be the result?" Mark Twain was not any funnier, nor half so much in earnest, when he eulogized the present government of New York City.

Once upon a time we attended a revival led by a young preacher who was much of a study. It was before any young preacher of to-day was born. He preached and called for penitents. Among the number was a gentleman of wealth and culture. The preacher seemed to be elated. He soon called the congregation to prayer, in which he took the lead. He told the Lord all about the gentleman, his wealth, education, good qualities, etc. Altogether, his talk to the Lord was well adapted to make the man believe that he was too good to need repentance. We hope no young preacher of to-day is thus lacking in common sense.

In the face of the instructions of our Book of Discipline, and the promise of every Methodist preacher to "keep our rules, not mend them," it is strange that any set of godly and sensible preachers will, in a formal way, provide for the waste of an hour in discussing "How to Secure Uniformity in the Use of the Form of Service," which is so plainly prescribed. There is no reason for any man with intelligence enough to understand simple English to ask how the order is to be followed. The law is as specific as any in the book, and just as binding. We wonder if those who advertised that discussion intended to make public their own lawlessness, or had learned that preachers in other sections are violating the order, and are desirous of bringing them to rights. When they have learned how to conduct worship according to the Discipline, and actually follow the order, we hope to hear further from them.

FEEDING ON WIND.

"Ephraim feedeth on wind." He confesses enjoyed it for he could not live on wind alone. Neither can men to-day. If life is to be sustained and enjoyed, food must be nourishing as well as pleasant to the taste. A change in diet is sometimes desirable if not necessary, but caution should be observed, especially in feeding the delicate lest harm ensue. All this is true as to the physical man. It is equally true as to the spiritual. Those charged with the selection of the diet and its proper distribution can not be too careful. There is danger.

Some preachers seem to have an idea that all that is necessary is to get the people together. That done, whatever else may be offered will be accepted and enjoyed. To this end all sorts of devices are tried. In the regular pastorate it is deemed a good thing to change the services occasionally on Sabbath evening from preaching to a "sacred concert." This, of course, catches the crowd. The people are literally fed on wind. They enjoy it, but no soul is nourished or strengthened in the faith. The concert does not add one individual to the Sunday morning congregation, and the increased attendance at night does not add anything to the strength of the church. Our notion is, that it is better adapted to weaken than to build up. Are people who are drawn to church by a musical programme, and those who are persuaded that such is perfectly legitimate, are obliged to lose more or less respect for the house of God. The preacher had better face many empty seats, and save a soul occasionally, than to be instrumental in lessening respect for the church and divine service.

Now and then a preacher gets out of the rute, as the saying is, and becomes sensational—which is generally more or less of a windy character. He is persuaded that he has made a great hit. His congregation largely increases. But he lacks power to satisfy the craving appetite, which makes a larger draw on the preacher's resources every time he makes an announcement to preach. If the sensation is not greater each succeeding service, the light-hearted and light-headed hearers soon tire and cease to come. The wind must be blown stronger and stronger to satisfy and hold the sensation lover. But there is a limit to the power of all sensationalists. With many it is soon reached.

A few months since Dr. Rainsford, of New York, one of the few Episcopal preachers inclined to sensationalism, and to try new methods, thought he had succeeded in drawing the laboring men of his parish to church. He introduced services to be made up mostly of lectures, not of an anti-religious character, but decidedly lacking in religious tone. If we are not mistaken, all praying and all Bible reading were omitted. The lectures were confined exclusively to moral and social questions. The whole service reminded us of what a drummer acquaintance used to say when asked as to his religious preference, "I like my wife's church best: it never meddles with politics or religion."

But Dr. Rainsford's plan has not succeeded, and he has recently confessed that the difficulty of reaching men is increasing. Is this true throughout the country? We fear it is. But is it the fault of the men, or the preachers? We undertake not to say. But we do say: Men in large numbers attend preaching. Where their presence is particularly noted, it may be asserted that, without exception, the preacher attracts, not by sensational methods, but by Holy-Ghost preaching, thus justifying the saying of the New Testament: "Whosoever there is a prophet in the land will be a crowd to see a prophet." Such preachers do not feed their hearers on wind.

PROTESTANT BANKRUPTCY.

It seems easy for some men to believe false and foolish things. The belief is, perhaps, sincerely entertained, but in some it is in many cases it is the result of environment and ignorance. We have seen men who were adepts in discovering the sins and shortcomings of their fellows, but could never be made to see their own moral corruption. One Sunday last week of that kind—men who saw motes in the eyes of others, but neglected me to know that their own eyes were filled with beams. Some striking cases of this kind exist to-day. For example: the man who imagines that moral and intellectual excellence exists only among the people of his own class. One who entertains an exaggerated idea of the power and attainments of his kind has lately discoursed before an intelligent audience on the "intellectual bankruptcy of Protestantism." According to this man's view, the brain of Protestantism is in a state of exhaustion and no longer able to compete with Romanism. What can a man of intelligence be thinking of to make such a statement in seriousness? We can not account for it except in one way, viz: that the man who so asserts really thinks that in his own head he carries the bigger part of the brains of Romanism. If he will only open his eyes and name authors, lecturers, preachers, politicians and statesmen, comparing one with another, he will find the preponderance in every way, on the side of Protestantism. This we venture to say without for a moment suggesting that the Romanists are in a state of intellectual bankruptcy. The Roman Catholics boast a great many men of intellectual endowment, and highly cultivated.

One fact is sufficient to settle this question: The great bulk of the book and publishing business of the country is in the hands of Protestants. The Romanists, of course, supply their own people with all the literature that they demand; but if a single production of a literary or religious character, sufficient to attract general attention, has recently emanated from the Roman Catholic press, it has not been our fortune to hear of it. The department of the publishing business in which the Romanists exercise anything like extensive influence is in the great daily papers of the country. It has been asserted that almost without exception, every leading daily paper in the United States has a Roman Catholic on its staff in some capacity. But, where there is one Catholic, there are many Protestants. The question, however, of intellectual supremacy can not be settled by this kind of a comparison. It seems useless to discuss the matter—the proposition that Protestantism is intellectually bankrupt being manifestly so absurd.

DISPLACING THE SALOON.

Ever and anon the question of displacing the saloon without an act of positive prohibition comes before the public. Propositions which appeal to the better side of human nature are made by the benevolently inclined, but, so far, nothing has been tried on a scale sufficiently large to determine with satisfaction any point connected with the saloon evil. Every proposition made, as far as we know, is based on the supposition that if you will provide for the frequenters of the bar-room something better than the saloon, they will naturally cease to visit the bar. This is an effort to deal with unregenerate human nature without coming with human polarity. Every such effort is obliged to fail.

For very long ago it was proposed in New York to tear down the unsightly and uncomfortable tenement houses and erect more attractive dwellings, supply them many with good furniture, pictures, etc., and thus induce men to remain at home. How far the scheme succeeded we are not informed, but it is certain that those who proposed the scheme forgot to include in the furnishings that which drove the men to the saloon, viz., liquor and drinking companions. If the dwellings and fashionable home surroundings were sufficient in themselves to counteract the saloon, we would naturally expect the sons of rich men, who have all that reasonable souls need in this life, to remain at home and enjoy its comforts. But they do not. Nor do all of them spend their leisure hours at the club-room. They patronize the saloon.

Tea and coffee-houses have been tried. They answer an excellent purpose. They are good places for both men and women to go who never touch liquor at all. They keep a few men from saloons who care but little for social life, and are satisfied with mild beverages. But they can never draw and save the depraved. What they furnish is healthy and refreshing, but it is not exhilarating and intoxicating. Nor do these houses furnish the social attractions that are desired. Dance-music is barred, vulgar songs are wanting, and obscene talk is not indulged or allowed. These houses do not appeal to the slum element, nor to a victim whose appetite is satisfied with nothing short of strong drink. These men are going where they can be gratified so long as such places are allowed to exist.

By all means build good and attractive houses, let as many tea-rooms as possible be opened—and the good side of the wayward if it can be done, but let us consider that all talk of the science of sociology is wasted on ears that are open only to the vile, and on hearts that are steeped in vice. We had as well appeal to a hog in a wallow in hot weather as to appeal to a rum-soaked victim, so long as at every turn he takes he faces an open saloon.

A preacher we once knew was quietly sitting in his study when a neighbor rushed in and told him that his house was on fire. His wife went bravely to work to put out the flames. He stepped into the yard and looking up at the fire, quietly remarked: "I do not understand the philosophy of that." "Philosophy, the mischief," said his wife, "you get a bucket of water and help put that fire out." Those who talk about the esthetics and sociology of the saloon life as long as the saloon is doing its deadly work, are no wiser than the philosophical preacher. Close the saloons and then talk about esthetics and sociology.

CREEDLESS CHURCHES.

Creedless churches! There is no such thing. And yet there are honest-hearted brethren who affirm to the contrary, and are constantly thanking God that they are not hampered by any iron-bound confessions of faith. Some of them are rejoicing just now that their Israel is troubled by no such question as is disturbing the peace of our Presbyterian friends. Having no creed, they are not called upon "to mind, to mend, or to make," one or the other of which it appears the Presbyterians are bound to do; that is, to stand by the old one, revise it, or make a new one out and out. Dr. Bitting, of New Orleans, alluding to the discussion in Presbyterian circles, says:

> Meanwhile, let us look on with interest and be all the more thankful that with our open Bible and our right of private interpretation, we can have no such problem. "The tie that binds" is "the unity of the Spirit and the bond of peace." The day will come when all these standards will repose upon the shelves of ecclesiastical museums as most interesting antiques that reveal the path by which some have had a tough journey to the land of rest, where every soul has its right to the truth, with the Spirit of truth as a teacher, and the truth also claims its right to every soul.

That paragraph certainly breathes a brotherly spirit, but we wonder what Dr. Bitting, a stanch Baptist, would do should some one make application for membership in his church and ask for baptism by pouring? We imagine the applicant would be promptly informed that pouring is not baptism. If necessary argument would be resorted to and should the unscriptural person Dr. Bitting could not proceed, for his faith in immersion as the mode of baptism would not allow him to accept such an applicant. Our Baptist brethren, of course, have no creed but the Bible. Neither have any other set of Christians. It is not the Bible that keeps us apart, but our interpretation. Let no man who insists his interpretation is the correct one, that he has no creed. Our observation is, that the creedless preachers are the most intolerable of all who undertake to propagate a sect.

THE PASSION PLAY.

The Passion Play, so long confined exclusively to a certain locality in Germany, it is said, is to be introduced in this country. An effort or two heretofore made resulted in failure, because of the indignant protest of the Christian public. The people could not tolerate such profanation. But it is likely that the next effort, if seriously made, will succeed. Then the bill boards will be covered with pictures representing the various scenes of passion week—even the agony in the garden, and on the cross. Need we be surprised? So many thousands of visitors from the United States have gone to Oberammagau to witness the play, including ministers—some of our own church—and have written so much about the play, and the simplicity and seriousness of those who engage in it, that, naturally, a desire has been born in many others to witness the tragedy. And such papers as the Ram's Horn, which delight in caricaturing serious things, have largely helped to destroy that reverence for the church and Christianity which once existed in the minds of the people. Some of our so-called revivals, conducted by clownish and irreverent men, have had much the same tendency. The people are, doubtless, as honest and conscientious as they ever were, but reverence for holy and sacred things does not characterize them as in the old days. So, if the Passion Play among us becomes as common as some popular drama, we will have only ourselves to blame. We still hope the moral sentiment of the country is sufficiently strong to frown down the attempt to put the tragedy of Calvary on the stage.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Louisiana State Sunday-school Convention met in the Coliseum Place Baptist Church, in this city, at the appointed time. The meeting was not very largely attended by delegates from abroad. Our city pastors and Sunday-school workers were interested, and though they took no part or but little, in the proceedings, in the way of making addresses, etc., yet they enjoyed, and profited by the occasion. The speakers were all members of the International Sunday-school Committee, who are on a tour through the South. They are regarded as among the foremost in Sunday-school work in the United States, and are not only thoroughly versed, but deeply interested in the cause they represent. We do not speak from personal observation, not having opportunity to attend the sessions. We depend on the daily papers for information. These papers speak in the highest terms of the convention, and of those who took the lead. Our limited space forbids anything like a detailed report.

ANNUAL MEETINGS.

The time for the annual meetings of our Methodist women in the pertaining Conferences is close at hand. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Conference of Louisiana will meet at Monroe the eleventh of April, and the Home Mission Society will convene at Ruston on April the fourth. The Mississippi Conference Home Mission Society will meet in Natchez the twenty-eighth of March. These are all important meetings, and ought to be well attended. Let our sisters who are interested read the notices on the second page of this issue.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. W. Simmons, presiding elder of the Texahoma district, kindly invites us to attend his District Conference and Missionary Institute to be held at Poplarville, Miss. We shall try to be on hand.

Rev. G. E. Roberts, pastor of our church at Nicholson, Miss., was in the city last week. He reports his work in good condition, and with fair prospect of success. We thank him for the honor of a call.

We had the pleasure this week of meeting Dr. J. R. Kinnell, of Myrick, Miss., who is in the city attending medical lectures. He is one of our interested Methodists, and shows his faith by his works. To meet such brethren always helps us.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Tupelo, has been assisting Rev. C. W. Crisler in a meeting at Brookhaven, Miss. Great success attended the work. There have been many conversions, and the work goes on. Thirty-eight members have been added since Conference.

A note from Rev. J. R. Hubbs informs us of the death of Mrs. Martha C. Flowers, wife of Rev. T. W. Flowers, and a native of Mississippi. She died at her home in Victor, Montana, March 3, 1901. Brother Flowers' friends in Mississippi sympathize with him in his bereavement.

A kind personal note from Rev. D. W. Babb, of Batesville, Miss., gives us to understand that he is doing well on his work, and that it is a pleasure to serve the charge. Bro. Babb is always in a good humor with his people. The pleasure of serving and being served is mutual.

Rev. J. M. Henry, presiding elder of the Monroe district, La., who has just finished the first round of quarterly meetings, says: "The preachers are all in favor with the people. Both preachers and people are looking forward to a successful year. Denson, Davis, Bogan, Lowery and Moore are new men in the district, and have made good beginnings."

The inauguration of Dr. Edwin A. Alderman as president of Tulane University was an occasion of great interest. It was attended by eminent school-men from abroad, some of whom took part in the ceremonies. Dr. Alderman delivered an address of great strength and beauty. He strongly impressed the public with the fact of his fitness for the place to which he has been called.

We thank Brother James King, of Daisy, Miss., whom we take to be an old and true Methodist, for kind and brotherly words, and for his great interest in the ADVOCATE. We trust that he may succeed in putting the paper in many homes in his neighborhood, and may it be a blessing to every household it enters. Who will join Brother King in efforts to circulate the ADVOCATE?

Rev. J. M. Wyatt, of West Point, tells us that his charge has been greatly bereaved in consequence of the death of four excellent Christians: Sisters Margaret Man, Hattie C. Harper, Mariah Scott, and Brother W. H. Mulligan. These were active and useful Christians, and will be greatly missed by the church and community. Friends who have known the departed for many years will give us memoirs in due time.

NOTICE.

The Sunday-school Board of the Mississippi Conference offers a prize to the Sunday-school scholar between the ages of twelve and seventeen who gives best answers to twenty questions on the gospel according to St. Matthew. This examination will take place at the approaching Sunday-school Convention, to be held at McComb City, March 28-31. J. A. MOORE,
Chairman of Com.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

Questions: (1) The committees to examine applicants for license to preach, and for recommendation for "orders," and for admission on trial into the Annual Conference, are appointed by the presiding elder nenally before the meeting of the District Conference. Should the names of the committees appear on the District Conference Record?

(2) When a preacher is appointed "assistant" on a circuit, and takes charge of part of the churches on the circuit, has he the authority to hold Church Conferences and preside in church trials?

(3) When a member lives near the church where he holds his membership, but wilfully absents himself from church several years, is he considered "lost sight of"? If not, what disposition should be made of him?

(1) The Committees of Examination should be announced by the president in open Conference, and recorded as are all other committees.

(2) If the circuit has been divided, and the "assistant" regularly appointed, he has; if he is only assistant, though he may have oversight of part of the work, he has not.

(3) He is not "lost sight of." How to deal with him is a matter to be settled by the preacher-in-charge and the church to which he belongs.

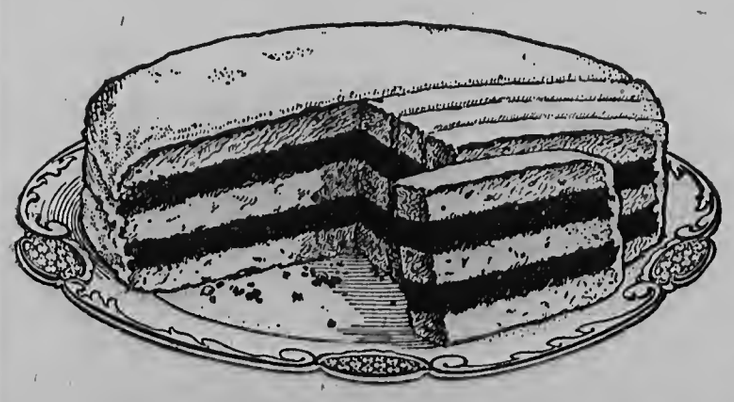
BOOK NOTICE.

WATER BAPTISM: ITS HISTORY, MEANING, PURPOSE, MODE. By Rev. Isaac L. Peebles, of the Mississippi Conference. Nashville, Tenn.; Dallas, Texas. 1901. Price, 50 cents.

We have read this little treatise on baptism with great interest. Brother Peebles has treated the subject well, and in two or three instances has strengthened his general position in a way that we do not remember having seen elsewhere. His arguments are striking and conclusive. His presentation of the difference between the meaning of certain words in classic Greek and New Testament Greek ought to settle the minds of all readers as to the mode of baptism. That settled, but little cause for difference between Pedo-Baptists and Anti-Pedo-Baptists would remain; at least among those of evangelical communion. The book may be ordered from our Publishing House at Nashville. We hope it may have an extensive sale.



At this season the housekeeper must look specially after the baking powder.

As she cannot make good cake with bad eggs, no more can she make cake that is light, delicious and dainty with inferior baking powder.

Royal Baking Powder is indispensable for the preparation of the finest food. It imparts that peculiar lightness, sweetness and flavor noticed in the finest cake, biscuit, doughnuts, crusts, etc., which expert bakers say is unobtainable by the use of any other leavening agent.

EPWORTH LEAGUE DEPARTMENT.

"ALL FOR CHRIST."

MISSISSIPPI.

REV. THOS. H. DORSEY, Arcola, Miss. EDITOR.

The Epworth League at Greenville is raising one hundred dollars for the Soochow University in China.

A church which is anti-missionary will die, and the League that works for nothing but home institutions will just as surely die.

The great source of development for church, League, or individual, is to labor for others.

When you hear an individual say, "Charity begins at home," you may be sure that he is lacking in charity, even "at home."

There is no phrase in our language that expresses more of the spirit of Christ than the two words, foreign missions.

The Spring-time is now upon us Let us bestir ourselves, and add new names to the roll, and new subscribers to the Era, and more thoroughly organize in each of the departments, preparatory for the very best Summer's work in the history of the League in our State.

Some people, even at this late day, raise objection to the Epworth League upon the ground that there are too many things organized in the church that young people are expected to attend; yet the church has not half so many places for the young people as the devil—the dance, card-party, wine-supper, theater, circus, and many others like unto them. You never hear a sinner say, "There are too many places to go;" but the question is, Where shall I go? It is not too much organization in the church, but, if anything, too much disorganization.

Bro. W. D Hawkins, a noble young layman of Meridian, Miss., is working for the free trip to California offered by the Epworth Era for the largest number above 200 subscribers. We should be glad to see Bro. Hawkins succeed in the undertaking. He has been a faithful Leaguer since its organization.

Bro. Hawkins says of his League (South Side, Meridian): "We are doing fine work. All departments are at work. We have just added a very fine set of books to the library. We have arranged for a series of lectures, beginning to-night, March 1."

We are in receipt of a communication from Rev. E. S. Lewis, State League Secretary, enclosing a communication from Rev. P. L. Cobb. We gladly give space below for both letters. They are both personal, but they speak for and explain themselves. We trust that each reader to whom they are applicable will take heed.

DEAR BRO. DORSEY: I enclose a late letter from Rev. P. L. Cobb, which speaks for itself. It is very necessary to have regular reports from our Leagues, so that the State secretary can report to headquarters. So I write you, as our League editor, to use this letter of Bro. Cobb in the League column of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, so that it can be brought to the attention of the several Leagues.

Through you I want to urge the district secretaries to drop me a line reporting what is being done, state of the League, what progress made on Reading Course, something about libraries, what is being done in the cause of missions, and any other fact of interest.

Yours truly, E. S. LEWIS.

Brookaville, Miss., Feb. 28, 1901.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, Brookaville, Miss.—

MY DEAR BROTHER: It is probable that the Epworth Leagues of the M. E. Church, South, have a better plan of organization for missionary work than any young people's society in the country. But, for the organization to be effective, it must be vigorously prosecuted. We are pressing at this time for a more thorough organization of every chapter. Knowing the influence you have among your Leaguers, we write to request that, as far as it is possible, you will secure:

1 The appointment in every chapter of a Missionary Committee. (See Constitution, Art. 7, Sec. 1.)

2. The holding of a monthly missionary meeting.

3. The formation of a mission study class during February and March.

4. The purchase of literature.

It will be a great favor to us if you will kindly send at your earliest convenience a statement in regard to what your Leagues are doing in the missionary work, and what steps you propose to take to render them more effective as a missionary agency.

Yours sincerely,

P. L. COBB.

Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 22, 1901.

The following communication from Rev. H. G. Hawkins, of Centreville, Miss., will be read with interest. We trust that all other district secretaries may follow his example, and see that District League Conferences be held before our State Conference.

NATCHEZ DISTRICT EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The Natchez District Epworth League Conference will be held in Fayette, Miss., morning, afternoon, and evening, Thursday, April 11. As there are only a very few Epworth Leagues in this district, the invitation to attend the Conference is not restricted to League members, but is extended to all the Methodist young people of the district, and any others who are interested. The purpose is to assemble the young people, do them good, and send them back to their homes with a better appreciation of their opportunities, and with a purpose to help their pastors. As the District Missionary Institute will be in session at Fayette, April 10, our presiding elder, Rev. T. W. Adams, decided upon April 11 as the date for the League gathering, in order that we might be sure of the presence and help of all the preachers.

We expect to organize Thursday morning by enrolling those attending, and electing a president, the three vice-presidents, a secretary and treasurer. Besides papers and addresses, there will be held a Reading Circle, a Literary Society, a Devotional Service, and a League Business Meeting, as samples or attempted models of the work in different departments. Also the effort will be made to organize throughout the district Charity and Help Committees for assisting the pastors in various ways, especially in raising a sinking fund to be used by the pastor, if need be, in paying any deficit that may be at the end of the year on the Conference collections.

Let each pastor have his charge represented by two, or more, of his young people. Six or ten will not be too many. Send names of those who are going to Rev. W. H. Huntley, Fayette, Miss.

H. G. HAWKINS,
Natchez District Epworth League Sec.

LOUISIANA.

REV. H. H. SINGLETON, Ruston, La. ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

The League at Jackson is sending out letters to all the Louisiana Leagues, urging them to elect delegates at once to the State Conference, Jackson, La, May 9-12. We hope all the Leagues will attend to this matter at once, and send the names of delegates and alternates to Miss Carrie Schwing at Jackson. The Jackson League will then open correspondence with these delegates elect, and try to persuade them to attend. We know Jackson of old, and know that those who attend will thoroughly enjoy themselves.

The Programme Committee for Arcadia district met on the fifteenth, and completed the programme for the Arcadia District Conference, to be held in Ruston, June 11-14. We have not seen the State programme yet, but if it is as good as the district programme, it is a good one.

Begin now to decide whom to elect for the next State officers. We are strongly in favor of a traveling secretary for at least six months of the year—one who shall visit every League in the State, and organize new ones wherever the pastor will allow the effort to be made. We have sixty-two Leagues in the Conference. This number could easily be increased to 100 or 150 by a traveling secretary in six months. Surely the State Conference can find a consecrated young man or woman with sense and judgment and ability, who will give six months to this work in return for a mere living, say $200 and traveling expenses. This latter would in nearly every case be paid gladly by the League visited, which would also gladly entertain the secretary in their homes. As to the $200, there will be absolutely no trouble. Forty Leagues giving $5 will make it, and, if necessary, Arcadia district will furnish ten of those Leaguers. Let us have the traveling secretary. It will build up the cause wonderfully, and we believe it high time something were being done to that end. We must not be as idle another year as we have this.

THE TOUCH OF CHRIST.

She was the mother of a large family, and, being in plain circumstances, was required to do her own work. Sometimes, in the multitude of her tasks and cares, she lost the sweetness of her peace, and, like Martha, became troubled or worried with her much serving. One morning she had been unusually hurried, and things had not gone smoothly. She had breakfast to get for her family, her husband to care for as he hastened away early to his work, and her children to make ready for school. There were other household duties which filled the poor, weak woman's hands, until her strength was well nigh utterly exhausted. And she had not gone through it all that morning in a sweet, peaceful way. She had allowed herself to lose her patience, and to grow fretful, vexed and unhappy. She had spoken quick, hasty, petulant words to her husband and children. Her heart had been in a fever of irritation and disquiet all the morning.

When the children were gone, and the pressing tasks were finished, and the house was all quiet, the tired woman crept upstairs to her own room. She was greatly discouraged. She felt that her morning had been a most unsatisfactory one; that she had sadly failed in her duty; that she had grieved her Master by her want of patience and gentleness, and had hurt her children's lives by her fretfulness and her ill-tempered words. Shutting her door, she took up her Bible and read the story of the healing of the sick woman: "He touched her hand, and the fever left her; and she arose, and ministered unto them."

"Ah!" she said, "if I could have had that touch before I began my morning's work, the fever would have left me, and I should then have been prepared to minister sweetly and peacefully to my family." She had learned that she needed the touch of Christ to make her ready for beautiful and gentle service. —Helpful Thoughts.

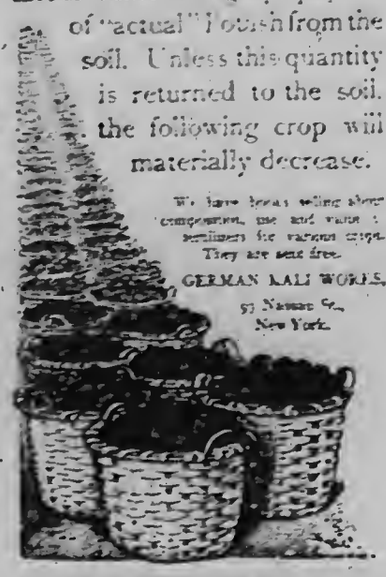
BOYS AND HOUSEWORK.

On the first morning of my visit, as we arose from the table, I was a little surprised to see the young son of the house, a boy of sixteen or so, quite as a matter of course begin to help clear the table. My wonder grew as I saw the handy way in which he assisted all through the dishwashing and seemed to know where all the dishes belonged. His mother and sister were not very strong, and what he did for them was really a help and was always done cheerfully. One day his sister had a headache, and as he saw her starting upstairs to make the beds, he said, "I have made my bed, so you won't have to go up to my room' As his room was on the third floor, this was a help, and his sister knew that the bed was made as well as she herself would have made it.

No doubt his cheerfulness and thoughtfulness resulted from his naturally good disposition, but the ability to do the work so that it was a real help and relief could not have come by nature, but must have been the outcome of careful training. The more I thought of it the more I admired that mother's wisdom in teaching her son to be a good housekeeper, and I thought of the blundering way in which many men help about the house.

I know of another case where a mother was in poor health and her four sons did all the housework, even to the washing and ironing. What is more, they all grew up to be exceptionally smart men. May it not be that a knowledge of housework and the habit of doing it well is actually a help to a man in his work in the large outside world? It is often little things that make the difference between success and failure, and housework is something in which one has to be careful about little things.

Two hundred bushels of potatoes remove eighty pounds of "actual" plant food from the soil. Unless this quantity is returned to the soil, the following crop will materially decrease.



We have books telling about composition, use and value of fertilizers for various crops. They are sent free.

GERMAN KALI WORKS,
93 Nassau St.,
New York.

Probably many mothers think there is no need to teach their boys housework, but it seems to me that it is more necessary than some of the studies they have to go through with at school. Most men at some time in their lives are called upon to help in the house, and if they had wise training when they were young, they will be much more likely to give that help efficiently and without grumbling.

In families where there are more girls than boys it is still well for the boys to know how to do certain things properly, such as making beds, sweeping, doing dishes, and cooking a few simple things. Even if there seems to be no prospect that such ability will ever be of use to the boy, the time may come when he will rejoice in its possession.

There is one thing which it seems to me that every boy should be taught to do as regularly as he wakes up in the morning, and that is to open all the windows in his room, providing it does not storm, and spread open the sheets and blankets on his bed and put the pillows where they will air. Neatness and hygiene demand that this be done, and if he does it, it takes but a moment, and it saves some one else a trip to his room for the purpose.—Good Housekeeping.

THE POWER OF SACRIFICE.

My soul, hast thou ever considered that the one rod which budded amongst the twelve was not that of kinghood, but that of priesthood, of sacrificial love? The rod of kings can subdue life, but the rod of Aaron can create life. That which can bring forth buds is more than a ruler; it is a creator; it inspires with new vitality. Hast thou tried the power of sacrifice to bring into this world new buds, new fruits, new flowers? There are germs of life down in the valley which can not bloom into being because no sunshine has reached them; they are dwelling in the shadow, and they wait for the light and warmth. If they could only get the light and the warmth, they would burst forth into flower; the desert would break forth into singing: the wilderness and the solitary place would be glad. Thou hast the light and warmth; wilt thou impart them? Wilt thou go down into the dark valley where the buds can not spring for want of sun? Wilt thou bear to the neglected spots of earth the radiance of the day? The rod of violence can crush the germs of life because they have no beauty in them, but the rod of sacrifice can bring them into bloom. It can wake them into buds of promise, it can touch them with the touch of human sympathy, it can ennoble them by the sense of a contact between man and man. My soul, if thy brother has erred from the way, do not speak to him from the top of thy mountain: go down to meet him in his own valley. Go down to restore, but restore in the spirit of meekness; not from the height of elevation, but from the level of common and conscious weakness. Then shall the buds break forth in thy sunshine, and the blossoms be unfolded in thy light, for thy rod shall be the rod of Aaron, and thy empire the throne of the Lamb.—George Matheson.

DO YOUR BEST.

Christ never asks for anything we can not do. But let us not forget that he always does expect and require of each of us the best we can do. The faithfulness Christ wants and approves implies the doing of all work, our business, our trade, our daily toil, as well as we can. Let no one think that religion does not apply to private life. It applies to the way you do your most common work just as really as to your praying and keeping of the Commandments. Whatever your duty is, you can not be altogether faithful to God unless you do your best. To slur any task is to do God's work badly. To neglect it is to rob God. The universe is not quite complete without your work well done, however small that work may be.

The faithfulness which Christ requires must reach also to everything we do. It takes in the way the child gets his lessons and recites them, the way the dressmaker and the tailor sew their seams, the way the blacksmith welds the iron and shoes the horse, the way the plumber puts in his pipes, the way the carpenter builds the house, the way the clerk represents the goods, and measures or weighs them. How soon it would put a stop to all dishonesty, all fraud, all skimping, all false weights and measures, all shams, all neglects of duty, if this lesson were only learned and practiced everywhere!—J. R. Miller, D. D.

HANG ON.

The hired man, who was coming home with a load of wood, placed Master Tommy on top of the load. Just before reaching the farm, the team went briskly down a steep hill. When Tommy entered the house, his mother said: "Tommy, dear, were you not frightened when the horses were trotting so quickly down Crow Hill?"

"Yes, mother, a little," replied Tom, honestly; "but I asked the Lord to help me and hung on like a beaver."

Sensible Tommy! He joined working to praying. In all troubles pray and hang on like a beaver, by which I mean, while you ask God to help you, you help yourself with all your might.—Selected.

A MATHEMATICAL DISCOVERY.

Miss Gertrude Cutcheon, a member of the 1901 graduating class of the Lebanon High School, is about to become famous in the mathematical world. She has solved a problem in geometry that no scholar has ever solved before, one which has puzzled the minds of many a brainy person, and if she can successfully bring her problem to the attention of educators and mathematical book publishers, she will not only create a revolution in mathematics, but will bring a fortune to herself.

The solution which is about to give her so much notoriety is simply trisecting an angle. It is such a simple thing that the uninformed do not stop to consider it, but when it is known that this problem has never been solved before, it is surprising that this village girl only 17 years old should give to the world what promises to be of so much value. She is already in correspondence with a leading educator of the State, who is assisting her in placing her discovery with the publishers, with a view of their handling the solution on a royalty. It is said by those who are well posted that this discovery will add a new book to the science of geometry, and be of incalculable advantage to civil engineers and surveyors in general.—Lebanon, Mo., Special to St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE NEED OF THE YOUNG AMERICAN.

A college education as we see it to day is not enough to insure a good citizen. Something more is required. This something is unselfish patriotism. But can not this be made one of the results of education? Certainly it should be. If the State educates men, it should educate them loyally to conserve her own interests. The movement to teach patriotism in our common schools is a good one. Care must be taken, however, that the right sort of patriotism be taught. The young American must not come to believe that patriotism consists solely in the risking of life to repel invaders. He must be taught that it consists no less in guarding the interests of the State in time of peace. That it consists not so much in physical courage as in unselfishness and honesty.—Leonidas Hubbard, Jr., in The Saturday Evening Post.

Temperance.

STILL IN FAVOR OF PROHIBITION.

The governor of Maine, in his recent inaugural address, said: "Intemperance is such a fruitful source of misery, pauperism and crime, and its multitude of victims is so great a burden upon the sober and industrious citizen, that it is the duty of a government to control and restrict the liquor traffic in every legitimate way. By a provision of its constitution and by statute laws, which, with overwhelming majorities, its citizens have repeatedly sustained at the polls, the State of Maine stands opposed to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. The deliberate adoption of this policy by a people naturally careful and conservative in their judgments was the inevitable result of a moral evolution which recognized the demoralizing and far-reaching evils of intemperance, and sought to eradicate them from the community; and embodied the conviction that a traffic which took men from the ranks of productive industry, robbed them of their sober faculties, destroyed their self-respect, and made them a burden and menace to those who had the right to look to them for support and protection—a traffic which filled the poor-houses, prisons, and asylums with human wrecks, and imposed its greatest misery upon the innocent and helpless—was hostile to the public interests and wholly contrary to the spirit and purpose of a Christian civilization.' To this Zion's Advocate, the Baptist paper of Maine, adds: "In this view of prohibition, the great body of the people of Maine concur. Prohibition is a constitutional provision deliberately adopted, after a trial of the prohibitory law through a long series of years."—Texas Baptist Standard.

TEACHERS' BUREAU.

The Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has, under paragraph 45 of our Discipline, established a TEACHERS' BUREAU. The purpose of this Bureau is the advancement of Christian Education. We propose to do our best to secure for the graduates of our institutions, and for other competent persons, positions in our schools and colleges; but we guarantee a position to nobody. Applicants for positions will be furnished, upon request, with our application form, which will explain itself. Since the making of money is not the purpose of our Bureau, we will make our nominations with the greatest possible care. Presidents of our schools and colleges, and Boards of Trustees seeking teachers, will do well to apply to us. The facilities of the Board for this work are unusual. We have a constituency, preachers and laymen, of one million and a half. We request the pastors throughout our Connection to advertise this Bureau, and to notify us of any vacancy in any school, secular or Christian, as soon as it occurs. By so doing they will greatly aid us in promoting Christian education. Address Rev. J. D. Hammond, Cor. Sec., Nashville, Tenn.

OBITUARIES.

Obituaries of 200 words published free. For all words in excess of that number send one cent per word.

MRS. HARRIET CLAPP HARPER, daughter of Greenville and Eliza Burnett, was born April 28, 1827, near Decatur, Morgan county, Ala.; moved to Monroe county, Miss., in 1840. In 1848 (Dec. 21) she was married to Dr. S. P. Clapp. She moved to Iuka in 1870, and in January, 1872, was there married to Rev. R. L. Harper, of the South Carolina Conference, going immediately to South Carolina, where she was a great help to her gifted husband in his ministerial labors. His health failed, and they returned to Iuka in 1878, he dying of consumption in August of that year. She made no boast of Christianity, but those who knew her knew she lived it. It was her constant business to do good, and none knew better how to speak the appropriate word in season, or to minister to those in affliction or distress.

After the marriage of her niece and namesake, Mrs. J. H. Sanders, in 1889, Mrs. Harper spent much of her time with her in West Point, moving there for a permanent home in 1897, to the great gratification of Mr. and Mrs. Sanders and their little daughter, to whom she was tenderly attached. How blessed to have such a one in the home! How tenderly they all loved her, and how great was her love for them!

Our dear friend was sweet-spirited, with force of character that rendered her an unusually capable woman. She loved the church, and counted it a privilege to help support its institutions. She became a member of the M. E. Church, South, in 1852, and her pastor always found in her a praying friend.

We were guests during the session of last Conference in Mr. Sanders' hospitable home. My room was with Sister Harper, and our association was very sweet. She seemed to think her life-work nearly ended, and more than once said, "I am just waiting."

On the morning of Feb. 10, while she slept, the messenger came. Thursday night the family and a relative sat in her room until eight o'clock, and she seemed as well as usual. Friday morning her sister, Mrs. Shirley, went to her room. Everything was so still she went to her, and, being alarmed, called Mrs. Sanders, who was quickly at the bedside. She was still warm, her eyes closed, her hands folded across her breast, and the cover not disarranged. There was no trace of pain on her face. Physicians and friends were called, but nothing could be done. The doctors pronounced her dead. It was so hard to give her up, but how glorious to know she waked in heaven! Her niece wrote she was beautiful in death.

Rev. J. M. Wyatt held a service at the house Friday afternoon, and on Saturday accompanied the grief-stricken loved ones with the precious dead to Iuka, where, after a long-to-be-remembered service, they left her dear body to rest beneath a flower-crowned mound by Rev. R. L. Harper's grave.

She has gone, and we shall miss her, but let us think of her in our Father's home, and let us meet her there.

Her friend, CARRIE E. COODELL.

MRS. FANNIE WOOD (nee Bell), wife of Green Wood, was born in Yalabusha county, Miss., Sept. 14, 1860, and died at her home near Eureka Springs, Miss., Feb. 22, 1901. She joined the Methodist Church at the age of fifteen, and lived a consistent Christian life to the day of her death. Her religion was not spasmodic, but continued all the year round. Her light was a steady light. She would sometimes shout the praises of God while at home by herself as well as in the public sanctuary. She was very patient and cheerful during her long and continued illness. Indeed, her life was a beautiful sermon, and her death a triumphant victory of the Christian's faith. She was conscious up to the last, and talked of her departure as quietly as if she were about to take a journey. She requested us to sing at her funeral service several songs that she loved. Among them are, "I'm going home to die no more," "I'm anchored on the Rock," etc. A while before she died she tried to sing the chorus, "I'm going home to die no more," but, being too weak, her friends sang it for her. Just before she died she waved her hand and said, "Farewell! farewell! my loved ones; I'm gone." We buried her remains, but not her influence, at Pisgah Church, in Yalabusha county, by the side of two of her children. Her husband and three children are left to mourn her death.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

It was with feelings of genuine sorrow and regret that we heard that Mrs. LAURA TURNER had passed away on the morning of Jan. 28, 1901. Her death came as a shock to us all, and we deeply mourn her loss.

Mrs. Turner filled well every position in which she was placed. She was a loving and devoted mother, a kind friend and neighbor, and was loyal to all the higher interests of life; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the auxiliaries of the W. F. M. Society and of the W. H. M. Society of Winona, Miss., have lost a valued and valuable member—one whose heart was always touched at the thought of the needy and dying, who was always interested in woman's work for women, and whose death we deeply deplore.

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved family and friends our sincere love and sympathy, praying the blessings of our Father upon them in this, their hour of sorrow, and that in his infinite love and mercy he may sustain and comfort them.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy for publication to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the Methodist Messenger, the Winona Times, and that they be spread upon the Minutes of the two societies.

(Signed) Mrs. Stone, president W. F. M. Society; Mrs. Weller Trotter, president W. H. M. Society; Miss Ella Grider, Miss Mary Sweetman.

MRS. L. J. HANKINS died at her home near Kilmichael, Montgomery county, Miss., Jan. 22 1901, in her sixty-fifth year. She was the daughter of Frederic and Rebecca Cross, and grew up to womanhood under the happy influence of their upright and religious training, which shone out with beneficent and cheering brightness throughout her entire after life. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in her seventeenth year, and ever afterward maintained her Christian integrity in all her church and social relations. She was married to W. T. Hankins in March, 1861, and was the mother of seven children, three of whom—one son and two daughters—survive her. As a dutiful daughter, an affectionate wife, a devoted and self-sacrificing mother, a loving sister, a faithful friend and neighbor, and an earnest Christian, she ever held the love, esteem and confidence of all who knew her, and having thus lived the true Christian, she died right, with full assurance and faith in the blessed gospel of Jesus Christ, and of living again "in the Christian's home in glory." After a beautiful and appropriate service in the Methodist Church at Kilmichael, conducted by Rev. J. T. Evans, her former pastor, amidst a multitude of sorrowing relatives and friends, she was buried in the cemetery at Friendship Church, where she had worshiped more than forty years.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Resolutions on the death of W. J. BROWN, SR., adopted by the Quarterly Conference of First Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss.:

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father has seen fit to remove from our midst our venerable brother, William J. Brown, Sr.; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death the community has lost one of its best citizens, and the church one of its truest and most faithful members—a man whose integrity was never questioned, whose word was his bond, whose loyalty to God and the church was known of all, and whose heart always beat in sympathy with every movement for the amelioration of fallen humanity.

Resolved, That while we regret that our brother shall no more go out and in among us, we are grateful that our Heavenly Father so long spared him to exemplify in his life the power of grace divine to work by love and purify the heart.

Resolved, That we express to his family our sincerest sympathy, and pray that the grace of God may abound unto them in their sorrow.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. There is such a thing as one's being so "endued with power from on high" that his words shall take hold of people and save them, somewhat as Peter's words did on the day of Pentecost. A feeling of disappointment comes over us as we read the sermons of some of the greatest soul-winners—sermons under which thousands were cut to the heart. The secret of the success of such sermons is that those who uttered them were "filled with the Holy Ghost." Living under the dispensation of the Spirit, with so many marvelous examples to encourage us, ought we not to give more prayerful thought to the Holy Spirit, and hope for greater displays of his almighty power?—Southern Churchman.

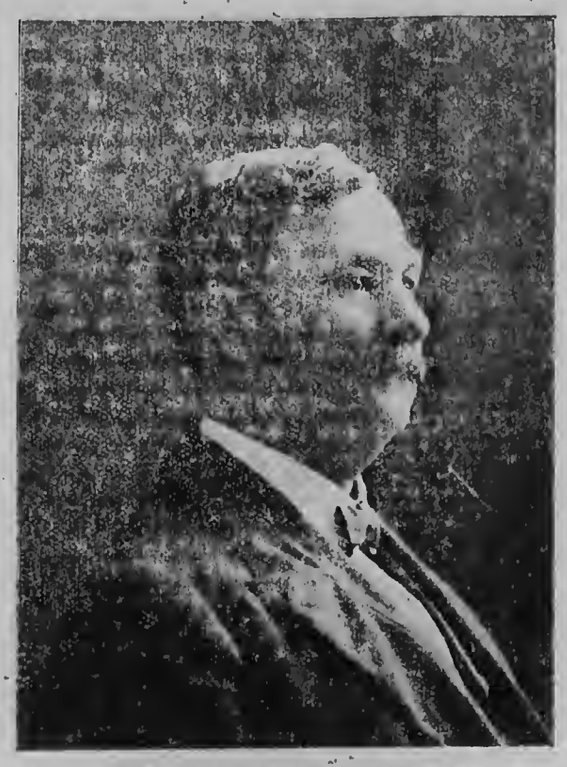
Dr. J. S. HILL, DISCOVERER OF ANTINARCOTINE, Medical Director Narcotism Hospital Co. Greenville, Tex.



THIS KNOCKS THE FAKERS OUT.

I TAKE ANY CASE OF Morphine, Opium, Cocaine, or Whiskey Habit, cure them, bear all expenses, and do not require one cent till they have been cured from one to three months. There is no other firm under the sun but ours that can do this. They all want the money before the patient has time to know he, or she, has been cured. We do not need the money till the patient is satisfied.

I am the first man who ever discovered a quick, positive, permanent cure for Whiskey or Drug habits. Since I have discovered and used my treatment others have professed to have it, and even advertise it. They are spurious. My treatment is endorsed by leading physicians, and by pastors of all denominations who know of the cures I have made. IT NEVER FAILS.

My Hospital is in Greenville, in beautifully situated grounds, the building is new, modern, up-to-date. Patients find a comfortable home, with park and beautiful lake for recreation until cured. Those who desire may come and go unknown to any one else.

THE WHISKEY HABIT.

There are many treatments for the whiskey habit. Indeed, you can find them at almost every turn. I am glad to state that I have a cure that has borne the test in the very worst cases in the United States for over six years. I can positively guarantee to cure any case of Whiskey habit inside of ten days that can be found. I have been improving my treatment from time to time, and now have it so perfected that I can cure with no inconvenience to the patient. The patient can eat three square meals a day and sleep like a baby at night while taking my treatment. See my guarantee elsewhere. All patients for this habit are required to be treated at the Hospital.

THE MORPHINE HABIT.

I am aware that this is a very delicate subject; that there are thousands of the best men and women in the land who have unconsciously formed the habit of using morphine. I am sorry to say that, in most cases, physicians are to blame. But no matter how formed—once in the habit the next thing is to cure it. There are thousands of so-called cures; many of them propose "No cure, no pay;" but my observation has taught me that almost all of such really require the patient to pay in advance after getting him into their power. I do not do this—do not have to, as I know I am positively going to cure him. I not only do not want your pay until you are cured, but I do not even require it to be deposited in my name, but the patient deposits it in his own name until he is satisfied of a cure—and I give him three months to know it, if he wants it. But all morphine patients must come to the Hospital for treatment.

THE TOBACCO HABIT.

My treatment for chewing, smoking and snuff-dipping can be sent by mail or express. This is a "home cure" which you can use with directions I send, without coming to the Hospital. Price, $1.00 a box; six boxes (a guaranteed cure) $5.00.

I want to say to every broken-hearted wife, mother, sister or daughter, that "ANTINARCOTINE" will cure any person on earth of the Whiskey or the Morphine habit. I can give you many hundreds of names of those who have written me letters of gratitude for curing them or their loved ones. I get them by almost every mail. The one below is a sample:

ALBA, TEXAS, January 17, 1901.—Texas Christian Advocate: To Whom It May Concern: I was a victim of the whiskey habit over 30 years. No man was ever in a more ruined condition than I was. I went to Dr. J. S. Hill of Greenville, Texas, in November, 1899, and was quickly and permanently cured. I never suffered any pain during, nor after, the treatment. I never have any craving or desire to drink since.
D. C. SCARBOROUGH, M. D.

I will be glad to furnish you other names on application.

IT HAS NEVER FAILED

A report issued by the Census Bureau on the beet sugar industry in the United States in 1900 shows 30 factories in operation. Of these 9 are in Michigan, 7 in California, 3 each in Nebraska and Utah, 2 in New York, and 1 each in Colorado, Illinois, Minnesota, New Mexico, Oregon and Washington.

Lord Roberts in a letter to a correspondent expresses a confident hope that Lord Kitchener will soon be able to secure peace in South Africa, but thus far there is no sign from Pretoria or Cape Town that peace is near. The latest news is that General Fourier with 800 men escaped from the British columns Sunday that were endeavoring to corner the commando east of Bloemfonteir.

Almost in the last moments of the Congress whose term recently expired, that body had under consideration a bill to appropriate $5,000,000 to the St. Louis Exposition, $500,000 to the Buffalo Exposition and $250,000 to the Charleston Exposition. The appropriation to the St. Louis show was finally passed, but the other two were knocked out. The managers of both the enterprises which were denied Federal favor will, through the exertions of their promoters and backers, be carried out to successful completion.

At the Capitol.

I am in my seventy-third year, and for fifty years I have been a great sufferer from indigestion, constipation and biliousness. I have tried all the remedies advertised for these diseases, and got no permanent relief. About one year ago, the disease assuming a more severe and dangerous form, I became very weak, and lost flesh rapidly. I commenced using Dr. Mozley's Lemon Elixir. I gained twelve pounds in three months. My strength and health, my appetite and my digestion were perfectly restored, and now I feel as young and vigorous as I ever did in my life.

HISTORY OF METHODISM

"A SHORT HISTORY OF METHODISM." By John W. Boswell. D. D. Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn. 60 cents.

This is a work, the like of which should have been written many years ago. Every Methodist, particularly every young Methodist, should know something of the history of the great denomination which, in a single century, has moved to the first place among Protestant bodies. The histories written by the great authors who have made their mark on Methodism are, however, too voluminous for popular reading, and there has long existed a demand for just such a book as this from the pen of Dr. Boswell. In very condensed form it presents all the main facts in the history of Methodism, and gives a bird's-eye view of the growth of that church from the days of Wesley to the present. Whether Dr. Boswell's book will be appreciated as it should, is a question that can not now be answered, but certain it is that the Methodist who fails to place this book in the hands of his family misses a great opportunity.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

We send the above book, with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, one year for two dollars, cash, both to new and old subscribers.

Dr. Greene's Nervura Helps Everybody in the Spring.

MRS. OSBORNE SAYS: "I would not be without DR. GREENE'S NERVURA in the house."

As a Spring Strengthener It Has No Equal—It Builds Up and Fortifies Weak Spots of the Human Organism Which Always Needs Help at This Season of the Year.

MRS. JULIA OSBORNE and SON

MRS. JULIA OSBORNE, 11 Highland Ave., Newark, N. J., says:

"I have been taking Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy off and on for about three years, and I feel it my duty to write and tell that it has helped me wonderfully. I had a fall and was hurt inwardly, and the doctor said I would never be well. One day my little boy brought in a book which was an advertisement of Dr. Greene's Nervura and as it seemed to be just the thing that I needed I got a bottle and tried it, and one bottle helped me so much that I have kept on taking it and I am now almost a well woman. I was very nervous, had fainting spells, and would be unconscious for long time. My son, who is about twelve years old, takes it also whenever he is not feeling well, and it always seems to help him, and he is improving every day. I am thankful for what it has done for me and for my son, and would not be without it in the house. I have also recommended it to my friends, and many of them say they could not live without it. I hope the medicine will help others as it has helped me."

Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy is the Safeguard of the Home.

It helps father and mother, and it helps children. When it is relied upon to build up after any acute illness it is soon found to be effective beyond anything else, and the family that depends upon it for a tonic and strengthener will always be found recommending it broadcast.

Everybody feels the need of a blood purifier and flesh builder in the spring, and this grand medicine of Dr. Greene's, made of purely vegetable elements, helps Nature and fills the veins with pure blood. Without purging and without shock it does its masterly work in perfect harmony with natural laws.

Dr. Greene's Advice is Practical Help.

Dr. Greene will give his advice free to all who call on him at his office, 35 W. 14th St., New York City, or write to him through the mails. In this way his work is carried on in proportions which only those who come in practical contact with it can appreciate. Great numbers of people seek Dr. Greene's help, and none without good result. His great experience and scientific acquirements in medicine make his advice the most valuable in the world for the run-down and weak, yet this counsel is free to all, rich and poor alike.

RELIEF FUND FRAUDS.

Sensational stories come from Texas concerning frauds in the distribution of funds raised by the country at large for the relief of citizens of Texas who suffered from the recent storm. It is strange, but by no means a new thing, that fraud will be perpetrated in the use of funds thus sacredly devoted. Like complaints were made years ago concerning means raised for flood sufferers in certain sections of the Mississippi Valley. They occurred also in a country that had been swept by a cyclone. In some cases the relief committees are to blame, and in others the committees were deceived by imposters. In Texas the large sums of money in the hands of committees seem to have been a temptation. The two Houses of the Legislature appointed a committee to investigate, and the report made was to the effect that the funds in some instances had been misapplied. "At one place large property owners who were able to care for themselves received liberal donations. The distributing committee were liberal with themselves. One of the relief committee showed by his testimony that he had lost but little, and that he is now in a better condition than before the storm. Other members of the relief committee were very liberally provided for out of the funds placed in their hands, and there is some money unaccounted for. It was found that at one place some of the members of the relief committee had held up relief money and given the storm sufferers credit on debts. In regard to Galveston, the report says that evidence showed that certain supplies, both food and medicine, had been sold, among which was a cargo of flour and 2,000 sacks of meal, for which nothing had as yet been received. The chairman of the building committee had been summoned, and told of the building of temporary homes. 'Thus, it seems,' says the report, 'from this evidence that a great number of these houses were placed upon the lands of well-to-do people who were to receive rents from the people occupying them. About $450,000 was expended in building these houses.'" The Legislative committee do not charge outright fraud, nor make any special suggestion, save as to a further and full investigation of the whole matter. We are pained to hear of such things in Texas.

A VOICE IN UTAH.

Utah has been endeavoring to perpetrate more mischief. This time the Legislature passed a bill "limiting actions for bigamy to the woman alleging herself as the victim." The purpose of the law was too plain. Under it not only could men continue to live with their numerous wives, but to take to themselves others, secretly, of course; but, once taken, nobody save a wife could bring action against him. Governor Wells vetoed the bill, and, as far as we have seen, the veto has not been turned down by the Legislature. The governor could but foresee what a storm of opposition such a law would raise throughout the country, and made what he foresaw as the basis, in part, of his veto. "This bill," Governor Wells says, "would be the signal for a general demand upon the National Congress for a constitutional amendment against certain social conditions here." The Chicago Inter-Ocean declares: "That demand would surely be granted, and in such a contest Utah would inevitably go to the wall," and adds: "To expect the younger generation of Mormons to take an attitude dishonoring to the memories of their mothers is to ask too much of human nature. It is enough if they confess the errors of their fathers by refraining from following their example. This they are disposed to do. They are anxious to live down the stain of polygamy, and they should thank Governor Wells for defeating the reactionary attempt to replace a blot upon their State and Church. Utah's pledges to the nation must and will be kept."

A LAUDABLE EXAMPLE.

The National Biscuit Company, an extensive concern with immense capital, it seems to us is acting wisely in its efforts to secure every employee as a shareholder in its preferred stock. The market value of the stock at the present time is $92.50 per share, paying dividends at the rate of 7 per cent. per year. The company offers shares to employees on the most liberal terms. It requires partial payments at the time application is made for shares to be in amounts of five ($5) dollars or multiple thereof, and allows interest to the employee on each partial payment to the amount of 4 per cent., dating from the first of the month after it is made. Should the employee fail to make a partial payment six months in succession, interest will cease, and, if desired, the whole sum to the credit of the employee will be returned. Should full payment not be made at the end of two years, the company reserves the right to cancel the arrangement by returning the money paid with the accrued interest. Should an employee leave the employ of the company for any cause, then the share must be paid in full, or the employee take the amount standing to his or her credit with accrued interest. The object in offering these liberal terms is to have every employee associated in the ownership of the business. This applies to all, from the chairman of its Board of Directors to the youngest man or woman on its pay rolls.

AIR NAVIGATION.

We give the following extract as we find it in one of our exchanges: "The science of aeronautics is attracting more attention at the present time than ever before in its history. Several new and ingenious air-ships have been tested before the public in the past few months, including the remarkable machine of Count Zeppelin, and there is reason for the belief that the world is to be favored at an early date with a successful solution of the problem of aerial navigation. An event significant of the large possibilities in that direction was the recent balloon voyage of Count Henry de la Vaul, the French aeronaut, from Paris, France, to Kiew, Russia, a distance of 1,304 miles. This is the longest balloon voyage ever made. The airship in which this remarkable flight was made is called the Centaure, and was built according to plans invented by the count himself. The count was accompanied on the journey by one friend only, Count Castillion de Saint Victor. The balloon was well stocked with provisions, and equipped with all needful apparatus for aerial observations. Not a single unpleasant incident marred the trip, which goes on record as the most notable voyage through the air ever accomplished."

RATIO OF FARM PROGRESS.

A great deal has been said about the marvelous growth of American cities in the last decade. It has been assumed that the cities have grown at the expense of the country, and that the twelfth census would show that there had been a decline in the ratio of farm progress. Mr. Le Grand Powers, chief statistician in charge of the Agricultural Department of the census, presents figures to show that the farm development between 1880 and 1900 was nearly as great as the marvelous progress between 1870 and 1880. In 1850 the census reported in the United States 1,440,073 farms. In 1860 the number had increased to 2,044,077; in 1870 to 2,659,985; in 1880 to 4,008,907; in 1890 to 1,564,611, and in 1900 the lowest estimate is 5,700,000 farms. In other words, we have 1,135,000 more farms in 1900 than we had in 1890. This is the largest increase in any decade except that between 1870 and 1880, when the increase was 1,348,922. Mr. Powers reports that in the whole country the increased wealth of large farms in the last decade equals the farm wealth of the nation "reported as the outcome of farmers' toil and economies from the settlement of Jamestown to the middle of the nineteenth century."—Inter-Ocean (Chicago).

FROM OUR MISSION ROOMS.

THE CONQUEST OF THE WORLD FOR CHRIST.

Drs. Gilby C. Kelly, of Nashville, Tenn., and John H. McLean, of Dallas, Texas, have given their impressions of the Ecumenical Missionary Conference, held last year in New York City. Shall there not be a similar consummation — co-operative, spiritual, and potential—growing out of our own great gathering of Christian workers, which will take place next month in New Orleans?

"I was impressed that in the Ecumenical Missionary Conference the passing century itself, the most glorious era of recorded time, came to an inspiring, spiritual consummation."—Gilby C. Kelly.

"The greatest occasion of the kind ever known in magnitude, scope, and potentialities, and out of it should come wiser methods, greater comity and co-operation, and quickened effort in the conquest of the world for Christ."—John H. McLean.

A GREAT TREAT IN STORE.

More than a thousand Southern Methodists are making their arrangements to spend the last six days of April in attendance upon the General Missionary Conference to be held in New Orleans.

Rev. Lewis Powell, in an admirable written description of the city and its points of attraction, says: "The delegates and visitors have a great treat in store. Besides the object that calls the hundreds of true men and elect women together—'the heathen for Christ, and Christ for the heathen'—the city itself is well worth being seen."

An eminent writer says: "There is nothing in the entire range of American history that can compare with the wild beauty and romance and the grace and daring of the history of New Orleans. Here we find a foreign coloring, a distinct flavor of Paris, Versailles, Venice, Madrid and Rome all united in the production of that earnest, composite and peculiarly loyal American city—the New Orleans of to-day."

While grateful for the faithful work which has accomplished this result, yet it must be admitted that it could be better, and, therefore, it should be improved. Surely a subscription of $31,867.78 should have yielded by this date far more than $11,667.05. The amount paid should reach at least $20,000 within the next thirty days, and every dollar subscribed should be in the treasury in advance of the next sessions of our Annual Conferences.

The work of our schools, of paramount importance, is being hindered by a failure to collect the subscriptions. This condition will be greatly relieved if every pastor and helper will at once make an earnest and persistent effort to collect the subscriptions in his charge. Will not every pastor and helper heed this imperative call? I trust so.

CHURCH LOYALTY.

In this day of enterprise and onward movement how often is the progress of our Zion hindered by the failure of many of our people to "attend upon the ordinances and to support the institutions of our church."

If the citizens of any government were as unfaithful and disloyal as some church members are to their vows made before God and his people, that government could not survive. It would pass into oblivion. Should a man be less faithful to his duties as a member of "the visible church of Christ" than to his duties as a citizen of his own country? Surely not! Yet, is it not true that we sometimes hear church members say, "I am not going to hear Bro. So-and-So preach; neither will I pay him one cent," when they know that their pastor came to them by the appointment of the powers that be, the powers 'ordained of God"? And do they not also know that their preacher has left all to follow Christ, and that those people whom he serves are expected to support him? Suppose a soldier should say to his commander, "I am not going to even listen to your orders, let alone obey them," or if a citizen should say to his tax collector, "I am not going to pay the taxes on my land," would not that soldier be court-martialed, or that citizen's land be sold for taxes?

Were it not for the tender mercies of God and the long-suffering of Christ, we do not know what would become of some people. To refuse to support your preacher is mean, but to withhold from him that co-operation that is justly due him is meaner still. How many fervent pastors throughout our Methodism have failed in a measure, not because of a lack of diligence on their own part, but because the people did not do their duty? Nehemiah would never have repaired the breach in the walls of Jerusalem had the people not "had a mind to work."

"But," some say, "our preacher is not a good pastor." Are all men gifted alike? We have never seen two men of like talent; nor is that all: we never expect to as long as we live, should we live to be as old as Methuselah.

Then some people show their disloyalty by not taking their church paper, claiming that the price is too high. Who appointed you a judge? Is not God the judge? Who fixed the price of our ADVOCATE? Not the editor. No! The price was fixed by the Publishing Committee, composed of representatives from your own Conference; men who are supposed to act wisely and prayerfully. As long as the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is our official organ, so long will we pray for its success and labor to increase its subscription list. WYMELLER.

KEEPING THE HISTORY STRAIGHT.

It is very important to keep all matters of history straight. For this reason we propose to see that a full record of the negotiations for federation between the two branches of Episcopal Methodism is spread upon the Journal of our next General Conference. This record will show: First, that the negotiations originated with our church; secondly, that the Joint Commission appointed by the two General Conferences unanimously agreed upon a definite programme; thirdly, that our General Conference, without a dissenting voice, ratified the action of the Joint Commission, and provided for carrying it into effect; fourthly, that the General Conference of the M. E. Church, after passing the whole matter by till near the close of its session, then engaged in a warm debate over it, and finally insisted upon trivial amendments which have no significance, but which, nevertheless, must at least delay the accomplishment of any practical results for six years, if not defeat the whole scheme; fifthly, that since our church took the initiative in the first instance, it now rests with the M. E. Church to say whether anything further is to be done in the premises; sixthly, that in the face of the recommendation of the Joint Commission for an Ecumenical Methodist hymn book, the M. E. Church is now going forward to prepare a revised hymn book for its own use without inviting the co-operation of the other Methodist bodies; and, seventhly, that in arranging the residence of its Bishops in the foreign fields, the M. E. Church, instead of placing Bishop D. H. Moore in Peking, which is the center of all its missionary activity in China, has put him in Shanghai, which we have occupied for fifty years, and in which it has no work, and never has had any. These are simple facts. We make no comment upon them of any kind.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The Christian Index, of the Colored M. E. Church, says that the year 1900 was the best all-round year that church has ever experienced.

Dr. Mark Trafton, famous in the church fifty years ago, especially as a leader in the anti-slavery crusade, died in Boston the first week in March at the advanced age of ninety years. He was a fearless advocate of what he believed to be right.

Rev. J. L. Jordan, in a note accompanying the report of his charge, says: "I wish every Methodist family would read the ADVOCATE. It would be much easier for us to preach to them, and would help us greatly in every way. I intend to do what I can for the paper."

Brother Knickerbocker, at Searcy, was sick for some weeks at the first of the year, but is now well and diligently looking after the interest of his work. He has been cordially received, and is now planning to enlarge the church. This is greatly needed.—Arkansas Methodist.

Statistics of the growth of the Presbyterian Churches in Philadelphia during the nineteenth century show a growth from four churches, with 455 communicants, in 1800, to 33 churches, with 7,699 communicants, in 1840, and 102 churches, with 41,855 communicants, in 1900.

Rev. Moses B. Hill, a member of the China Conference of the M. E. Church, South, died, March 7, in Brownsville, Tenn. He was forty-two years old, and had been in bad health for several years, having had to give up his missionary work in China on that account, since which time he has been in Brownsville, unable to pursue his calling.

"The Western North Carolina Conference since its organization, ten years ago, shows a net gain in church membership of 15,670. One hundred and forty per cent. of this gain was in stations, and twelve per cent. on circuits, notwithstanding the Conference has only sixty stations and one hundred and eighteen circuits." So says an exchange.

The following paragraph, clipped from an exchange, if true, is very significant: "It is now beyond doubt that the Duke of Norfolk's address at Rome, hoping for the restoration of the Pope's temporal sovereignty, was a calculated deliverance. Roman Catholics boldly justify the address in the daily press, declaring it to represent the general feeling of the English Catholics."

For the first time in its history England has a king who possesses a prohibitionist estate. The Prince of Wales, on his Sandringham estate, prohibited public-houses, and now that he is king, the English people have this singular and noteworthy fact—that the crown is doing for the people what some day the people will be allowed to do for themselves.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

We are glad to learn that Rev. H. O. White, of Arcadia, who had a severe attack of grippe accompanied by acute rheumatism, is improving. He suffered greatly, and at one time was thought to be near the spirit land, but the best of nursing by loved ones, and the care of his physician, under the blessing of Providence, succeeded in arresting the disease. The people of his charge were very kind, doing all they could for his comfort. His pulpit has been supplied during his sickness by Rev. C. H. Carson, of Ruston, and Rev. Manley, a local preacher.

Dr. Whisner, secretary of our Church Extension Board, says: "The effort thus far made for the relief of our wrecked churches in Galveston and vicinity has resulted in securing in cash something over $12,000. The loss in church property reported was at least $100,000, and it has all the time been assumed by those who were best acquainted with the facts that it would require at least $25,000 to be raised by the church at large to so far restore these churches as to enable our people to go on with the work the church must do in that locality. It will be necessary, therefore, that our collection for these suffering brethren shall be increased by not less than $10,000. We, therefore, would make the most urgent appeal possible to our people everywhere to continue to help until at least this amount is raised."

What Our Editors Say.

MEN OF AGE IN THE MINISTRY.

There is an apparent demand for young and vigorous men in the ministry. Congregations are calling for them, and our older and more experienced men are being forced into the background. We certainly have nothing to say against young men: on the contrary, we have everything to say in their favor. They are the hope of our pulpits and of the church. The more of them that come into the ministry the better it is for us: provided they are consecrated and well equipped for service. But we want to say a special word for our older men whose knowledge is mature and whose experiences are rich in the things of God. There is no good reason why an up-to-date aged man should be required to take a back seat in the ministry. It is not the case in the other callings and pursuits of life. In the legal profession men of age and experience are to the forefront, and so it is in business circles. In these departments of life the men who have grown gray in service are the men who are shaping enterprise and establishing fortunes. Upon them is resting the burden of duty and responsibility. It ought to be doubly true in the ministry. No preacher ought to grow old and effete in spirit and efficiency until his bodily powers fail him. From fifty to sixty-five years of age he ought to do the best work of his life. If he has kept pace with the progress of thought and mental development, he is at this period, more than any other, better qualified to preach the gospel, to minister to the people pastorally, and otherwise help them in spiritual and moral improvement. He has the knowledge, the experience, the sympathy and the tact to make himself eminently useful. The church can not afford to relegate its old men just at the time when their service is most helpful to the work of the Master. We need their counsels, their store houses of knowledge, their tenderness, and their vital spiritual experiences. They have been tried for all of these years, and we know how to place them on all matters touching the welfare of Zion. Therefore, our Conferences ought to make larger use of these veterans who have borne the heat and burden of the day instead of wasting them in retirement.—Texas Christian Advocate.

IN THE SPIRIT.

The greatest gifts of God to the world are the Only Begotten Son and the Holy Spirit. We should honor the Son even as we honor the Father, and we should honor the Spirit even as we honor the Son. Our one trust is the sole mercy of God, the sole merit of the Lord Jesus, the sole power of the Holy Ghost. He is in us an abiding presence. He strengthens us with might in the inner man. We should pray in the Spirit. We should preach the Word in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. Lifeless is the morality which is not inspired and energized by the Holy Ghost. Vain is the worship, however excellent in form, which is not in the Spirit. The sacrifice may be laid on the altar, but the fire must descend from heaven. The pure gospel may be preached, and eloquent men may appeal to the dry bones to live, but the breath of the Spirit is the quickening power. Methodism is a wise and grand system, but ineffectual without spiritual life and power—without the Holy Ghost.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

OUR SCHOOLS.

We do not agree with some of our Bishops and other church leaders who declare that we have too many schools or colleges. Take a strong university as one of the necessities of our church. . . But centralization in our only university should not mean the killing of small colleges. Where one person goes to the university a hundred will go to the little school. Were the little colleges not in existence nine tenths of the hundred would not go elsewhere. This writer would never have seen the inside of a college as a student, if there had not been a small one of the Presbyterian Church at his own door. . . . Centralization is all right, provided it does not call for the abandonment of the little colleges. We do not believe that we have too many of them. We need more. The success of Vanderbilt University and Emory and Henry College are not dependent upon the breaking up of the less pretentious institutions. Pupils must learn their letters before they can learn Latin. They must get a taste for books before they will go to higher fields of learning. Then some education for many will pay better than no education at all.—Midland Methodist.

CO-OPERATION THE DIVINE PLAN.

It may sound old fashioned to say that the chief end of preaching is the salvation of souls, but, rightly understood, this is as true to-day as ever it was. The preaching that saves manhood from being frittered away in the frivolities of life, from being consumed by the canker of avarice, from being blasted by the mildew of idleness, from being wrecked on the breakers of passion, from being crippled by the creeping paralysis of doubt, is the kind of preaching the world will always need. However orthodox and faithful such preaching, it of itself is not sufficient to make the church of God what it should be. Preaching, per se, can accomplish but little, but when it is accompanied by prayer and faith and holy living, upon the part of the church, then it, or more properly speaking, the church, becomes a mighty power. Divine co-operation is the divine plan, working together and working with God. A live preacher makes a live church by inspiring prayer and faith, and provoking, or stimulating, unto good works those who wait upon his ministry.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

REACHING THE ROOTS.

The "higher critics" made Homer a mythic person and "Troy the divine" a city of romance. The pick of the Russian and rich antiquarian dug down in the land of Scamonder and Simois to the walls and burned city of Priam. It was history. The Bible assigned power and achievements to the Hittites. The "critics" made merry over the small tribe of Bedouins. Now the inscriptions in Asia Minor tell of this great and warlike people. Recent excavations on the site of Nippur between the Tygris and Euphrates, discloses a civilization and history that tally with the sacred narrative. A library, with thousands of documents recorded on burned clay tablets, have been unearthed. Nothing contradicting the reports of the ancient history of the Hebrews, but fitting into and explaining it. Who knows, as we remarked last year, but sacred pages will be gathered from the dry sands of Egypt? And they have been. A fragment of Matthew, the oldest, has been found.—Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate.

"HELPING THE ADVOCATE."

BY ONE OF THE LAITY.

Bro Editor: I was much interested in an article in your issue of Feb. 14 under the suggestive title of "Let Us Help the Advocate" from Rev. W. W. Williams of Grenada, Miss.

Now, I am nobody but an humble layman in the great and glorious M. E. Church, South, but I love the Advocate, and find great satisfaction and profit in reading it. Whenever it arrives on its weekly visits to my home, all other reading matter is laid aside, and the Advocate given first place until read through. I have an inherent love for Methodist preachers and Methodist institutions, and always feel a deep and personal interest in reading what they have to say, and in keeping informed as to their movements, and to do so I must read the Advocate. Therefore, I desire, in a measure, to take issue with Bro. Williams. Bro. Williams' complaint that the Advocate fails to interest the average lay member, particularly the younger membership, is one we have often heard, and, to my mind, it is surprising that this complaint should be so general with our itinerant preachers.

We believe that the cause of the failure of our Advocates to reach and take hold of the great mass of our membership are very simple and easy to find, if searched for in the proper way.

Now, we disagree with our brother that the Advocate is at fault. Neither do we believe that the people should be censured for their seeming indifference towards the Advocate. In fact, we fail to see any difficulty about the matter at all, nor any real grounds for discouragement. We wish to make this suggestion: Does not the trouble (if real) consist in a wrong understanding of the office and function of the Advocate and an unjustified assumption to say what the duties of the church membership are towards it? It should not be forgotten that the Advocate is a distinctively religious paper, and the official mouthpiece, or organ, of the particular denomination which it represents. Such is its distinct mission in the world, and it most successfully fulfils this mission.

Now, as opposed to the foregoing, it should be borne in mind that the great mass of our population are not distinctly and personally interested in religious work and religious publications. We do not wish to be understood as saying that they are indifferent, for that would not be wholly true, but what we mean is, that they are chiefly concerned with the problems of secular existence, and with a great many Methodists as well as others, religious papers and periodicals are not only unpopular, but distasteful. Therefore, to insistently push something on them that they do not feel a personal interest in, seems to the writer just a little inconsiderate.

Bro. Williams seems to fully realize that there is something seriously at fault somewhere, and, as a step towards finding a remedy, he would make the Advocate more secular. Such a step could not but fail to solve the difficulty, if it really did exist. Now, let us see. We consider the Christian Advocate not only the official organ of our church, but the itinerant preacher's journal or magazine. What the agricultural journal is to the farmer, the scientific journal to the scientist, the educational journal to the teacher, the Advocate is to the Methodist preacher and church official. This is an age of specialization. Whoever is devoting life, means, talent and influence towards the accomplishment of a definite object or cause, is a specialist. Therefore, in this sense the Methodist preacher is a specialist in the true meaning, because he is pledged to devote his life, his energy and all his powers in the pursuit of a definite object—the preaching of the gospel of Christ, and the spreading of scriptural knowledge and holiness among the people; and, as a specialist in the Lord's vineyard, he needs a journal or magazine run specially in his interest. This place the Advocate fills, and it seems that improvement is well-nigh impossible except to increase in size as the character and scope of the matter presented is pure and good. Such a publication could not reasonably be expected to have more than a passing or incidental interest to the average church member, and he should not be censured if he fails to manifest a substantial interest in it.

Of course, it is right. It is the proper thing, that our preachers should endeavor to extend the circulation of the Advocate among their people, but I do not agree with the idea that they should try to convince their membership that it is their express duty to read the Advocate. We believe that every lay member in our church, male or female, that feels a deep, personal interest in the church, and the moral, intellectual and spiritual advancement of our people, who are not readers of the Advocate, would readily become such without much persuasion. And, further, we dare say that the large majority of the best element of our lay constituency—those who are in the front ranks, and upon whom the burden and heat of the day fall; those spiritually-minded, wide-awake, intelligent, Bible-reading, prayer-meeting, Sunday-school Methodists—are readers of the Advocate. And do they read it because they feel it to be their plain duty? Yes, partly so. They love their church and the cause of Christ; they are identified with her movements, and feel a personal interest in her welfare. And to them, as well as to our preachers, the Advocate is almost indispensable. Now, the future prosperity and usefulness of the Advocate is dependent largely upon the proportion with which this element of loyal, consecrated, intelligent Methodists increases.

Our brother mentions the Youth's Companion. Good. Let our young people, and old ones, too, read it, if they want to. We should be glad that such a wholesome publication is so widely circulated, and it is absurd to think that the Christian Advocate, or any other publication, could supplant it. A bear story would be an incongruity in the columns of the Advocate. It is certainly a laudable idea to have college students and other young people of consecrated talent and religious culture to write stories for the Advocate, but that would not accomplish the object our brother so much desires, except to a limited extent. Such young people are by no means numerous, and while the example of the few in this direction might induce others to enter such a field, the problem would not by any means be solved.

The Advocate is all right; it fills its divinely-appointed sphere, and that is indeed the highest ideal, the holiest ambition to which any institution, any publication or any person can aspire.

In conclusion, is it a good policy to endeavor to persuade Methodist people, indiscriminately, and perhaps against their will, that it is their duty to contribute two dollars to a year's subscription to the Advocate, and then to have it come into their homes, and not even the wrapper removed, or to be used to punish naughty children? I think not. But is it not plain that in such homes the Advocate is not only unappreciated, but positively discredited?

The Advocate will ever be read and supported by loyal Methodists, and its circulation should be extended.
